Bradgate park is very extenſive, moſt part walled round; and well ſtocked with deer; and is famous for very fine fern[6]; which is burnt, and alſo regularly mowed for the horſes to lie on in the ſtables during the winter. That the proſpects in it are unuſually romantic, from the intermixture of venerable trees and rugged rocks, may be readily conceived from an inſpection of Plate XXV. p. 135.

[1] An old man, now living at Anſtey, aged 81, remembers the principal part of Bradgate quite entire. He had been in all the rooms; and ſays there was a door out of the dining-room into the chapel. The ſame perſon recollects being told by his father (who was only 30 years older than himſelf) that he was carried, when a child, to the end of Anſtey town, to ſee king William paſs acroſs the fields in his way to Bradgate.

[5] A pictureſque deſcription of Enville may be ſeen in the ſecond volume of Mr. Shaw's Hiſtory of Staffordſhire, p. 270:

"There, Stamford, rural ſwain, delights to roam
While round the tumbling torrents daſh their foam;
Or in ſome ſhed, of fancy's work, reclines,
Sooth'd with the murmurs of his waving pines.
Great Peer! ennobled by the gen'rous mind,
Who, like the mighty fathers of mankind,
Scorns not the culture of his native plains,
Nor ſpurns the labours of induſtrious ſwains." T. MAURICE.

Governor

The kindneſs of an excellent friend, who at my requeſt has attentively viſited Bradgate Park ſince the preceding page was printed, enables me to ſay, that "Traces of the Tiltyard are ſtill viſible. The courts of this once magnificent manſion," he adds, "are now occupied by rabbits, and ſhaded with cheſnut-trees and mulberries.

"The approach to Bradgate from Thurcaſton is ſtrikingly pictureſque; and the view from the keeper's lodge is truly enchanting. On the left appears a large grove of venerable trees. On the right ſtand the ruins of Bradgate, ſurmounted by rugged rocks and aged oaks; the foreſt hills, with the tower called Old John, forming the back-ground of the proſpect. The valley, through which the trout-ſtream runs, extends in front with clumps to ſhade the deer; and terminates in a narrow winding glen fringed with "Pan's own umbrage dark and deep."

"Not proud Olympus yields a nobler ſight,
Tho' Gods aſſembled grace his tow'ring height,
Than what more humble mountains offer here,
Where in their bleſſings all thoſe Gods appear."

BRADGATE CHAPEL,

which ſtands near the ruin, was a few years ſince approaching faſt to dilapidation; but has been new-floored with tile by the preſent noble owner, by whom precautions have been taken for its future preſervation. It has ceaſed to be uſed for divine worſhip ſince the period of the demolition of the manſion; but contains a handſome monument of Henry lord Grey of Groby[1] and his lady; and a vault in which the two firſt earls of Stamford and their ladies were interred.

On the monument of lord Grey (Plate XCI.) is a figure in armour, with a high collar, robed, broad beard, hair cut ſhort all round, reſting on his helmet; with creſt, a unicorn currant, having a full ſun behind it proper; his left arm ſtraight; his right arm was raiſed, but gone; at his feet a pair of gauntlets. Beſide him lies his wife, robed, and hands joined; round her neck a long ruff; a ſmall cuff at her wriſts; a ſhort jacket under her gown, which and petticoat has a tuck a little below the waiſt; round her waiſt a ſmall girdle or belt; from which hangs a long chain with taſſels at the bottom. Over the man, and under the arch, is a blank black marble tablet. Over the front of the arch is an entablature, ſupported by two compoſed Ionic columns on pedeſtals. On the front of the tomb theſe arms:

At the top: Quarterly; 1. Grey. 2. Haſtings. 3. Valence. 4. Ferrers of Groby. 5. Aſtley. 6. Argent, a feſs and canton Gules; Widvile. 7. Bonvile. 8. Harrington. Creſt of Grey, as before, p. 675.

Supporters: Two unicorns, Ermine, armed, creſted, and hoofed Or. Motto, A MA PUISSANCE.

On the entablature:

1. Grey ſingle.
2. Grey; impaling Gules, a ſaltire Argent, between twelve croſs croſslets Or; Windſor.
3. Windſor ſingle.

In a vault in the middle of the chapel (made to contain only three coffins) are,

1. Lady Diana Grey, daughter of Thomas earl of Stamford, by his firſt wife Elizabeth.

2. Thomas earl of Stamford, for whom there is the following epitaph on a blue ſlate on the floor:

"D. G.
THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE THOMAS GREY,
BARON OF GROOBY, VISCOUNT WOODVIL, AND EARL OF STAMFORD, LATE LORD-LIEUTENANT OF DEVONSHIRE AND SOMERSETSHIRE, DIED JANUARY
THE 31ST, 1719, AGED 67 YEARS.
THE RIGHT HONOURABLE
MARY, COUNTESS DOWAGER OF STAMFORD, DIED
NOV. 10, 1722,
AGED 51 YEARS."

3. Mary, counteſs dowager of Stamford; who died Nov. 10, 1722, aged 51.

[1] So created July 21, 1603. The attainder of lady Jane Grey's father, the duke of Suffolk, had taken away all titles from the family. But king James, on his ſucceſſion, beſtowed a new barony by patent on ſir Henry Grey of Pirgo, whoſe mother was ſiſter to Anthony Brown viſcount Montague (ſee p. 674.)—He died July 26, 1614; and was ſucceeded by his ſecond ſon Henry.—"It ſeems this partial reſtoration of honour very little ſatisfied the fallen family of Grey. This nobleman (who in 1628 was created earl of Stamford) became, with his ſon, one of the leading and moſt laſting ſupporters of the Parliament. Sir Edward Walker, in his 'Obſervations on the Inconveniences that have attended the frequent Promotions to Titles of Honour and Dignity ſince King James came to the Crown of England,' ſays, "For example; had king James either abſolutely reſtored ſir Henry Grey, whom he created lord Grey of Groby, to be marquis of Dorſet, or left him a knight as he found him, 'tis poſſible his grandſon and great grandchild, might not have been able or conſiderable to have acted as they have done." Brydges, Memoirs of Engliſh Peers during the Reign of King James, pp. 82. 84.

[1] On a marble tablet, in the South aile of Enville church, is this inſcription:
"Underneath lieth the body of lady Dorothy Grey, eldeſt daughter of the third earl of Stamford,
a ſhining example of Chriſtian benevolence;
of which the ſchool ſhe built in this pariſh,
and endowed in her life-time, for the benefit of poor girls, is a laſting memorial.
She died July 19, 1781, aged LXXV."

BREDON,

a conſiderable village on the verge of the county, abutting upon Derbyſhire, is ſituated at the foot of an exceedingly high and ſteep lime-ſtone rock, yielding every way a moſt delightful proſpect. On the ſummit of this hill the church ſtands eminently elevated, commanding an immenſe circle of country, and is itſelf a very noble feature to all the parts around it. This very picturеſque ſituation is ſhewn, in two different points of view, in Plate XXVII. p. 127.

The pariſh is extenſive; including the hamlets of Staunton Harold and Worthington, Bredon Brand, Wilſton, part of Cole Orton moor, a third part of Launt, and part of the village of Diſeworth. It is 5 miles North-eaſt by Weſt diſtant from Aſhby de la Zouch; 17 from Leiceſter; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Akeley.

Bredon was one of the 34 villages which the Conqueror gave to Robert de Ferrariis in this county; and was originally conſidered as a member of Tonge; which, with its appendages of Bredon, Anderchyrch, and Winalſton, conſiſting of twenty-one ploughlands and a half, was valued in the reign of the Confeſſor at four ſhillings, and at that time occupied eleven ploughs. At the general ſurvey it was held by Henry de Fercires, and was worth ſix pounds. Three ploughs then were employed in the demeſne; and twenty-ſeven villans, with two ſocmen and eight bordars, had thirteen ploughs within the lordſhip. There were ſix acres of meadow; and a wood one mile and a half long, and a mile broad [1].

In the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about 1240, Bredon is ſaid to contain two ploughlands, Staunton half a ploughland, and Worthington three ploughlands; and in the ſame record, among the knights fees of earl Ferrers, are noticed one third of a knight's fee held by Robert de Tateſhall, in Bredon, Tunge, Wyveleſton, and Andrechirch; one knight's fee in Worthington, held by Roeſia de Verdon, and her under-tenant Simon de Ropel; and a fourth part of a knight's fee in Staunton Harold and Worthington, held by the ſame Roeſia, and under her by Philip de Staunton [2].

In the reign of king Henry III. William de Ferrers earl of Derby granted this manor to Ralph Baſſet of Drayton; who, taking part with Simon Montfort earl of Leiceſter at the battle of Eveſham, 1265, was there taken, and his lands ſeized by the king, who granted this manor to Robert de Tateſhall [3]; who, in 1272, held the manor of Bredon of lord Edmund, the king's brother, by the ſervice of the third part of one knight's fee; the ſaid manor was worth £38. 16*s.* 8½*d.*; and Robert de Tateſhall, ſon of the ſaid Robert, was his next heir, and of full age [4].

"Eſt concordia talis, quod Radus Baſſet, filius Radi Baſſet, recognovit duas partes manerii de Bredon datas eſſe per ipſum Robti de Tateſhall, & illas remiſit [5]."

In the Itinerary of 1280, "Bredon, cum Tong, Wylſton (viz. cum parcellâ quæ eſt in comitatu Leiceſtriæ), Andyrchirch, Staunton Harold, Worthington, & Newbold, reſpondent pro villâ integrâ."

In 1306, the manor of Bredon came by partition to Joan de Tateſhall, one of the coheirs of Robert laſt lord Tateſhall [6]; which Joan married ſir Robert de Driby, and had iſſue by him ſir Robert de Driby, knt. whoſe daughter and heir Alice (of whom ſee in Abkettleby), being firſt married to ſir Anketill Malory, knt. and after to Ralph lord Baſſet of Sapcote, brought this manor to her firſt huſband; by whom ſhe had iſſue ſir Thomas Malory, knt.

In 1321, Emma relict of William Bredon (father of William Bredon then living), was by the gift of her ſaid huſband jointured in one meſſuage, 40 acres of land, two acres of meadow, three acres of wood, and 10*s.* rent, with the appurtenances, in Bredon [7].

In 1323, it was found that it would be no damage to the king, or any other, if the king granted leave to Joan, wife of Robert de Driby, to give the manor of Bredon, with the appurtenances, to Gilbert de Bernak, parſon of Tateſhall, and to John Gillingham, parſon of Ulfreton, to hold to them and their heirs; that the aforeſaid manor was held of the king, as of the honour of Tutbury (by reaſon of the forfeiture of Thomas late earl of Lancaſter) by the ſervice of two knights fees, and ſuit of court at the honour of Tutbury; and that there remained to the ſaid Joan, over and above the donation aforeſaid, the manors of Holwell and Kettleby, held of Ralph Baſſet of Weldon by knight's ſervice [8].

In 1329, it was found that Joan de Driby, long before her death, gave her manors of Bredon and Somerby, co. Leiceſter, held of Henry earl of Lancaſter by knight's ſervice, and her manors of Holwell and Kettleby, held of Ralph Baſſet of Weldon by knight's ſervice, with all their appurtenances, in the two counties of Leiceſter and Derby, to John de Driby her ſon and heir, to hold to him and his heirs, of the capital lords of the fees there, by the ſervices thence due and accuſtomed, for ever; and that John de Driby, ſon of the aforeſaid Joan, was her next heir [9].

In 1330, king Edward III. granted to the prior and convent of St. Oſwald of Noſtell an extenſion of a former fair at Bredon for five days; namely, on the feaſt-day of All Saints, and two days before and after [10].

In the Eccleſiaſtical Rolls of 1344, Bredon, Worthington, Tong, Staunton, and Andrechirch, are all deſcribed as one rectory.

In 1346, John de Orreby (on the aid then granted or knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon), was aſſeſſed 13*s.* 4*d.* for a third part of one night's fee in Bredon, parcel of the honour of Tutbury [11]. At the ſame period, the abbot of Gerendon held lands here in free alms of the honour of Tutbury.

In 1377, Robert de Orreby, deſcended from the Tateſhalls, held lands in Bredon [12].

In 1378, Ralph Baſſet of Sapcote held the manor of Bredon, with its members and other appurtenances, in Somerby, Dalby Parva, Holwell, and Abkettleby, as of the right of Alice his wife, of the lord duke of Lancaſter, as of the honour of Tutbury; but by what ſervices was then unknown [13].

In 1380, the prior and convent of St. Oſwald of Noſtell obtained a grant of free warren at Bredon [14].

In 1412, Alice, wife of Ralph Baſſet, knt. was ſeiſed, for term of life, of the manor of Bredon, with its members and other appurtenances, in Somerby, Dalby Parva, Holwell, and Abkettleby, with reverſion thereof to Roger Flower, and others; and Alice, daughter of Thomas Malory, knt. deceaſed, ſon of the aforeſaid Alice, wife of the afore-named Ralph, was her couſin and next heir [15].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Bredon, Andarchyrch, Tungge, and Wenalſton, were rated at £2. 6*s.* 8*d.*; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum, but an abatement was then made of 5*s.*; Worthington and Newbold at £2. 8*s.* and 5*s.* abated; Staunton Harold at 15*s.* and 1*s.* abated.

In 1415, Alice, wife of Ralph Baſſet, knt. died ſeiſed of the manor of Bredon, with its members and appurtenances, in Somerby, Dalby Parva, Holwell, &c.[1]

In 1481, it was found that Elizabeth Malory died ſeiſed of the manor of Bredon; that ſhe married Robert Evers, who was then ſeiſed of the ſaid manor, held of the king[2].

In 1485, —— Malory died ſeiſed of the manor of Bredon, held of the king in capite by knight's ſervice[3].

In 1500, Ralph Conſtable died ſeiſed, in right of Anne his wife, of one third part of the manors of Bredon, Wilſton, Tonge, Melton Mowbray, Kettleby, and Holwell, with the appurtenances; and one third of 20 meſſuages, 1000 acres of arable land, 200 acres of meadow, 40 acres of paſture, 100 acres of wood, and an annual rent of 9*s.* payable by equal portions, on the feaſts of St. Martin and Pentecoſt, in Bredon, Wilſton, Tonge, Melton Mowbray, Kettleby, Holwell, Sauſeby, Dalby, and Tutbury, held of the king as of the honour of Tutbury, parcel of the duchy of Lancaſter; alſo of a third part of the ſaid lands and tenements in Sauceby and Dalby, held of the king as of the honour of Leiceſter, parcel of the ſaid duchy[4].

At an inquiſition taken at Leiceſter, April 28, 1522, before John Digby, William Skevington, knights, and Ralph Swillington, it appeared that Henry Thwaites, knt. died July 5, 1521, ſeiſed of one third part of the manor of Bredon, and of certain lands and tenements there, held of the king, as of his honour of Tutbury and Tickhill, by the payment of 2*s.* 2*d.* a year; and that they were worth £15. a year; and alſo of certain lands at Holwell, Abkettleby, Melton, Somerby, and Dalby; and that Katharine, then aged 11 years, and Frances, then aged one year and upwards, were his daughters and next heirs[5].

The manor and divers premiſſes, parcel of the priory of Bredon, were granted by king Edward VI. in 1548, under the yearly fee-farm rent of £4. 9*s.* to ſir Thomas Heneage and William lord Willoughby[6].

In 1564, there were 32 families in Bredon; in Staunton a chapel and 9 families; in Tonge 24; in Wilſton 10; in Worthington and Newbold 34.

Thomas Gray, eſq. of Caſtle Donington Park, died Feb. 2, 1564-5, ſeiſed of divers lands and tenements at Bredon; leaving Thomas his ſon and heir, aged 13 on the 17th of the preceding June[7].

By deed, bearing date 1566, John lord Darcy, of Aſton, co. York, of the one part; and Henry Babington, of Dethick, co. Derby, eſq. of the other part; the ſaid Henry covenanted to levy a fine to the ſaid lord, before Midſummer following, of his manors of Bredon and Tonge, inter plurima alia, co. Leiceſter[8].

March 17, 1587-8, the great ſir Walter Raleigh[9] had a grant, from queen Elizabeth, of divers lands in the counties of Leiceſter, Derby, Nottingham, and Lincoln[10]. What the property in Leiceſterſhire was is not now exactly known; but, as this grant included the manor of Dethick, and ſeveral other eſtates in Derbyſhire, which lands belonged to Anthony Babington, of Dethick, eſq. and were forfeited to the crown by his attainder for high-treaſon, and as ſeveral of his anceſtors appear to have died ſeiſed of lands in Bredon and Tonge; it is not improbable but that theſe lands might be alſo forfeited to the crown, and granted to ſir Walter Raleigh at the ſame time the effects in Derbyſhire were[11]. He had a grant, the next year, for 30 years, of the office of Vintag'[12]; and in 1599 a grant of ſeveral lands in Dorſetſhire and Somerſetſhire[13].

In 1630, the freeholders in this pariſh were, Edward Bodell, of Bredon; Thomas Cotton, of Newbold; John Sherwood and John Swindall, of Tonge; —— Boothby, gent. Giles Jaques, Francis Doleman, and William Dexter, of Worthington.

In 1641, Mr. Burton ſays, "All this town, except five freeholds, belongs now to the earl of Stamford[14]."

In 1655, there was collected in Bredon, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of 16*s.* 5*d.*; total, £170. 19*s.* 2*d.*

In an act paſſed in 1759, for incloſing the open and common fields of Bredon, Tonge, and Wilſon, in the manor of Bredon, containing (incluſive of the waſte and commonable land in the ſame fields) about 1336 acres, it is ſtated that there were within the ſaid manor certain commons, called The Brand, or Bredon Brand[15], containing by eſtimation 330 acres, and Tonge Paſture and Tonge Gorſe, containing together about 49 acres. In this act Harry earl of Stamford is deſcribed as lord of the ſaid manor, patron of the vicarage, and proprietor of the principal part of the lands and grounds in the ſaid fields; ſir Thomas Palmer, bart. and William Wrighte, Edmund Morris, and James Winſtanley, eſquires, as truſtees for (amongſt other things) the augmentation of ſmall vicarages, the impropriators of all the great tithes of and in Bredon aforeſaid; Ann Cowliſhaw, widow, impropriatrix of all the great tithes of and in Tonge, and a proprietor of land there; the Rev. Henry Swindell, clerk, impropriator of all the great tithes of and in Wilſon, and a proprietor of land there; the Rev. Joſeph Hooley vicar of Bredon, and entitled to all the ſmall tithes and vicarial dues within the townſhips of Bredon, Tonge, and Wilſon, and the reſpective fields and liberties thereof, and alſo within the ſaid ſeveral commons; ſir Nathanael Curzon, bart. Nathanael Curzon, gentleman, Henry Biddle, and others, proprietors of the reſidue of the lands and grounds in the open fields of Bredon aforeſaid; the ſaid ſir Nathaniel Curzon, Ann Swindell, widow, John Clarkſon, and others, the proprietors of the reſidue of the lands and grounds in the open fields of Tonge; and William Muggleſtone, John Ironmonger, Job Nicklinſon, and others, proprietors of the reſidue of the lands and grounds in the open fields of Wilſon; the ſaid earl, as lord of the manor of Bredon, owner of the ſoil of the ſaid ſeveral commons; and, together with the ſaid ſir Nathanael Curzon, Nathanael Curzon, gent. Henry Biddle, and others, entitled to the herbage thereof. To the ſeveral impropriators reſpectively an eighth part is directed to be allotted; certain incloſures on Bredon Brand to be reſerved to the earl of Stamford; and Bredon Hill not to be incloſed. The rent or yearly ſum of 2*s*. (clear of all parochial levies and aſſeſſments, and all other deductions, ſave the land-tax) for every ſtatute acre of all the then titheable incloſures in the liberty of Bredon (except ſuch as ſhould be allotted as aforeſaid), to be ſettled by the commiſſioners by an average in value of the whole of ſuch incloſures (except as before excepted) is directed to be thereout paid to the impropriators of the great tithes of Bredon, their heirs and aſſigns for ever, by the ſeveral proprietors thereof. In lieu of the great tithes of ſuch of the then titheable incloſures in Tonge and Wilſon reſpectively, the proprietors whereof had not any land in thoſe reſpective fields, there ſhall be thereout reſpectively paid to the ſaid impropriator and impropriatrix reſpectively, their heirs and aſſigns for ever, the like yearly ſum of 2*s*. clear of all parochial levies and aſſeſſments, and all other deductions (ſave the land-tax) for every ſtatute acre. And that, in lieu of all the ſmall tithes and vicarial dues of every ſort ariſing within the ſaid ſeveral townſhips of Bredon, Tonge, and Wilſon, out of the lands or grounds there, as well incloſed as unincloſed, and the ſaid part of the ſaid common called The Brand, or Bredon Brand, intended to be incloſed, and the whole of the ſaid other commons called Tonge Paſture and Tonge Gorſe, and out of the houſes, gardens, orchards, homeſteads, or home cloſes of the ſaid proprietors, in Bredon, Tonge, and Wilſon, or from the owners or proprietors thereof in reſpect of the ſame (ſave and except only mortuaries, ſurplice-fees, and fees, if any, for burying in the church of Bredon aforeſaid) the ſum of £30. clear of all parochial levies and aſſeſſments, and all other deductions (ſave the land-tax), ſhall be iſſuing and going out of all the lands and grounds intended to be incloſed, and ſuch part of the then preſent incloſures as were to undergo ſuch allotment as aforeſaid (except ſuch reſpective allotments as aforeſaid to be made to the ſaid impropriators reſpectively, and alſo to the ſaid impropriatrix, in lieu of their ſaid ſeveral impropriations); and ſhall, by the ſeveral and reſpective proprietors thereof, be thereout payable and paid to the ſaid Joſeph Hooley and his ſucceſſors, vicars of the ſaid vicarage for the time being, for ever, in the proportions to be appointed by the commiſſioners. And the ſeveral yearly ſums of 2*s*. for every ſtatute acre, provided for the ſaid impropriators, and alſo for the ſaid impropriatrix, and the yearly ſum of £30. for the vicar, to be paid in the church porch of Bredon by four quarterly payments in every year.

[15] An exception is made in the act, of "ſuch part of the ſaid common as, upon a ſtrait line drawn over the ſame from a croſs or mark at the Southward end of Carver's lane, to a large elm tree near the upper corner of a croft in the holding of Henry Vale, and from the ſaid tree to a mark near the ſaid Vale's houſe, and thence to a mark at the Northward end of Froggat's lane, will lie Weſtward of ſuch line;" and alſo of "ſuch part of the ſaid common as, upon a ſtrait line drawn over the ſaid common, from the mark at the Northward end of Froggat's lane, to the Weſtward corner of an incloſure in the liberty of Oſgathorpe belonging to Mr. Henſhaw, will be Eaſtward of ſuch line.

The earl of Stamford is the preſent lord of the manor, and principal owner of the lordſhip. To his lordſhip particularly belongs the valuable and remarkable lime-ſtone rock, of which three beautiful views have been given in Plate XX. p. 127.

"Whoever will inſpect with the eye of a philoſopher the lime-mountain at Bredon, on the edge of Leiceſterſhire, will not heſitate a moment in pronouncing that it has been forcibly elevated by ſome power beneath it; for it is of a conical form, with the apex cut off; and the ſtrata, which compoſe the central parts of it, and which are found nearly horizontal in the plain, are raiſed almoſt perpendicularly, and placed upon their edges, while thoſe on each ſide decline like the ſurface of the hill; ſo that this mountain may well be repreſented by a bur made by forcing a bodkin through ſeveral parallel ſheets of paper[1]."

"Bredon Hill is a ſemiglobular eminence, formed of an irregular maſs of limeſtone. The lime produced from this rock is of a ſingular quality. Five or ſix quarters an acre are found to be a beneficial dreſſing for the lands of this neighbourhood; but it is an opinion univerſally admitted, that if much more than that quantity be laid on, it is poiſon to the land; it having been obſerved, that where by accident a greater quantity has been ſcattered, no graſs will grow; and that where load heaps have ſtood, no corn will thrive; but, inſtead of it, a bed of couch and thiſtles appear: a circumſtance which has ſet many men againſt it, under an idea that it breeds theſe two peſts of cultivated land. Some ſmall proportion of this rock has every appearance of vitrification except the colour, which is that of ruſty iron. The quarries that are now in uſe are thirty or forty feet high; each a cliff of heterogeneous rock with ſcarcely any covering. Having no regular ſeams, the rock is obliged to be blaſted; but the fragments fall eaſily under the hammer, breaking into irregular pieces, like glaſs. There are ſix or ſeven kilns at work; each built at the foot of its reſpective quarry, and againſt the baſe of the hill; with only one ſide open to draw at, but with two, and ſome three, eyes or draught holes, made wide and commodious, with an arch turned over each to ſupport the top of the kiln; and within this archway, above the eye, are air-holes to feed the fire (a new idea); theſe air-holes, ſix or eight in number, reaching half way up the kiln. From the top of the archway projects a penthouſe, or roof of faggots, forming a ſhed, under which a quantity of drawn lime may lie out of the way of rain. The burners make their layers unuſually thick; the ſtone half a yard, and the coal five or ſix inches; coaling very highly (the pits only two or three miles from the kiln); throwing in coals as large as the head: their only idea ſeeming to be that of keeping up a ſtrong fire in the kiln. They are all drawing kilns, being never let out during the burning ſeaſon, unleſs to repair: drawing, it is ſaid, four or five loads from each kiln daily! The price of this lime, at the kiln, is 18*d*. a quarter; with a perquiſite, to the burners of meat and drink.

The coſt of five loads ſtands thus:

Thirty quarters at 18*d*. —	£.2	5	0
Lime men 2*s*. a load, and 2*s*. over[2]	0	12	0

or 11*s*. 5*d*. a load of ſix quarters; namely, about a chaldron and a half, common lime meaſure. The coſt of fetching, ſixteen or ſeventeen miles, may be eſtimated at a guinea a load; with turnpikes, near three ſhillings each load; together with watering, turning, and ſpreading: the whole amounting to about 40*s*. an acre for the dreſſing[3]."

Mr. Monk, in his Agricultural Report, ſays, "Bredon lime is not in high eſtimation for the farmers' uſe; they complain it is too ſtrong, and they are afraid to uſe it on account of its great ſtrength. Ticknel lime they approve, becauſe they may lay on a large quantity without fear of injuring the land. The Bredon is ſix-pence per quarter, and the Ticknel ſomewhat dearer. Builders prefer the Bredon for their uſe. I recommended them to try the Bredon lime in compoſt with earth, &c. as I ſhould think by that method it would be found to anſwer, and prove a much better and cheaper manure than the Ticknel."

Benefactions to the poor of Bredon, &c. 1731.

Imprimis, ſir Henry Shirley, of Staunton Harold, knight and baronet, gave £8.; the intereſt to be given to the poor on Good Friday.

2. Mrs. Sarah Ward, of London, gave £4. a year, to Bredon only, to put out poor children apprentices.

3. Mr. John Sherard, of Wilſon, gave 6*s*. 8*d*. per annum out of his lands at Wilſon.

4. Mrs. Elizabeth Muggleſton, relict of Mr. William Muggleſton, late of Tonge, gave £5. for ever; the intereſt to be given in bread on Eaſter Sunday.

5. William Hicklin, of Bredon Lodge, gave £20.; the intereſt to be given in bread on St. Thomas's day[4].

[2] This latter particular is not quite accurately ſtated by Mr. Marſhall; as will appear from the following communication, with which I have been favoured by the preſent renter of the lime-works: "When our men promiſe the lime, they have 1*s*. for booking each perſon for the lime for the year; and 1*s*. 3*d*. for each waggon-load for perquiſite for the lime-burners, no other demand being made. When the waggon comes for lime, it is cuſtomary for the ſervants to bring victuals and drink for themſelves, and they ſometimes give the lime-burners ſome with them, when they come to load very early in the morning, which is not a time men generally come to work. But, when the men burnt lime by the quarter, it was more a practice to bribe than it is at preſent; as we now pay them by the day, and charge the waggons ourſelves. For thoſe not ſatisfied with the charge, we have iron-ſtrikes, by which we meaſure them. JOHN HACKETT; Bredon, April 30, 1801."

The CHURCH (ſee Plate XCII.)

dedicated to St. Mary and St. Hardulph, is the church which formed part of Bredon priory; and, having been purchaſed from king Henry VIII. by Francis Shirley, eſq. as a burial-place for himſelf and his ſucceſſors, was granted to the pariſhioners of Bredon (on their petition), with full liberty to make uſe of the ſame, for and inſtead of their pariſh church thereto adjoining, being then almoſt ruinated[1]. It conſiſts of an embattled tower, in which are four bells; a nave, chancel, and two ailes, all embattled; and a South porch, over which is a room uſed for a public ſchool.

Several ſmall fragments of antient ſculpture, ſuppoſed to have been taken from the older church, are let into the walls of the porch (ſome of which are ſhewn in Plate XCIII. fig. a. b. c. d. e. f.); and ſome are placed on the inſide of the church.

To the Weſt end of the church was formerly appendant ſome large building belonging to the priory, of which a large and ſtout part of the ſide wall yet remains; and againſt the ſteeple are parts of a buttreſs, and the ſpringing of an arch.

The nave is ſeparated from the ailes by four arches, over which are four clereſtory windows; and at the Eaſt end of the North aile is a chapel ſcreened off, preſerved as a burial place for the Shirley family.

At the altar is a modern Venetian window; on each ſide of which is a long lancet window.

The following arms, fig. 1—4, are noticed by Mr. Burton in this church:

1. Quarterly, antient France and England.

2. Gules, a croſs between four lions rampant. Biſhoprick of Durham.

3. Gules, three lions paſſant guardant in pale Or, a label of France. Lancaſter.

4. Quarterly, 1. and 4. Checky, Or and Sable, a feſs Gules, Winter; 2. and 3. Sable, a chevron between three tuns Argent.

Round the antient ſtone font (fig. 5.) are ſeveral ſhields, 6—9.

Gules, a chevron Argent, between three garbs Or. Earl of Cheſter.

Paly of ſix, Argent and Sable, a feſs of the laſt, Waſhingham.

Motto, "STAT SUA CUIQUE DIES."

Over the Weſt end of the ſame pew:

Shirley impaling Berkeley; with the creſt of each.

In the Matriculus of 1220, Bredon is deſcribed to be under the patronage of the prior of St. Oſwald, of the gift of Robert de Ferrariis earl of Nottingham; and having the chapels of Staunton and Worthington, which were to be regularly ſerved by the mother church. All the profits ariſing from the church were to be expended at Bredon, for the ſuſtentation of five monks there reſident, and of the miniſters of the church, and for the purpoſes of hoſpitality. John was at that time the vicar[2]. The appropriation of the vicarage, with ſeveral other particulars, will be ſeen hereafter under the account of the priory[3].

In 1334, the procurations for Bredon, Worthington, Tong, and Staunton, were, 7*s.* 6¾ d.; the vicarage was taxed at 50 marks, and half a mark was paid for Peter-pence.

In 1534-5, the value of the vicarage was 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* and 2*s.* were paid in Pentecoſtalibus; and in 1564, it is called "Vicaria, quæ habet tantum curatum."

In 1578, lands to the annual amount of £10. 9*s.* 4*d.* parcel of the rectory of Bredon, were leaſed from the crown, for 21 years, to John Maye and Brian Jee; in 1582, another parcel of the rectory, with tithes in Tonge, were leaſed for 25 years, on a rent of 60*s.* to John Babington; and in 1595 the tithes of Bredon, parcel alſo of the rectory, were leaſed, for 21 years, at a rent of 77*s.* to John Hibbarde[4].

In 1650, Bredon was returned as an impropriation; the rectory worth £30.; the vicarage worth £8.; and the vicar "ſufficient." The chapel of Staunton was at the ſame time returned as an impropriation; the rectory worth £20.; the vicarage worth £3; and the vicar the ſame as at Bredon. The chapel of Worthington was alſo returned as an impropriation; the rectory worth £60.; the curacy worth £13. 13*s.* 4*d.*; and the curate "ſufficient."

In the king's books Bredon is entered as a diſcharged living, worth, "in pecuniâ numeratâ, cum manſ' & aliis proficuis, communibus annis, £6. 1*s.* 8*d.*

In a brief, dated Jan. 12, 1784, it is ſtated that the pariſh church of Bredon, a large antient ſtructure, was in a very ruinous ſtate and condition; in particular, the walls and roofs of the North and South ailes, and the tower of the church, in ſuch a ſtate as to require their being ſpeedily taken down, and the other parts of the church in general much out of repair; and that, although the inhabitants had, within the laſt ten years, laid out and expended above £340. in repairing thereof, yet the ſame were in ſuch danger of falling, that the inhabitants were afraid of aſſembling therein for the worſhip of Almighty God; and, in conſequence thereof, divine ſervice had not been performed therein for ſeveral months paſt; and that, by the oath of Joſeph Wyatt, an able and experienced architect, who had carefully viewed the church, the charge of taking down and rebuilding the ſame would amount to £3340. excluſive of the old materials. The truſtees and receivers appointed by the brief were, the earl of Stamford, lord Scarſdale; ſir Robert Burdett, ſir Henry Harpur, baronets; Nathanael Curzon, Steventon Dickinſon Cowliſhaw, John Ward, Richard Cheſtlin, John Broadhurſt, eſquires; John Avarne, William Mugleſton, John Hall, Thomas Stevenſon, William Hilditch, gentlemen; and the miniſter and churchwardens for the time being of the ſaid pariſh.

The church was not rebuilt, but has been ſubſtantially repaired.

In Bacon's Liber Regis, 1786, the vicarage is ſtated to be worth £70. a year.

The annual profits of Bredon were thus ſtated by the vicar, Mr. Foſter, in anſwer to queries from the biſhop of Lincoln, 1791.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

Mr. Burton mentions the tomb of "Henry Winter[5], who died April 10, 1449; on which were graven the arms ſhewn in fig. 4. This is now demoliſhed.

Some flat ſtones of alabaſter were ſawed up, on new-pewing and new-paving the church, in ſuch a way as to be now totally illegible; but half the figures of a man and woman remain, fig. 10, tricked on a part of one of theſe ſlabs, in the South aile.

"In the North chapel," adds Mr. Burton, "are ſome fair monuments of the family of Shirley of Staunton Harold in this pariſh."

The door of this chapel being carefully ſecured from improper intruſion, the monuments engraved in Plate XCIII. are ſtill in good preſervation.

The inſcriptions and arms on them are as follow:

1. On a tablet of black-marble[6], on the South ſide, over a fair alabaſter tomb, gilt, and in colours, fig. 11:

Memoriæ Sacrum,
Johanni Shirlie, armigero, de Staunton Harrauld; qui, poſtpoſitâ propriâ ſalute, ut ſuo munere erga patriam fungeretur, in ipſo ætatis flore, patre ſuperſtite, cum ex ſuæ monumentum mœrens mœſtuſque die Septembris 14.

On a large ſlab under the above tablet is the figure of a man in armour recumbent; his head reclining on helmet and creſt; a book between his uplifted hands; a double chain round his neck; on the left ſide a ſword; on the right his dagger and gauntlet; at his feet a lion.

Round the ledge of the tomb the ſubſtance of the former inſcription is thus repeated:

At the Weſt end, the quarterings and impalements in the centre are repeated; and round it is,

"SOLVS DEVS . . . . . VICTOR DESIRE . . . ."

2. On the North ſide of the chapel, round the ledge of an altar-tomb[2], over which are two recumbent figures, fig. 12:

In memorie of Fraunciſ Shirley, Eſquier, the very patrene of hoſpitalitie, and of the famouſe woman Dorothie his wieff, who bothe died in the yere of our Lord God m°ccccc°lxxi°, theire executours made this monument.

Mr. Shirley, whoſe head reclines on his helmet and creſt, is repreſented with whiſkers and a long beard; his hair cut ſhort; a book in his hand; a double chain round his neck; a ſword on his left ſide; a dagger richly ornamented on his right; and one ring on the firſt finger of each hand. At his feet is a lion.

The lady's head is on an ornamented cuſhion; her hair, cut ſhort, under a cloſe laced cap; ſhe is in a long cloſe dreſs, the body tied with ſmall cords; a ruff and triple chain round her neck; a book in her hand; 8 rings, two on the firſt, and two on the third fingers of each hand; wide ſleeves, and under them ſmaller ſleeves down to the wriſt, the bottom ſlit. From the girdle round her waiſt hangs a chain, at the end of which is an ornament reſembling a picture-caſe (which probably had a relick); and on the chain is faſtened a croſs.

In front are the figures of three ſons and four daughters:

The eldeſt ſon, who is in armour, holds a ſhield of arms, containing, Shirley; impaling Quarterly, 1. and 4. three wolves paſſant, Lovet; 2. and 3. Ermine, a border Sable bezanté, Turvile; 2. Argent, a croſs Gules, voided of the field, between four croſs croſſlets of the ſecond, Billinge; 3. Gules, three lions paſſant in pale Argent, Giffard; 4. Prayers; 5. Per pale, Or and Azure, a chevron Ermine, Fewell; 6. Argent, a chief dancetté Azure, Craynesford; 7. Drayton; fig. 13.

The ſecond ſon is repreſented in a ſhrowd.

The third ſon, who is alſo in armour, has a ſhield: Quarterly of ſeven; 1. Shirley; 2. Baſſet of Drayton; 3. Waldechief; 4. Braoſe; 5. Eccleſhall; 6. Staunton; 7. . . . . . . a feſs between three martlets . . . . .: Impaling the ſame ſeven coats as his eldeſt brother; fig. 14.

Three of the daughters have the ſame ornamented chain with their mother.

The firſt of them has on a ſhield, Quarterly, 1. and 4. Checque . . . . . .; 2. and 3. Argent, a croſs moline Azure, Le Clerk: Impaling Shirley; fig. 15.

The ſecond has neither ſhield nor chain.

The third, Quarterly, 1. and 4. Sable, an eagle diſplayed Or, Cotton; 2. and 3. Or, a ſaltire and a chief Gules, Bruce: Impaling Shirley; fig. 16.

The fourth, Quarterly, 1. and 4. Argent, a feſs between three cinquefoils Gules, Powtrell; 2. and 3. Shirley: Impaling Shirley; fig. 17.

At the Weſt end of the tomb, on two round ſhields:

1. The arms of Gifford (fig. 18.); Azure, three ſtirrups and ſtraps Or; round which is inſcribed:

Dorothie Shirley, daughter to Sir John Gifford, Knight.

Quarterly, 1. Shirley; 2. Baſſet of Drayton; 3. Milo; 4. Braylesford; 5. Eccleſhall; 6. Staunton; 7. . . . . . a feſs between three martlets . . . .; and round it, "DE SIRE Y FO;" fig. 19.

Of this gentleman, ſir Thomas Shirley's Hiſtory of the family, written about the middle of the ſeventeenth century, thus ſpeaks: "He purchaſed the priory church of Bredon of king Henry VIII. (after the ſuppreſſion) for a burial-place for himſelf and all his ſucceſſors for ever. He died 14 Eliz. and lieth buried in that church. His body, being taken up above 20 years after his deceaſe, for the removing his monument into a more convenient place, was found as firm and entire as it had been new buried, and as well endured to be wound in a new winding-ſheet, having only a black little bruiſe on the top of the great toe, cauſed by the preſſure of his firſt coffin; but even this place not corrupted. And his corpſe was again interred in the ſame church, under a fair alabaſter tomb, where were repreſented the figures of himſelf and his wife[3]."

3. On the ſame ſide of the chapel, on another very fair and coſtly monument[4] of alabaſter and tomb, gilt and coloured, under double arches, are the figures, artificially cut, of a man and woman, each in a praying poſture; fig. 20.

The gentleman is in ſhort armour; an old ruſted ſword and gauntlet lay looſe beſide him, and his helmet hangs over the tomb. Behind him are two kneeling ſons.

His lady is in flowing robes; her hair in three rows of ſmall curls, under a cap ornamented with a ribband of pearls; a ruff and chain round her neck; ſmall ruffles at her wriſts; ſleeves large and puckered; a mantle hanging down her back. Behind her a kneeling daughter, and an infant in a cradle.

At the Eaſt end of this tomb is another infant in a cradle, as in fig. 20. b. and ANNO DOMINI 1598; and at each end is an oval blank ſhield.

The tomb is thus inſcribed, in two compartments:

I. FRANCISCÆ EX ILLUSTRI ET AVITA DOMINORUM DE BERKLEY FAMILIA

"Alſo Mrs. Frances Hooley, his wife, who died July 30, 1788, aged 71 years."

Sir Thomas Cave, in his notes on Bredon, ſays, "I ſhould ſuppoſe Mr. TOBIAS RUSTAT [2] to have been a native of the county of Leiceſter at leaſt, if not a native of this town; though, by his epitaph in Jeſus college, Cambridge, his benevolence is ſaid to have been very general and unconfined. However, I am willing to adopt him as a Leiceſterſhire man, as his good qualities make him an exemplary ornament to whatever ſpot it was that gave him life. He was under houſe-keeper of the royal palace of Hampton Court, and yeoman of the robes to his majeſty king Charles the Second, for many years, both in England and in foreign parts. His father was Robert Ruſtat, rector of Skeffington [3], and grand-father to William Ruſtat, vicar of Barrow [4], both in this county, and maſter of St. Magdalen's hoſpital in Bath. His mother was ſiſter to Robert Snowden biſhop of Carliſle. His brother, Theophilus Ruſtat [5], was miniſter of Dalby on the Woulds, and had alſo a benefice in Lincolnſhire. Another brother, Robert, was a major in the royal army. His portrait is in Jeſus college, Cambridge, where he founded eight ſcholarſhips at £50. a year each; and the following ſepulchral memorial of him is in the chapel of that college:

"Tobias Ruſtat, yeoman of the robes to king Charles the Second; whom he ſerved with all duty and faithfulneſs in his adverſity as well as proſperity.
The greateſt part of the eſtate he gathered,
by God's bleſſing, the king's favour, and his induſtry,
he diſpoſed in his life-time in works of charity;
and found, the more he beſtowed upon churches, hoſpitals, univerſities, and colleges, and upon poor widows and orphans of orthodox miniſters,
the more he had at the year's end.
Neither was he unmindful of his kindred and relations, in making them proviſions out of what remained.
He died a bachelor,
the 18th day of March,
in the year of our Lord 1693,
aged 87 years [6]."

BREDON PRIORY,

Robert de Ferrariis earl of Nottingham, who ſtyled himſelf "Robertus comes junior de Ferrariis," and likewiſe "comes junior de Nottingham," gave the church of St. Mary and St. Hardulph at Bredon, about the year 1144, to the priory of St. Oſwald at Noſtell, co. York; and, conſequently, a cell of Auguſtine canons ſubordinate to that monaſtery was ſoon ſettled here, conſiſting of a prior and five religious[1]. He gave alſo to that priory four virgates of land, with all his own and his men's tithe in Tonge, Andreſkirk, and Wiweleſton, the chapels of Worthington and Staunton, with the lands and tithes belonging; and the tithes of Newbolt and Diſeworth, as much as belonged to him; one virgate in an aſſart on the Weſt ſide of the hill (i. e. of Bredon), and the market of Bredon, with 20*s.* annual rent of the mill of Crakemers, and 20*s.* in Tonge, and 20*s.* in Weſt Leake, and 20*s.* in the ſoke of Stapleford[2], and one herdewike[3] in Hethcote juxta Hertedon in Pecco[4].

William de Ferrariis earl of Derby, the ſon and ſucceſſor of earl Robert, about 1166, confirmed to the prior and convent the grant of his father and of all other their benefactors, excepting only the mill at Stapleford, and the 20*s.* rent of Jordan de Toka; and gave them, in addition, as much paſture as was ſufficient for five cows, for the expreſs purpoſe of rearing their lambs; free from all ſervices, "preter orationes in Domino[5]."

All the grants of Robert earl of Nottingham to the canons of Bredon were confirmed to them by his grandſon Robert de Ferrariis earl of Derby, together with the tithes of ſix carucates in Diſeworth, five yardlands in Andreſkirk, and paſturing in Bredon for ſix ſcore ewes and four rams, cum totâ ſectâ unius anni, and the paſture for nouriſhing their lambs.

William de Ferrariis, earl of Nottingham and Derby, ſon and heir to the laſt-named Robert (whom he ſucceeded about 1173) confirmed to them, "pro ſalute anime ſue, & Sibille ſponſe ſue," all the donations of his anceſtors, particularly the church of Bredon, and chapel of Worthington; the market at Bredon; 40*s.* rent in Saxby, in the ſoke of Stapleford; and one herdewike at Hethcote in the Peak; 20*s.* rent from the mill at Crakemers; 20*s.* from Jordan de Toka in Weſt Leake; 16 acres of land in Diſeworth, 5 more in Andreſkirk; a rent of 5*s.* in Overton; three meſſuages on Bredon hill, and the wood of Brunhage with its aſſarts[6], which the ſaid canons held when he went to Jeruſalem; and alſo all the arable land (culturam) that lay from the foot of the hill to the ſpring or well; the chapel of Staunton; and alſo Scalacre; free from all ſuits and ſervices, "preter orationes in Domino[7]."

Hugo de Ferrariis (ſon of Walcheline de Ferrariis, of Okeham, co. Rutland[8]), confirmed, about 1190, all former grants and donations to this priory which earl Robert de Ferrariis his great uncle, &c. had made, with the addition of the mill of Stapleford on the Wreke; and (in lieu of 40*s.* a year which earl Robert had given them) four virgates of land in Saxeby, cum villanis, and 12*d.* rent out of another virgate there, in perpetual alms, and diſcharged of all ſervices, &c.[9]

William de Ferrariis, ſon of William de Ferrariis earl of Derby, about 1240, confirmed to the priory of Bredon the four virgates of land at Saxby, with their villans and appurtenances; and moreover releaſed them from all ſuits of court and ſecular ſervices[10]; and in 1261, they had a confirmation grant of protection from Robert de Ferrariis the laſt earl of Derby of that name (who was deprived of his eſtate and dignity by king Henry III. but not of his life). To this deed is affixed the beautiful ſeal engraved as a tail-piece in p. 694; ſhewing the earl in complete armour, brandiſhing his ſword, the horſe being decorated with his coat, Vaire; and on the reverſe a large ſhield, with the ſame armour[11].

William Pantulfe was afterward lord of Bredon, and confirmed to the canons there all the lands they held in the time of Robert de Ferrariis.

Iſolda, the daughter and heir of William Pantulfe, was married to the ſecond Robert de Tateſhall, with whom he had the patronage of this priory.

In Andreſkirk the prior and convent had ſeveral other lands granted them by the third Robert de Tateſhall, then lord of Bredon, Iſolda Pantulfe his mother, and others; and divers lands in Worthington by Roger de Colſton, and William the ſon of Simon Pakeman.

Richard de Staunton, the ſon of Harald de Lecha, with the approbation and conſent of his tenants in Staunton, gave to the canons of the church of St. Hardulph in Bredon, in 1202, all his land called Scalacre, lying in width between the hedge of Staunton mound and Andreſkirk, and in length between Brunhage wood and the road dividing the field between Worthington and Staunton, except one rood reſerved for a way to his own mound. The condition of which grant was, that the ſaid monks ſhould find a chaplain to reſide at Staunton for ever, and who ſhould officiate there throughout the year, except on St. Hardulph's day, when his tenants and villans ſhould reſort to the mother church as of old time. That the chapel of Staunton ſhould have baptiſm and marriage (of its own people), and purgation[12], and confeſſion, and communion of the Lord's body, with all other eccleſiaſtical rites, ſepulture excepted, which ſhould remain to the church of Bredon; and the men of Staunton ſhould continue to pay the tithes, oblations, panem benedictum, &c. and all other church dues, to Bredon, except the Paſchal wax, which ſhould go to the chapel, to the uſe thereof in Eaſter-week; and the grantor and his heirs was to pay all oblations of his houſhold, with the obventions and tithes of corn, linſeed, toll, &c. to the mother church and canons reſiding there, except of hay and pannage. The reſident chaplain was alſo to have a dwelling, called Wetecroft, with a garden, &c.; and if ſuch chaplain ſhould prove diſagreeable, the ſaid canons were to remove him, and ſubſtitute another in his room[13].

About the year 1230 an agreement was made by Gervaſe prior of Bredon, reſpecting certain tithes in the pariſh of Bredon, poſſeſſed by the prioreſs and convent of Langley; and at the ſame period, Roeſia, prioreſs of Langley juxta Bredon, engaged that all the ſervants of that nunnery who bore the ſecular habit ſhould be ſubject, as to ſpiritualities, to the mother church of Bredon[14].

A contention after this aroſe between the nuns of Langley and the canons of Bredon, concerning certain tithes of a carucate of land in Wiveleſton, of which the latter had poſſeſſed themſelves[15]. The abbot of Stonleigh and the priors of Coventry of Kenelworth were delegated by the pope to try and compoſe this difference; who decreed that the ſaid nuns ſhould have all the tithes "in dominio de Tongâ (Tonge)," which William Pantulf, the founder of their houſe, had given to it; and alſo two tofts belonging to their houſe, when they ſhould till and occupy the ſame at their own labour and coſt; and that the monks of Bredon ſhould have the tithes of the carucate of land in diſpute, although the ſaid nuns did occupy the ſame at their own coſt and labour; which agreement was ratified and confirmed, as well by the oath of each contending party, as by the putting their ſeals alſo to the chirograph [1].

This is now deſtroyed by 13 Car. II. c. 12. In this place purgation is to be underſtood, perhaps, of the proof of innocence before ſingle combat, or other alledged charges, when the parties came to take the oath at the church.

In 1253, a valuable relique was entruſted to the care of the prior and convent of Bredon for eight years, by Robert de Alveton, which had formerly belonged to St. Edmund the Confeſſor [2].

About the year 1280, another compoſition was made between Thomas prior of Bredon and Chriſtiana prioreſs of Langley, at Pontefract, before the commiſſaries of the abbot of Alba Landa, dean of York, and the prior of Pontefract, concerning tenths, tithes, mortuaries, oblations, &c. [3]

In 1296, Alan the ſon of Richard de Staunton confirmed to this priory certain lands in Staunton.

Thomas Curzon, of Diſeworth, gave them half a virgate in Diſeworth, and confirmed to them a ſmall parcel of land, where they afterwards built a grange [4].

William de Winteworth gave them eleven acres of land in Winteworth [5].

Peter Picot, lord of Radclive upon Sore, gave them two virgates of land in Kingſton, co. Notts, "cum ruſticis & ſequelâ ſuâ;" which Thomas Picot, his ſon, confirmed [6].

In 1303, Robert de Tateſhall, at his death, was found to be the true patron of the priory of Bredon, worth £20. a year to the prior and canons [7].

Concerning the preſentation to this priory of Bredon, we find an agreement entered into between the prior and convent of St. Oſwald de Noſtell, and Walter de Tateſhall, ſon of Robert, patron of the church of Bredon; that the ſaid prior and convent (with the conſent of the patron) ſhould chooſe out two of the canons of this cell at Bredon, and preſent them to the ſaid Walter (or the heirs of him by his wife Iſolda), who ſhould appoint one of them to be prior here; and in caſe no two canons ſhould be found properly qualified at Bredon, in ſuch caſe two others were to be ſent from the convent of Noſtell; of which the ſaid patron was to elect one; who was then to be preſented to the biſhop of the dioceſe as prior of Bredon cell, where he was to remain without moleſtation ſo long as he behaved himſelf according to canon, and in obedience to the [ſuperior] prior of Noſtell. In caſe of his death or diſmiſſal, the ſame method was to be obſerved in the election of a new prior. Farther, the ſaid parties covenanted not to diſturb the goods and poſſeſſions of the ſaid cell; and the prior of Noſtell alſo covenants, "quod non perendinabit ad ipſius cellulæ ſuperfluum gravamen. Teſte, &c."

In 1317, Thomas earl of Lancaſter confirmed to them all their former grants; with the additional privilege of exemption from his court-leets [8].

Henry earl of Lancaſter and Leiceſter, his ſon, alſo gave them paſturing for 40 great cattle and 300 ſheep, with pannage for all their ſwine, in his outwoods at Melborne and Newton, in the county of Derby. He alſo granted them paſture for 240 ſheep at Hethcote in the Peak, in lieu of the paſture for five cows, ſix ſcore ewes and four rams, which they had from William and Robert de Ferrariis earls of Derby.

In 1330, the prior and convent of Noſtell obtained from Edward III. permiſſion to change their annual fair at Bredon from one day to five days; and in 1379 from Richard II. an original grant of free-warren [9].

The priory of Bredon, at the diſſolution, contained but two canons [10]; and was returned by the commiſſioners to be worth, in ſpiritualities and temporalities, according to Dugdale, the clear annual ſum of £24. 10*s*. 4*d*. [11]; Speed ſays, £25. 8*s*. 1*d*.

27—29. Carte diverſorum regum Anglie:

1. Henricus rex Anglie, archiepiſcopis, abbatibus, prioribus, & omnibus comitibus, & baronibus, & vicecomitibus, & fidelibus ſuis totius Anglie, ſalutem. Precipio quod terre Sancti Oſwaldi & canonicorum ſuorum habeant conſuetudines, & quietas ſuas, in omnibus rebus, apud Ebor' & alibi, cum ſokâ & ſakâ, tol & teme, & infangtheof, & omnibus libertatibus ſuis, ubicunque ſint terre, ville, vel homines eorum. Sic precipio per cartam meam; & ſicut eas libertates conceſſi in cartâ illâ. Teſtibus, &c.

2. Henricus rex, &c. Vicecomitibus & miniſtris totius Anglie ſalutem. Precipio quod totum corrodium & omnes res canonicorum de Sancto Oſwaldo una homines ſui poterint affidare per ſuas dominicas. Sint quieti de omni theolonio & conſuetudine & paſſagiis. Hoc nullus homines ſuos vel res ſuas injuſtè diſturbet, ſub pœnâ x l̄i. forisfacture.

3. Henricus rex Anglie, archiepiſcopis, abbatibus, & omnibus comitibus, & baronibus, & vicecomitibus, & fidelibus ſuis totius Anglie, ſalutem. Precipio quod terre Sancti Oſwaldi & canonicorum ſuorum habeant conſuetudines & quietas ſuas, in omnibus rebus, apud Ebor' & alibi, cum ſokâ & ſakâ, & tol & teme, & infangtheof, & omnibus libertatibus ſuis, ubicunque ſint terre, ville, vel homines eorum. Sic precipio per cartam meam; & ſicut eas libertates conceſſi in cartâ illâ. Teſtibus, &c.

4. Carta de libertatibus eccleſie S. Petri Ebor'.

Henricus, Dei gratiâ, rex Anglie, & dux Normannorum, archiepiſcopis & epiſcopis, abbatibus, conſulibus, proceribus, & univerſis fidelibus, Francis & Anglis, totius Anglie, ſalutem. Poſſeſſiones, & dignitates, & libertates, & conſuetudines, quas habuit Ebor' eccleſia, concedo, & regiâ auctoritate preſenti cartâ confirmo, ſicut hic ſubſcripte ſunt, ſub regibus antiquis, & archiepiſcopis, & quod plerique meminiſſe poſſunt. Sub Edwardo rege, & Aldredo archiepiſcopo, fuit eccleſie Sancti Petri conſuetudo egregie libertatis. Si quis enim quemlibet cujuſcunque facinoris, aut flagitii reus convictum infra atrium eccleſie caperet, & retineret, univerſali judicio, ſex hundreth emendebat; ſi verò infra eccleſiam, XII hundreth; infra chorum[2], XVIII hundreth. Penitentia quoque de ſingulis, ſicut de ſacrilegiis injuncta. In hundreth, VIII libre continentur. Quod ſi aliquis, veſano ſpiritu agitatus, diabolico auſu quemquam capere preſumeret in cathedrâ lapideâ juxta altare, quod Anglici vocant Fridſtoll, i. e. Cathedra quietudinis, vel pacis; hujus tam flagitioſi ſacrilegii emendatio ſub nullo judicio erat, ſub nullo pecunie numero claudebatur; ſed, apud Anglos, Boteles, hoc eſt, ſine emendâ vocabatur. He emende nihil ad archiepiſcopum, ſed ad canonicos pertinebant. Canonici Sancti Petri in Hied, i. e. domeſticâ vel intrinſecâ familiâ, vocabatur Terra canonicorum proprie menſe Sancti Petri. Denique, ſi quid in eccleſiâ, vel in cemiterio, vel in domibus canonicorum, vel in terris eorum, aliqui injuſtè agerent, aut ipſi canonici adverſus ſe invicem, aut adverſus alios, vel alii adverſus canonicos, vel adverſus alios, forisfactura nulla archiepiſcopo, ſed tota canonicis judicabatur. Archiepiſcopus autem in rebus canonicorum hoc tantum juris habebat; quod, defuncto canonico, ipſe aliis prelationes & prebendas prebebat: nec tamen ſine conſilio & aſſenſu decani & capituli. Si verò archiepiſcopus adverſus Apoſtolicum vel Regem committeret, ad quod redimendum vel pacificandum pecuniâ opus eſſet, nihil tamen canonici archiepiſcopo, preter ſuam voluntatem, darent; & pecuniam canonicorum & hominum eorum pro commiſſione vel debito archiepiſcopi, nec etiam in manum caperetur. Habebunt canonici, in domibus & in terris ſuis, ſoc & ſac, tol & theam, intol, uttol, & infangtheof, & omnes eaſdem honoris & libertatis conſuetudines, quas ipſe Rex in terris ſuis habebat, & quas archiepiſcopus de Domino Deo & de Rege tenebat; hoc etiam amplius, quod nemo de terrâ canonicorum Sancti Petri wapentakemote, nec tridingmote, nec ſchireſmote ſequebatur; ſed calumpnians, aut calumpniatus, ante hoſtium monaſterii Sancti Petri rectitudinem & recipiebat & faciebat. Hoc autem a religioſis principibus & bonis anteceſſoribus ſit proviſum, ut quatenus canonici placitantes, pulſato ſigno, ad horas canonicas ritè poſſent regredi; Archiepiſcopo verò per ſeneſchallos & prefectos ſuos, & milites ſuos, facilius erat predicta placita ſequi & tenere. Si verò aliquis terram aliquam Sancto Petro daret vel venderet, nemo poſtea ſocam vel ſacam, tol aut theam, in illâ clamabit; ſed eaſdem conſuetudines quos & alia terra Sancti Petri iſta habebat, tantum amoris & reverentie anteceſſores noſtri huic ſancte Principis Apoſtolorum eccleſie deferebant. Quando autem rex congregabat exercitum, unus homo tantùm preparabatur de totâ terrâ canonicorum, cum vexillo Sancti Petri; qui, ſi burgenſes in exercitu irent, dux & ſignifer eos precederet; ſine burgenſibus verò, nec ipſe iret. Hanc etiam conſuetudinem ſive dignitatem habebant canonici Sancti Petri ab anteceſſoribus regibus, nominatim, quos a rege Edwardo, conceſſam & confirmatam, ut nullus de familiâ regis, vel de exercitu ejus, in propriis domibus canonicorum, nec in civitate nec extra, hoſpitetur. Ubicunque fuit duellum Ebor', juramenta fieri debent ſuper textum, vel ſuper reliquias eccleſie Sancti Petri; &, facto duello, victor arma victi ad eccleſiam Sancti Petri offerat, gratias agens Deo & Sancto Petro pro victoriâ. Si canonici vel homines eorum clamorem fecerint in placitis regis, clamor eorum ante omnem cauſam terminetur, quantum poteſt terminari, ſervatâ eccleſie dignitate. Teſtibus; archiepiſcopo Eboracenſi; G. epiſcopo Wynton'; R. Bloet, epiſcopo Lincoln'; R. Flambard, epiſcopo Dunelm'; W. comite de Warennâ; R. Baſſet, G. Ridell, S. filio Sigulfi. Apud Wynton' [1].

6. Carta domini Henrici regis Secundi.

Henricus rex, &c. Vicecomitibus & omnibus miniſtris ſuis totius Anglie, & nominatim Portuum maris, ſalutem. Precipio quod totum corrodium & omnes res canonicorum de quibuſcunque homines ſui poterint affidare quod eorum ſint dominice; & ſint quieti de theolonio & paſſagio & pontagio, & omni conſuetudine; & prohibeo ne quis ſuper hec homines ſuos vel res ſuas injuſtè diſturbet, ſub penâ x li. forisfacture.

7. Carta dom' Ric' regis Anglie, filii dom' Hen' regis II.

Ricardus, Dei gratiâ, &c. ad "eccleſiam de Bredon, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis." Preter hec, quicquid beneficii vel eleemoſine, in terris, eccleſiis, ceteriſque poſſeſſionibus, prefate eccleſie rationabiliter collatum fuerit, nos quoque ſimiliter gratie regalis auctoritate confirmamus. Sit igitur tota predicta eleemoſina quieta & libera, ſicut aliqua eleemoſinarum noſtrarum quietior & liberior eſt. Denique damus & concedimus eccleſie Sancti Oſwaldi regis & martyris de Noſtel, ſicut ante nos rex H. avus patris noſtri eidem eccleſie dedit & conceſſit, ſub eandem libertatem, & eaſdem leges & conſuetudines quales etiam habet ipſa matrix eccleſia beati Petri Eboracenſis; preter ea, que ad magiſterium Chriſtianitatis, & reverentiam archiepiſcopatûs reſpiciunt dignitatis; quam nimirum libertatem & conſuetudinem eidem eccleſie Sancti Oſwaldi, ab omni exactione epiſcopalis conſuetudinis ſolute, venerabilis Thurſtanus archiepiſcopus Eboracenſis ratam & inviolabiliter conceſſit poſſidendum. Nulli autem hominum noſtrorum poſt hec liceat eleemoſinam H. regis patris noſtri, et H. regis avi noſtri, & noſtram, ad hunc locum, ob incolumitatem regni noſtri, & ſalutem anime noſtre, & pro animabus anteceſſorum noſtrorum & ſucceſſorum, & omnium fidelium defunctorum, confirmatam, & omnes poſſeſſiones ejus, perturbare vel minuere; ſed in perpetuâ & regali pace firma & illibata permaneant. Volumus etiam & ſimiliter precipimus quod predicti canonici benè & in pace & quietè & honorificè teneant, cum ſokâ & ſakâ, & tolâ & teme, & infangtheof, & omnibus aliis liberis conſuetudinibus, in nemore & plano, in terris & aquis, pratis & paſcuis, & paſſagiis, & in omnibus locis. ANDRESKIRK, ANDRESCHIRCH, or ANDRESKIRKTON, was formerly a conſiderable village, ſituated on the limits of the two lordſhips of Bredon and Staunton. The name ſhews evidently that it had antiently a church; and indeed ſo lately as 1344 it is entered as having then a chapel[1].

At the time of the general ſurvey this village was included in Tunge; and, with that, was by the Conqueror given to Henry de Ferrariis; whoſe grandſon Robert de Ferrariis junior, earl of Nottingham and Derby, gave the tithes and five yard-lands here to the canons of Bredon; and in the Regiſter of that priory continual mention is made of grants of land and houſes in Andreſchirch.

In 1202, Scalacre, which formed a conſiderable portion of this village, was regularly incloſed by William Butterbuſke, then prior of Bredon, with the conſent of all the free tenants of Worthington and Bredon; Richard de Lecha, ſon of Harold de Staunton, releaſing all his right therein for ever. At the ſame time the hedge was removed from the cloſe next to the wood called Brunhagh, at the foot of Bredon hill, in order to make a more convenient road to the ſaid wood[2].

Robert de Tatteſhall the third, in right of Iſolda Pantulph his mother, held lands here in 1240 of the fee of William de Ferrariis earl of Derby[3].

Johannes Piſtor, de Andreſchurch, occurs as a juror in 1306[4]; and, very ſoon after that year, Walter de Tatteſhall, as lord of Bredon, gave to Thomas de Atum prior of Bredon a piece of land in Scalacre, otherwiſe Dalakre, which lay beneath his garden, called le Parrile, and near the fountain called Caldewell[5].

"The canons of Bredon, having obtained ſeveral lands here by the grants of Robert de Tatteſhall and Iſolda Pantulph; and having purchaſed or procured moſt of the reſt from William de Bredon, Thomas Barry, John Paſſevaunt, and other inferior freeholders, depopulated the village, and converted it into their own demeſne, ſo that for many ages the very name as well as ſite of it is loſt in oblivion[6]."

This lordſhip is now the property of the earl of Stamford. There are incloſures on the limits or boundaries of Bredon and Staunton Harold, which yet retain the name of The Scalacres. The foundations of houſes are alſo occaſionally diſcovered.

NEWBOLD SAUCEY, OR NEWBOLD JUXTA WORTHINGTON, was antiently held by Henry de Ferrariis, as a member of Tonge[7]. That there are four different Newbolds in this county, and that they are indifferently called Newbold and Newbolt, with the derivation of that word, hath been already ſtated[8].

Robert de Ferrariis junior, earl of Nottingham and Derby, gave four bovates of land here to the abbey of Garendon, and the tithes to the priory of Bredon, in which pariſh it lies[9].

In 1240, the heir of Robert de la Sauce, of Overton Sauce, held half a fee in Newbolt, under William Waukelin, who held under William de Ferrariis earl of Derby.

About the year 1280, John Baſſet incloſed a parcel of land in Newbold field, by permiſſion of Edmund earl of Lancaſter; which was then called Baſſet hawe, and afterward became a cloſe in Cole Orton park[10].

In 1346, Roger de Rohaud (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 10*s.* 8*d.* for a quarter and a ſixtieth part of one knight's fee in Worthington and Newbold, parcel of the honour of Tutbury; and the abbot of Garendon 12*d.* for a fortieth part of one knight's fee in thoſe vills, all parcel of the honour of Tutbury[11].

In 1535, the tithes of Newbold, Staunton, Wilſton, and Worthington, were leaſed by the prior of Bredon to Francis Shirley, eſq.[12]; who afterwards obtained a grant of them from queen Elizabeth.

In 1606, ſir Henry Beaumont died ſeiſed of the tithes of Newbold Saucey[13].

In 1616, free warren was granted by king James I. to ſir George Shirley, bart. in Newbolt Saucey and Sileby[14].

Thomas Cotton was a freeholder here in 1635. Three freeholders polled from Newbold Saucey in 1722; but none in 1778.

This lordſhip is now the property of earl Ferrers.

In the "Notitia Parochialis," preſerved in the MS library at Lambeth, N° 678. 590. is the following anſwer in 1709 to the queries which had then lately been circulated through every pariſh in the kingdom.

"Bredon on the Hill is a large pariſh, containing Bredon, Newbold, Wilſon, Tonge, part of Diſeworth, Staunton Harold, and Worthington. At Worthington there is a chapel; and at Staunton Harold there is a fine chapel, built by Robert Shirley, father of the preſent lord Ferrers, who lives there. The chapel of Worthington has of right 20 nobles a year out of the tithes of that village, which is impropriated; and ſir Nathanael Curzon, baronet, of Kedleſton, co. Derby, is the owner of it, who generouſly and voluntarily makes that chapel £12. a year. All the tithes in the pariſh are impropriated, and enjoyed by ſeveral owners. And the tithes of Bredon were about 15 or 16 years ſince bought of the impropriator by Tobias Ruſſed, eſq. of the yearly value of £90. or thereabouts, and by him given £60. of it to ſmall vicarages in Leiceſterſhire, of which you may expect ſome account from them. The other £30. remains to Bredon, paying all dues, duties, and taxes whatſoever; ſo there does not remain to the curate above £10. a year. There have been time immemorial paid about 20 nobles yearly from the crown, till within theſe three or four years; but now the Auditors refuſe to pay it; and it is likely to be loſt, for no grant is to be found, and the late biſhop of Lincoln gave the incumbent no aſſiſtance in it. And this is all that belongs to it but the ſurplice-fees. Bredon was formerly a priory, as is ſaid. It is ſo inconſiderable, that I had no inſtitution or induction, only a licence from the biſhop. I am placed in it by the earl of Stamford. It is in the archdeaconry of Leiceſter."

In 1552, the commiſſioners reported that the church of Bredon contained,

"In primis, one challice.
Itm, one veſtment of blwe ſylke and grene.
Itm, one veſtment of white and red ſylke.
Itm, another of damaeſc.
Itm, another of blwe ſylke inbrawdered wythe ſtares of gold wyre.
Itm, one cope of ſylke inbrawdeted wyth gold and flowers.
Itm, three bells."

STAUNTON HAROLD,

an extenſive lordſhip, two miles and a half from Eaſt to Weſt, two miles from North to South, and containing above 1700 acres of very old incloſures, chiefly high hills and deep brakes, is ſituated in a beautiful valley, not far, as Mr. Burton expreſſes it, from the very meer of Derbyſhire, from which county it is ſeparated by a brook, which runs out of a fine ſheet of water in front of the houſe. It is 19 miles North-weſt of Leiceſter, 3 from Aſhby de la Zouch, and 12 from Derby; bounded on the Eaſt by Bredon, on the North by a brook which ſeparates the counties of Leiceſter and Derby, on the Weſt by Aſhby, and on the South by Worthington; and the turnpike-road from Melborne and Donington to Aſhby paſſes through it. In the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county it is conſidered as a hamlet of Bredon; but is free of tithes, pays its own chaplain, and ſeparately maintains its poor. Its etymology is Stony Town (the lordſhip being chiefly ſand rock, lime-ſtone, or coal); and the addition of Harold from an antient lord of that name, for diſtinction from three other Stauntons in this county.

There is now the Little Park, as it was formerly called, nearly to its former extent. The Great Park is ſtill ſo called, though in farms, one of which is called The Lodge; and the veſtige of the boundary or pale-bank is to be traced at a diſtance. It was diſparked by ſir Henry Shirley in 1623.

This place (which at the general ſurvey was included with Bredon in the general deſcription of Tonge cum membris[1]) was by the Conqueror given to Henry de Ferrariis; who enfeoffed the aforeſaid Harold therein, his deſcendants holding it by the fourth part of a knight's fee; which ſervice was about 1140 given by his grandſon Robert de Ferrariis junior earl of Nottingham and Derby (as part of four knights' fees) to Bertram de Verdon, in frank-marriage with Maud his daughter[2].

Earl Robert de Ferrariis gave alſo to Alan de Lecha the town of Weſt Leak in Nottinghamſhire; and in Staunton as much as belonged to the ſaid earl's fee, and divers other lands in the county of Leiceſter; for which the ſaid Alan gave the earl 60 marks, and a bay horſe. Among the witneſſes to this deed was Hugh ſon of Sewaliis. This Alan was in 1141 a chief witneſs when earl Robert offered his knife on the altar, for confirming the gift of the tithes of the rent of the new borough, which his father and he had increaſed at Tutteſbury[3].

Harold de Lecha gave to the hoſpital of St. John of Jeruſalem one acre in Staunton. He gave alſo to the monks of Garendon, with the conſent of his ſons Alan and Richard, a meadow in Eaſt Leak; and to the church of Calke in Derbyſhire, and the canons there ſerving God (afterwards removed to Repindon) a ploughland and three acres in Leak; and releaſed the ſaid canons from a certain cuſtom, namely, the work of 60 of their homagers of Huntebothe one day in a year, which they had been wont to perform to the ſaid Harold for his paſture of Staunton[4].

Mr. Burton ſays, "The progeny of Harold of this place were after called Staunton; and bare, Vaire, Argent and Sable, a canton Gules[5]." There is nothing found of the anceſtors of this family till the reign of William Rufus; though they were at that time powerful, and poſſeſſors of many fair manors. Their ſurname they aſſumed from the antient town we are now deſcribing; and the firſt of them ſo ſtyled was Richard de Staunton, ſon of the above-named Harold de Lecha, who, with the conſent of his brother Henry, confirmed their father's gift to Gracedieu; and whoſe benefactions to the priory of Bredon, and ſtipulations reſpecting the chapel at Staunton Harold, have been ſtated in p. 693.

In a liſt of knights fees in the reign of king Henry III. among thoſe of William de Ferrariis, is this entry: "Leic'. In Stanton Haraut & Wurthinton quarta pars feodi, quam Philippus de Stanton tenet de Roeſiâ de Verdon, & ipſa de eodem comite[6]."

In 1256, Philip de Staunton held 15 librates of land in this county, and in that year demiſed to Alan la Zouch[7] totam brueram cum boſco Limoſiche, exempto prato falcabili, teſte Galfredo Maleware, &c.; and in 1260, we find the following proceedings in the court of Exchequer: "Aſſiſa venit recognitura ſi Roes de Staunton, amita Nicholai de Charnels, fuit ſeiſita de 40s̄. redd' in Staunton, quem Philippus de Staunton tenet; qui venit, & dicit quod aſſiſa non debet inde fieri, quia dicit quod ipſe tenet tenementum de quo venit predictus redditus; & quod Johannes de Verdon eſt in ſeiſinâ de predicto redditu, eo quod predictus Nicholaus nunquam poſtquam ad legitimam etatem ſuam pervenerit facere voluit eidem Johanni homagium, nec quod ad ipſum pertinuit tanquam capitali domino ſuo. Et Nicholaus non potuit hec dedicere. Ideo predictus Philippus inde ſine die, & Nicholaus nihil capit per breve, ſed ſit in miſericordiâ pro falſo clamat' ſuo[8]."

Elias de Staunton, ſon of Philip, granted divers lands and rents, out of his manor of Staunton, for maintenance of a prieſt, to ſay maſs for him and his predeceſſors, and ſucceſſors for ever; and to find, in the chapel of Staunton, two burning lamps, one to burn before the Holy Croſs, and the other to burn every day at maſs before the altar of St. Nicholas; and the ſaid lamps were to burn for 15 nights, on the five nights of the feaſts of St. Mary our bleſſed Lady, and on thoſe of the Nativity, Epiphany, and Aſcenſion of our Lord, of Eaſter and Whitſunday, on All Saints, St. John Baptiſt, and the apoſtles St. Peter and St. Paul, and upon all double feaſts, at firſt and ſecond veſpers, and on the feaſt days of St. Nicholas, the Invention of the Holy Croſs, St. Margaret Virgin, St. Mary Magdalen, St. Catharine Virgin, and the three nights of the Tenebræ[9]. He gave to Robert Crane, chaplain, and to Hugh his ſon, a toft in Staunton, with 12 acres and a half, one rood, and four cultures of land, at an annual rent of 3s. A plea is preſerved of the prior of Bredon againſt this Elias concerning tithes; with a requeſt that the diſpute might be amicably ſettled; "& petit inſtanter quod dñs Elias diligenter volet iſta conſiderare, & ſalubriter ſuper hiis conſulere, non per modum litis vel contentionis, ſecundum judicium tecti, ſed per modum pacis & amoris, propter ſalutem animæ, & ſecundum judicium Dei[10]."

This Elias was the firſt of his family that was honoured with the order of knighthood[11]. He was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir William Staunton, knt. who in 1315 entered into a bond to Ranulph of Stony Staunton for 40 marks, the marriage-portion of his ſiſter Maud; dated at Stony Staunton 8 Edw. II. and witneſſed by ſir Robert de Stony Staunton, William Sacheverell of Worthington, William of Bredon, Richard Willoughby, Simon Pakeman, and others.

In 1316, Theobald de Verdon died ſeiſed of a quarter of one knight's fee in Staunton Harold, which the heirs of ſir Elias de Staunton held[12].

In 1328, Sir William Staunton gave to John Abel, ſon of Robert Abel, his marriage, which belonged to the ſaid ſir William by reaſon of his nonage, as Robert the father held lands under him by knight's ſervice.

Sir William was living in 1330; in which year,

John de Staunton, his ſon and heir, married Iſabel, daughter of Robert Eccleſhall, eſq.; to whom her grandfather, ſir Robert Eccleſhall, lord of the manor of Eccleſhall in the county of Warwick, renowned for the antiquity of his family, and nobleneſs of his race, gave a portion of £400. on condition of ſir William Staunton's giving to his ſon and to his ſaid wife the manor of Eaſt Leake in Derbyſhire, and ſecuring to them the reverſion of Staunton Harold. In 1336, by a deed under his ſeal of arms, John de Staunton granted a meſſuage and land at Staunton Harold, next to that of Henry Sapp, to Robert le Woodward and Iſabel his wife, on the annual rent of 4*s*.[1] In 1377, he was impleaded[2], together with Thomas de Staunton his brother, and William Tebbe their ſervant, by Thomas Clarke of Overton, for laying violent hands upon him, and wounding him. The aforenamed John, Thomas de Staunton, and William Tebbe, appear by their attorney; and the ſaid John defends the force and injury; and ſaith, he ought not to anſwer to the writ of Thomas Clarke, in reſpect he is his villan, as of his manor of Staunton Harold; and proves that he and all his anceſtors, lords of the manor of Staunton, were ever from all antiquity ſeiſed of the ſaid Thomas Clarke and all his predeceſſors, as of their villans belonging to the ſaid manor; and the ſaid Thomas Staunton and William Tebbe came in aſſiſtance, and at the requeſt, of the ſaid John, to arreſt Thomas Clarke his ſaid villan.

July 13, 1395, John de Staunton, and his two brothers Thomas and Harold, releaſed to ſir Stephen le Scrope, for 410 marks, all their right in the manors of Eccleſhall and Alderwick, in the county of Warwick[3].

In 1346, Thomas Cooke (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 20*s*. for half a knight's fee in Staunton Harold, parcel of the fee of Tutbury[4].

In 1360, Elizabeth de Burg (wife of Theobald de Verdon) died ſeiſed of a quarter of one knight's fee, with the appurtenances, which Robert de Staunton and others held[5].

In 1405, John de Staunton died ſeiſed of the manor of Staunton Harold, with the appurtenances, held of Robert Frаunceis, knt. by the ſervice of a third part of one knight's fee; and Thomas de Staunton was his ſon and heir[6].

Robert de Staunton, ſon and heir of John, went with the Britiſh forces under the earl of Derby, in aid of the duke of Britayne. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert de Latheberrie, eſq. by whom he had a ſon and heir, John de Staunton, who married Joan, daughter and coheir of ſir Robert Meignell; by whom he had one ſon and one daughter.

This John died in 1422 ſeiſed of the manor of Staunton, with the appurtenances, held of Richard Arundel, knt. as of his manor of Braundon, co. Warwick[7].

In 1423, it was found that, after the death of John Staunton, his ſon and heir Thomas being then a minor, the manor of Staunton Harold came into the king's hands; that it was held of ſir Ralph Rochford, knt. as of his manor of Braundon, but by what ſervice was unknown; that the ſon Thomas de Staunton died on St. Valentine's day then laſt paſt; and that Margaret Staunton, aged 17 on the feaſt of St. Stephen, was ſiſter and next heir of the ſaid Thomas[8]; who, Dec. 12, 1423, performing her relief, was admitted into poſſeſſion of his lands[9].

By this lady, heir-general of the Stauntons, as ſhewn in the following pedigree, the manors of Staunton Harold, Eaſt Leake, and other lands, the rich inheritance of that family, were brought in marriage to Ralph Shirley, eſq.

"This family of SHIRLEY is of great antiquity, of an antient Saxon line long before the Conqueſt; of which, if there were no other proof, the very Saxon names uſed therein about the time of the Conqueſt (as Fulcher, Sewall, Eldred, and ſuch like) more fully teſtify the ſame. But by the book of Domeſday it is evident that in thoſe times they were men of great eſtate and livelyhood. And as their quality appeareth to be great, ſo were their matches eminent; as with the heirs of Waldecheiſe, Braoſe, Baſſet, Staunton, Lovet, Devereux, and Ferrars, all families of note. Their employment in martial affairs may appear by indentures of war remaining with the clerk of the Pells; and of no leſs account have they been in times of peace, even to theſe our days, flouriſhing, and enjoying much of their antienteſt poſſeſſions[13]."

Of the opulence and dignity, as well as the antiquity of this noble family, a copious account may be ſeen in three diſtinct MS hiſtories, preſerved in the Britiſh Muſeum:

1. "Shirleorum, Warwicenſis & Darbienſis Familiæ quàm antiquiſſimæ, genuina Proſapia; à quodam Sewallo, viro perilluſtri, proſpero, ac felici ſucceſſu, interruptâ etiamnum ſerie continuata; ac longè aliter quam hactenus unquam delineata: Unde Henricus Shirley, de Eitington, Shirley, Staunton Harald, &c. in Warwici, Darbiæ, & Leiceſtræ ditionibus, inclytus Baronettus, ſuorumque Majorum Genealogiis honoratiſſimus, perenni Maſculorum ſucceſſione rectè derivatur; necnon & Thomas Shirley de Botulphbridge in comitatu Huntingdoniæ, Miles, Philarchiſmus; qui pio erga majores affectu ductus, eorum propagationes,

This is the firſt title given by the Author (who likewiſe compiled the two other MSS. 4023. 4928. as in the account of the latter may be ſeen). There is alſo a ſecond and handſomer title-page, which diſplays the following families noticed in the volume as related to the Shirleys,—Meignell, Waldecheiſe, Baſſets barons of Drayton, Ridell baron of Weldon, Albeneys earls of Arundel and Suſſex, Kevilioc and Meſchines earls of Carlyle, Lupus earl of Cheſter, Algar earl of Mercia and Leiceſter, Braoſe barons of Brember and Gower, Harcourt earls of Harcourt, Gifford earls of Buckingham and of Longuill in Normandy, Staunton, Delawar barons Delawar, and Lovet. Between the above title-pages are two large coats of arms of the Shirleys, the one beautifully painted on vellum, with creſt, collar of SS. &c. &c.; the other a facſimile atteſted by the autographs of Thomas lord Brudenell, ſir Thomas Shirley, knt. Thomas Steedman, ... Pegg, and divers other inhabitants of Shirley, as taken out of the Eaſt window in the South aile of that church, the laſt day of Auguſt 1640.

At the beginning of the volume are two ſmaller leaves, intitled, "The lineal Deſcent of the moſt antient Family of the Sherleys, lords of Sherley, co. Derby, unto ſir George Sherley, as heir of the houſe 1609;" communicated in 1641 by John Vincent, only ſon of Auguſtine Vincent, eſq. Windſor Herald.

This ſplendid volume is richly adorned with ſeals, monuments, and arms, of the ſeveral branches of the family; and at the end of it [2] is the following atteſtation: "Decimo die Octobris, anno Verbi Incarnati 1641, annoque regni regis Caroli decimo ſexto. Verè hæc præcedentia ſcripta, & Irtinorum cartæ ſecundum originalia reſcribuntur, eorumque ſigilla propriis formis ſicut eiſdem cartis appendunt depicta ſunt.

"Hujus rei teſtis eſt, Thomas Shirley."

2. "Genealogica Hiſtoria Domûs de Shirley, dominorum de Etingdon, Shirley, Hogâ, Edneſonor, Staunton Harald, Ragdal, Braylesford, Aſtwel, & plurimorum aliorum locorum; chartis publicis diverſarum eccleſiarum, authenticis regni archivis, privatis evidentiis, antiquis monumentis, aliiſquis ſolidis certiſque probationibus confirmata, variis iconibus, & diſcurſibus antiquitatem redolentibus ornata. Per Thomaſtos Caloleimon Philopatron." This volume is thus inſcribed:

"Perantiquæ Shirleorum Genti, dominis de Etinton & Shirley, regiâ nobilitate preditæ, æquè ac militari gloriæ inſigni, Catholicæ fidei Chriſti profeſſione valdè celebriori, dominorumque fertilis, & ſplendore morum eminentiſſimæ, hanc ſuam glorioſiſſimam hujus ſtemmatis hiſtoriam, optimum exemplar eis omnibus proponens ad imitandum, ut ſuis majoribus reſpondeant, Thomas Shirleius, eques auratus, Georgii Shirley, inclitiſſimi Baronetti filius ſecundo genitus, dat, dicat, dedicat, conſecratque [3]."

3. "The Genealogicke Hiſtorie of the Howſe of Shirleys, Lordes of Etindon, Shirley, Hoga, Edneſouer, Staunton Harald, Ragdale, Braylesforde, Aſtwell, and divers other places. Juſtified by Charters of divers Churches, publike Recordes of the Kingdome, private Evidences, and other good and certaine Proofes. Enriched with divers Figures and Diſcourſes of Antiquity. By Thomaſton Caloleimon, Philopatron;" ſir Thomas Shirley, knt. of Botolph-bridge; as appears in the title-page to his other collections N° 4028, and the dedication in N° 4023; of which laſt this MS. is principally a tranſlation, though conſiderable variations and additions, &c. are to be reciprocally found in each.

This laſt-mentioned volume contains a regular and well-digeſted hiſtory of the family, more ample in many inſtances than the ſplendid article firſt noticed. It thus begins: "This renowned familie of Shirley hath produced ſoe long a ſucceſſion of noble perſonages, who have ſoe admirably conjoined the practice of moſt excellent virtues and nobleneſs of bloude with ſoe great perfection, that theyr heroick actions in the compleat union of theſe two rare qualities have farr ſurmounted the luſtre of theyre birth; for, by theyre piety and meritts, they have acquired all the prerogatives of honor and glorie, which may raiſe a howſe to height of ſplendor, and engrave the memorie of its name within the eternitie of ages. But for the principalles, there are ſeven moſt remarkable, ſoe eminent, ſoe rare, and ſingular, that they are to be founde in very few other families. One is the nobleneſſe and antiquitie of bloude, which hath paſſed for ſeven intyre ages, beeing aſſured (by moſt reverend recorders, worthie to be beleived) that the firſt anceſtors of this houſe have had the reputation and honor of a moſt antient Saxon lyne, flouriſhinge in opulencie and dignitie longe before the Norman Conqueſt; and ſince the happie tymes of the glorious kinge and moſt beloved ſervaunt of the Kinge of kinges, bleſſed Sainte Edwarde the Confeſſor, it juſtifies ytſelfe to have continued proſperouſly from male to male unto this preſent, by a continuall uninterrupted ſucceſſion of manie renowned perſons; whoſe actions have been moſt famous, and trulie worthie of a hiſtorie. The ſeconde mark of ornament, which ſhines moſt reſplendently in the howſe, is that they have contracted all their marriages with the antient and moſt illuſtrious houſes in Englande. In the thirde place, the renowne of this familie hath been marvelouſly increaſed by the proweſſe, memorable actes, and high attempts of the deſcendants, who have always appeared in the firſte ranks, in all places where fortitude and glorious militarie vertue might make itſelf admired. The fourthe advantage of glorie, which ſo widely raiſeth the fame of this howſe, is the great devotion and ſingular fidelittie it hathe alwayes borne to their Sovereign Princes. The fifte prerogative is moſt commendable, in theyr bright and renowned alliances; havenge the honour to be joined in a near degree of propinquitie of bloude with the royal ſtemm of England, both Saxon and Norman; as likewyſe to thoſe of Fraunce, Scotland, Denmarke, Arragon, Leon, Caſtele, the Sacred Romayne Empire, and almoſte to all the princely howſes of Chriſtendome; and within theyre oune kingdome to the moſt honourable and princely howſes of the barons of Berkeley, dukes of Northfolcke and Buckingham, earles of Arundell, Oxforde, Northumberland, Shrewſberrie, Kent, Derbye, Worceſter, Huntingdon, Pembroke, Nottingham, Suffolk, Berkſhire, and to moſt of the antient, famous, and flouriſhing families of the nobilitie and gentrie of the monarchie; inſomuch that they that remayne of this howſe at this preſent have the honour to have iſſued from the bloude of manie Emperors, Kinges, Princes, Dukes, and moſt renowned Earles. In the ſixth place, the great lands and ſeignories, which they from all antiquitie have held, hath given no ſmall addition of honour to the houſe; for they have poſſeſſed the manors of Etington, Newton Regis, Shirley Street, Thorenſton, in Warwickſhire; Shirley, Branzinton, Hoone, Croxſhall, Hatun, Eveley, Bradley, Sturſton, Beardſhale, Wroncele, Ettwall, Yolgrave, Hopwell, Ylcheſle, Edneſouer, Irton, Hope, Braylesforde, in Derbyſhire; Sutton Bunnington, in Nottinghamſhire; Ragdale, Willowes, Radcliffe ſuper Wreke, Barrow ſuper Soram, Staunton Haralde, Dunton, Long Watton, Burton Overey, in Leiceſterſhire; Hanbrooke, in Glouceſterſhire; Great Chellworth, in Wiltſhire; and divers other ample and faire manors, which have gone oute of the howſe, either by younger ſonnes, theyr daughters and heires, or by alienations. Laſtly, Holy Pietie is one of the particular eminences which rendered the family of Shirley moſt remarkable amongſt others, they having ſoe religiouſly maintained this vertue, that all of them, for the moſt parte, have exerciſed an ardent and unextinguiſhable charitie towards the advancement of the ſervice of God, and a ſingular liberalitie towards the Church; ſhewinge the zeale of theyr devotion, by the enrichment of a great number of abbeys, priories, convents, collegiate churches, chantreyes, and other places of devotion, which they had founded, builte, re-edified, or endowed with their meanes and revenue, in divers places in this realme[1]."

"This family," ſays Mr. Burton in MS. "is of great antiquity, of an antient Saxon line long before the Conqueſt; which, if there was no other proof, the very Saxon names uſed by them about the time of the Conqueſt (as Sewal, Fulcher, Eldred, and the like) would fully teſtify."

Sewal, whoſe name is written alſo Seuualo, Seuualdus, Sewalus, Sewilus, Sewald, Sewaldin, Saſuuallo, and Saſulo, was living in the reign of Edward the Confeſſor; at which period he poſſeſſed the manor of Eatendon in Warwickſhire, and many other lordſhips in that county, and in Derbyſhire, Lincolnſhire, and Northamptonſhire; and, being diſpoſſeſſed of ſome part at the Conqueſt, was notwithſtanding permitted to enjoy his manor of Eatendon, and ſome others which he at that time held under the lord Henry de Ferieres. That he was then of the rank which in the Saxon times was denominated Thani mediocres[2] is evident, both from his poſſeſſing this extenſive manor, containing not leſs than 17 hides, and valued at the general ſurvey at £20.; and ſtill more ſo, by having under him a knight and two Thani inferiores[3], whoſe rank reſembled that of modern freeholders[4].

Under Henry de Ferieres this Sawal or Sewalus held alſo the manor of Tichmerch[5] in Northamptonſhire; Hatun and Hoga, Shirley, and Etewelle, in Derbyſhire[6], and part of Wintenay[7] in Lincolnſhire; ſome of which are ſtill enjoyed by his poſterity. His principal reſidence, however, was at Eatendon; which hath continued in his poſterity in the male line to the preſent day; being the only place in that county which glories in an uninterrupted ſucceſſion of its owners for ſo long a tract of time[8].

That which appeareth moſt glorious in all the whole life of this Sewalus was, that as he merited to be reputed the chief and principal founder of the Houſe which afterward bore the name of Sherley, ſo alſo it appears he laid the true and aſſured foundation, on the prime and moſt excellent of all motives, which is piety; for it appears by the Legier-book of the monaſtery of Kenelworth that he built from the ground, within the town of Eatendon, a fair and goodly church, to the honour of the Holy Trinity and the Virgin Mary, and endowed it with much lands[9]. His poſterity alſo were great benefactors to the monaſteries of Kenelworth, Tutbury, Abingdon, Bildewas, and Derley, as the Legier-books of thoſe ſeveral houſes will teſtify. It is not properly known when he died, nor where he was buried; though an old monument in the church of Eatendon, with an antient figure inſculped thereon (but without inſcription), would confirm our belief that he was buried in that church[10].

From Sewalus deſcended Fulcher, who lived in the reign of William Rufus. Had five ſons; Sewalus, Fulcher, Jordan, Henry, and Robert. He was ſucceeded at Eatendon by his eldeſt ſon, Sewallus, the ſecond of that name; who gave to the priory of Kenelworth, founded in 1122, the church and manor of Eatendon, with all the lands and tithes wherewith Sewalus his grandfather had endowed the ſame at the foundation; and all the donations of his anceſtors; with an augmentation of divers other lands within his manor of Eatendon. He confirmed alſo to the monks of Abingdon[11] his father's gift of the tithes of Hildeſlee, "decimas de villâ ſuâ Hildeſleâ, caſeorum ſcilicet & vellerum ſuarum omnium."

Having tranſlated his ſeat from Eatendon, his antient habitation, to Shirley (the etymology of which ſignifies a clear place); a large territory of his in the county of Derby, he was the firſt of the family that called himſelf de Shirley; and, during his reſidence there, ſhewed the ſame devotion of charity to his neighbours the monks of Tutbury, as he had before done to thoſe of Kenelworth; giving them two thirds of his manor of Hoga near Shirley, to pray for his own ſoul, and for that of his firſt wife Matilda, &c.[12] He gave lands alſo to the priory of Derley, co. Derby; and to the abbey of Rufford, co. Notts. He was twice married, to Matilda Ridel and Alicia . . . . .; and had five ſons, Henry, Fulcher, Hugh a prieſt[13], Richard, Ralph.

Henry, ſon and heir of the ſecond Sewalus, and brother and heir of the ſecond Fulcher, was after the death of his father lord of Eatendon, and after the death of his brother lord of Shirley. He confirmed to the priory of Kenelworth about 1140 the church of Eatendon, which Sewalus his great-grandfather had endowed at its dedication; confirming at the ſame time all the other donations of his anceſtors. He gave the lordſhip of Ivanbroc to the monks of Bildewas; and occurs as a witneſs to the foundation charter of Merevale abbey. He held of Robert de Ferrariis, earl of Derby and lord of Tutbury, five knights fees in Derbyſhire; and Fulcher his brother held of the ſaid earl Robert four knights fees in the ſame county; unto whom, moreover, William at that time prior of Tutbury gave four oxgangs of land in Shirley, which where confirmed to him by the following charter:

"Robertus de Ferrariis omnibus hominibus ſuis et fidelibus ſalutem. Sciatis quod prior Toteſberie & conventus, per conceſſum meum, dederunt Fulcherio filio Sewali & heredibus ſuis in feodo, quatuor bovatas terre in Sirlai, per quatuor ſolidos reddendos ad feſtum Sc̄i Johannis Baptiſte ſingulis annis pro omnibus ſerviciis. Et molendinum ſuum, quod habebat in Derebeiâ, ſimiliter ei dederunt in feodum, & heredibus ſuis, per conceſſum meum, per ſex ſolidos & octo denarios, &c. ſicut in cartâ declaratum eſt. Valete. Sub ſigillo predicti Roberti[14]."

To the above-named Henry the following extract bears reference; "Nottinghamſcire & Derbyeſcire. Henricus filius Sewalon reddit compotum de ſeptem marcis argenti, ut ſit quietus de Saranitis[15]."

Fulcher the ſecond of that name, and ſecond ſon of Sewalus, had from his father the manor of Edneſoure, co. Derby; and gave the church of St. Peter in that town to the abbot of Rocheſter. He was twice married; but left no iſſue; and was buried in the priory church of Kenelworth.

[3] The ſuperior Thanes, called in Latin Miniſtri Regis, were the Saxon nobility, and were equal in rank to the Norman barons. In this claſs, at the general ſurvey, ranked Henry de Ferieres, who then poſſeſſed Eatendon and ſeveral other manors as lord of the fee. Under him, Eatendon was held by Saſuuallo, or Sewalus, as Thanus mediocris, a leſſer baron, or lord of the manor; having again under-tenants, who were Thani inferiores, or freeholders. On this head ſee the Diſſertation on Domeſday, vol. I. p. xlii.—"If a churle ſo thrived that he had fully five hides of land of his own, a church, a kitchen, a bell-houſe, and a gate, a ſeat, a ſeveral office in the king's hall; then was he thenceforth the thein's right worth." [15] Ex Rotulis magnis Pipæ, 1 Hen. II.

Sewalus, the third of that name, in 1167 acknowledged himſelf to hold of William de Ferrariis earl of Derby thoſe nine knights fees which Henry his father and his uncle ſome time held of earl Robert de Ferrariis lord of Tutbury, grandfather to the ſaid earl [2]. “This Sewal,” ſays Mr. Burton, “is in the Legier-book ſtyled a knight; which title I have not ſeen in any record or deed ſo antiently expreſſed [3].” In 1173, by the name of Dominus Sewalus de Etendon miles, he remitted to the monks of Kenelworth all his intereſt in the church of Eatendon; and was a conſiderable benefactor to that religious houſe, and alſo to thoſe of Derley and Tutbury.

“Together with nine-knights fees in Eatendon, co. Warwick, Sewalus filius Henrici held the manor of Shirley, co. Derby (which at this day are Shirley's lands), and in other places in both thoſe counties; and at thoſe times the Shirleys were men of great eſtate and livelihood; inſomuch (as I have lately been informed) that they were ſeiſed of 25 manors in the county of Warwick; in which number Shirley-Street held a main place, which extends itſelf four miles in length towards Birmingham. He choſe his place of ſepulture in the priory church of Kenelworth, where he was honourably interred, and was the fourth of the family buried in that church, to which they had before been great benefactors [4].”

The following brief extracts from antient national records authenticate many of the preceding facts.

“Derebiſcire. Carta Wiłłi comitis de Ferrariis.

“H. regi Anglorum, domino ſuo kariſſimo, Willelmus comes de Ferrariis ſalutem. Mando vobis, quod tempore H. regis, avi veſtri, Henricus, filius Sawaldi, tenuit feod' v militum; Fulcherus, frater ſuus, feod' IIII militum: & modo Sawaldus, heres utrorum, tenet eoſdem IX milites [5].

Comes Derbie tenet viginti octo feoda, &c. de quibus de Sewallo filio xxs̃. pro dimidio feodo militis in Hokâ, quod tenet de comite Derbie [6].”

“Nomina eorum qui tenent feoda militaria in com' Warr' & Leic'; & de quibus ipſi tenent.

Feoda comitis de Ferrariis.

In Etindon unum feodum, quod Sewallus de Etindon tenet de eodem comite.

In Thorindon tres partes feodi, quas Wiłłs de Biſſopeſdon tenet de Sewallo de Etindon, & ipſe de predicto comite.

In Fulri dimidium feodum & ſexta pars feodi, que Rogerus de Fulri tenet de eodem Sewallo, & ipſe de eodem comite.

In Superiori Etindon ſeptima pars feodi, quam heres Thome de Etindon tenet de eodem Sewallo, & ipſe de eodem comite [7].”

He married Iſabel, one of the daughters and coheirs of Robert Meyſnill [8]; who brought with her in marriage divers fair poſſeſſions into the family of her huſband; as appears by an eſſoigne of the pleas before king John, impleading the prior of the Hoſpital of St. John of Jeruſalem for two carucates of land in Dalby, part of the inheritance of Iſabel his noble conſort [9].

Iſabel, dau. and coheir, married Sewalus III.
Joanna, dau. and coheir, married Philip Ulveton.

[[10] Sewalus III. was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir Henry; who, in 1200 had attended William earl de Ferrariis in the king's army, when he ſailed into Poitou; and in 1205 had livery under him of the manor of Edneſore in Derbyſhire, of which he had been diſſeiſed during that voyage. In the ſame year he was knighted by king Henry II; and, viſiting the church of the Holy Trinity at Eatendon, from affection to the pure ſervice of religion, he built there a fair chapel from the very foundation in honour of St. Nicholas, and founded a chantry, giving in perpetual alms a manſion, with divers lands, meadows, and common of paſture, for the maintenance of a prieſt, to celebrate maſs at the altar of St. Nicholas, in the church of Eatendon, for his own ſoul, and for thoſe of his wife and children, his anceſtors and ſucceſſors; who ſhould ſay maſs every day, with Dirige and Placebo, and other offices belonging to the dead, except on Thurſdays and the feſtivity of St. Nicholas, on which he ſhould ſay the maſs of that feaſt. Finally, he gave to the ſame chaplain 4*s.* of annual rent for his own proper uſe, and 12*d.* annual rent, and the tenth buſhel of the toll of the mill of Eatendon, to maintain candles for the altar of St. Nicholas; reſerving power to himſelf, his heirs and ſucceſſors, to make election of another prieſt, as often as the ſaid ſelected chaplain ſhould die, or be removed; and after his deceaſe, which happened in 1220, he received the honour of his ſepulture in the chapel joining to the church of Eatendon, which his great-grandfather had built, under a marble tomb, with a plate of braſs, which bears his portraiture thereon engraven.

Sewallus IV. his eldeſt ſon and ſucceſſor, confirmed in 1243 the donation of his father to the chantry of Eatendon. He married Iſabel, daughter and heir of John de Clinton [11]; and dying in 1260, was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir [10],]

James de Shirley, who by that appellation had free-warren granted to him at Shirley in 1247, and at Eatendon in 1255. He was afterwards knighted; and, dying about 1278, was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir,

Ralph de Shirley, knight; who in 1279 held the manor of Eatendon, and in that year was ſheriff of the counties of Nottingham and Derby; knight of the ſhire for the county of Warwick in 1312; and died in 1327, leaving his ſon and heir,

Ralph, who alſo in 1341 repreſented Warwickſhire in parliament. He left his eſtates to his ſon, Sir Thomas Shirley, knight, “the great father of the family of the Shirleys;” famous in his time for his valour, and for the many ſervices, &c. rendered to the kings of England againſt the French. He was noted alſo for the liberal donations of lands and rents by himſelf and his wife to the college of St. Mary in the Newark at Leiceſter, and the dean and prebendaries there, to celebrate maſs for their ſouls after their deceaſe, and for the ſouls of their anceſtors. He married Iſabel, daughter of Ralph lord Baſſet of Drayton, and ſiſter and heir of Ralph laſt lord Baſſet; by whom he had the manors of Rakedale, Willowes, Radcliffe upon Wreke, Dunton, and Whatton, co. Leiceſter; Radcliffe upon Sore, Thrumpton, and Coulſton Baſſet, co. Nottingham; the manors of Eaſt Hail and Weſt Hall, in Sheldon, co. Warwick and Worceſter. Sir Thomas died in or before 1362; and his body and that of his lady were interred within the moſt magnificent and goodly college built by Henry duke of Lancaſter, called Newark, in a chapel of a very fair ſtructure, dedicated to St. Mary, on the South ſide of the choir, in a large and ſtately monument[1]; in the which church the corpſe of the moſt illuſtrious founders, Henry duke of Lancaſter and Henry his father, lie interred; but, at the general ſuppreſſion of abbeys, the college was pulled down; and afterwards as well the monuments of the princely founder and his father as of this valorous knight and renowned lady were defaced[2].

[10] The two paragraphs between hooks (which are taken from the Harleian MS. 4028. p. 46.) will appear not accordant to the Pedigree of Shirley, here printed in p. *715; where two deſcents are apparently wanting; but I am not able to ſolve the difficulty. The Pedigree is taken from authentic Family Documents; and the compact between Sewalus and Simon de Walton to marry his daughter Elizabeth to John the ſon of ſaid Simon, is dated 1 John (about A. D. 1200.)

[11] Ever ſince the marriage with the heireſs of Clinton the family have taken their arms; Paly of ſix, Or and Azure, a quarter of Brittaine; the family of Clinton being allied to the dukes of Brittaine.

On his ſon Hugh Shirley the manors of Rakedale and Willowes, with ſuch lands as Ralph lord Baſſet of Drayton[3] was then ſeiſed of, were in 1389 entailed, though poſſeſſion was not obtained during his lifetime, as ſtated before under the account of Rakedale[4]. This Hugh was made chief warder of Higham Ferrers park by John of Gaunt duke of Lancaſter; and in 1399 conſtable of Donington caſtle by Henry duke of Lancaſter; and on the 27th of March, 1400, being then a knight, was made grand falconer to king Henry IV. for the kingdom of Ireland: "Rex omnibus, &c. Sciatis quod nos, de fidelitate & circumſpectione dilecti & fidelis noſtri Hugonis Shirley chivaler plenius confidentes, conſtituimus ipſum magiſtrum omnium falconum, aſturcorum, lanororum, lanarettorum, & aliarum avium, pro nobis, & ad opus noſtrum, infra terram noſtram Hibernie, pro denariis emend' & providend' pro termino vite ſue; voluntes quod ipſe in propriâ perſonâ, vel per ſufficientem deputatum ſuum, pro quo reſpondere voluerit, hujuſmodi falcones, aſturcones, laneros, lanarettos, & alias aves, infra terram noſtram predictam emen' & providere poſſit, precipiendo de nobis in officio predicto talia vadia & feoda qualia alii qui predictum officium ante hec tempora occupârunt, & in eodem rationabiliter ab antiquo percipere conſueverunt. In cujus, &c. Teſte Rege, apud Weſtm', 27° die Martii. Per breve de privato ſigillo, &c.[5]"—In the ſame year William Flamvile, ſon and heir of William Flamville, remitted to ſir Hugh Shirley and others all his right in the manor of Aſton Flamvile[6].—His piety was manifeſted by his zeal to the Catholic religion, confirming two chantries in St. Nicholas of Pater Noſter church in le Riole, London, which Walter Waldeſcheiffe his grandfather on the mother's ſide founded by his laſt will, for two chaplains for ever, to ſay maſs for his ſoul, his wife's, and for all the ſouls of his predeceſſors and ſucceſſors after their deceaſe, and recovering the rents with which they were endowed, iſſuing out of the lands of ſir Hugh, and detained by his tenants[7].

Sir Hugh Shirley married Beatrix, ſiſter and heir to John Braoſe[8], or de Brewys; and, coming to the battle of Shrewſbury[9], with a great power, in aſſiſtance of king Henry IV. clad in royal armour, was in that field ſlain on the eve of St. Mary Magdalen 1403[10]; leaving Beatrix his widow; and Ralph, his ſon and heir, who was 13 years old on the 23d of April then laſt paſt. He held at his death the manors of Shirley and Eatendon, &c. &c. His widow purchaſed the tithes of Lubbeſthorpe in 1410[11]; and ſhe died in 1419[12].

Sir Ralph Shirley, knt. was one of the chief commanders under king Henry the Fifth at the battle of Agincourt, as appeareth by an antient roll in the Office of Arms[13]; and was often a great actor in the ſubſequent wars of the ſaid king Henry V. in France, as is evidently proved by divers inſtruments of accord made betwixt the ſaid king and ſir Ralph Shirley, written in the French tongue; in one of which, dated 1416, after agreement had for the number and pay of his ſoldiers, the time and place of his rendezvous and ſhipping, with divers other things, the king granted to the ſaid Ralph all the priſoners that he or his ſoldiers ſhould take, only reſerving to himſelf the French king his adverſary, the Dolphin his ſon, and all other kings his adverſary's aſſiſtants; giving to the ſaid ſir Ralph only the third part of the ranſom of the captive kings by him or his ſoldiers taken. And laſtly, that no manors or lands which in England ſhould fall unto the ſaid ſir Ralph Shirley during the time of his ſervice in any foreign war ſhould, for default of any reſpite of homage or other ſervice, be eſtreyted, ſeized, or detained by any of the king's offices; but to be reſpited till his return into England; which inſtruments are yet to be ſeen of record in the Pell-office in the Exchequer, under the ſeal of arms and creſt of the ſaid ſir Ralph Shirley[14]; who in 1420 came over to England, and was high-ſheriff of the counties of Derby and Nottingham. He married Joan, daughter and heir of Thomas Baſſett, of Braylesford, co. Derby, whoſe mother was daughter and heir of Henry de Braylesford, of Braylesford; who brought to this houſe the manor of Braylesford, co. Derby, now in their poſſeſſion. By this lady he had iſſue one ſon, Ralph his ſucceſſor, and one daughter Beatrix.

To this Ralph and his heirs male did the feoffees of Ralph lord Baſſet of Drayton releaſe all their intereſt in the manors of Colſton Baſſet and Radcliffe upon Soar in Nottinghamſhire, Rakedale, Willowes, Radcliffe upon Wreke, Barrow upon Soar, Dunton, and Whatton, in Leiceſterſhire, with Weſthalle and Eſthalle in Sheldon in Staffordſhire; after which, in 1432, he reſided at Radcliffe upon Soar; and died at his government and charge in France about 1443, accompliſhing the latter days of his life in thoſe tranſmarine dominions of the king (the acquiſition and defence whereof had coſt him the price of ſo much blood) with a glorious and memorable end; and, beſides the honour which he received in his life and death, it was not the leaſt in his funeral pomp; for his body was carried into England, and his obſequies celebrated in our Lady's chapel, within the collegiate church of the Newark in Leiceſter, by the dean, prebendaries, and whole choir, with great honour; where the Dirige was ſaid, and maſs ſung for his ſoul, with great ſolemnity; and his corpſe was buried on the South ſide of the choir in the ſame chapel, by the lady Joan his firſt wife (whoſe body had been tranſlated thither from the church of Radcliffe upon Soar in Nottinghamſhire, where it was firſt buried under a marble ſtone in the chancel, with an inſcription in memory of her[15]) in a coſtly and beautiful tomb, which, at the ſuppreſſion of the monaſteries, was ruinated and pulled down; to the which college they both had largely expreſſed their pious charity, in their bountiful donations[16]. By the lady Alice, his ſecond wife, daughter of ſir John Cockayne (who outlived him many years, and died on the Wedneſday after Whitſunday 1466[17]), he had Ralph Shirley the younger; who had the ſame name given him as his eldeſt brother in honour and memory of his father, and inherited the eſtates in Suſſex by his father's ſpecial deviſe, in prejudice of the children of the firſt marriage.

As ſir Ralph Shirley, whoſe memory has laſt been celebrated, ſhewed his piety to the church, and loyalty to his prince, by many devout works of charity, and moſt valorous actions of war; ſo was he not wanting to expreſs his tender love and ſincere affection to his children, upon all occaſions that offered themſelves; for, knowing how honourable and profitable a thing it was for a gentleman of note not only to have knowledge in learning, but alſo in all other qualities that render a man complete; firſt, he delivered this Ralph his ſon and heir, which he had by Joan his firſt wife, for his education in all manner of good literature, to the learnedeſt and moſt excellent tutors; and for all other rare qualities of a gentleman, to the moſt ſcient and expert maſters of the time; and when he had attained to the age requiſite to contract marriage, he being ſolicitous to provide an alliance in a houſe agreeable to his race and lineage, made him ſettle his deſires upon that of Staunton, which, amongſt the antienteſt families in the county of Leiceſter, hath always conſerved the title of generous; for, on the ſecond day of April, in the year of our Lord 1423, he treated of a marriage betwixt him and the excellent and virtuous gentlewoman, Margaret Staunton, ſiſter and ſole heir of Thomas Staunton, eſq.; for the accompliſhing of the which marriage, finding themſelves both to be joined within the fourth degree of conſanguinity, they preſented a petition to pope Martin V. with ſir Ralph Shirley his father (his mother being deceaſed) to obtain his diſpenſation, that he might take alliance in marriage with the ſaid Margaret; and his holineſs, upon many weighty and rational cauſes, did, out of his apoſtolic and circumſpect providence, grant them his diſpenſation, upon condition, that the ſaid Margaret were not ſtolen away for this purpoſe, and directed his letters, by Jordan biſhop of Albany, to the biſhop of Lincoln, within whoſe dioceſe the ſaid Margaret did inhabit, or to his vicar in ſpiritualities; whereupon Robert Leeke, doctor of law, chancellor to Richard Fleming biſhop of Lincoln, having found, upon diligent inquiſition, that all the reaſons alledged by the ſaid Ralph and Margaret were true and juſt, and Margaret was not ſtolen away or forced, did pronounce, by virtue of the pope's diſpenſation, they might marry together; whereupon, in September following, the marriage was ſolemnized[1]. He married, ſecondly, Elizabeth, daughter of ſir John Blount, knight, and ſiſter to Walter Blount lord Mountjoy; and thirdly, Lucia, daughter of ſir John Aſton, of Atherton, knight, and widow, firſt, of ſir Richard Biron, of Colewich, co. Nottingham, and ſecondly of ſir Bertin Entwiſſell, knight, viſcount and baron of Brykbeke in Normandy, and bailiff of Conſtantine, who was ſlain at the battle of St. Alban's 1455[2].

By divers inquiſitions taken after the death of Ralph Shirley, eſq. dated in April and June 1466, it appears that he died on the feaſt of St. Stephen then laſt paſt, ſeiſed of many goodly manors, fair poſſeſſions, and large territories, in the ſeveral counties of Leiceſter, Derby, Warwick, and Nottingham; and, inter alia, the manors of Rakedale, Willowes, and Dunton, with their appurtenances, which were held of Alianore wife of Humphrey Stafford, knt. and worth £10. a year ultra repriſas; and that John Shirley, his ſon and heir, was 40 years old and upwards[3]. He was buried in the church of Braylesford, where his tomb ſtill remains. The manors of Braylesford and Sutton Bonington he left in jointure to Lucy lady Entwiſſel his third wife, who ſurvived him 15 years; and directed her burial alſo at Braylesford with her third huſband, where a marble tomb, with her effigies and arms in braſs, bears this inſcription:

"Hic jacet domina Lucia uxor Radulphi Shirley, domina de Bralesforde, quondam uxor domini Richardi Byron, domini de Clayton, ⁊ quondam uxor Bertini Entwiſell, militis, filia Johannis Aſton, militis. Obiit 12° die Februarii, anno Domini 1481."

The above-noticed Joan Staunton was re-married to ſir Thomas Clinton, knt. brother to William lord Clinton and Say, and comptroller of the houſhold to king Henry V; who, ſurviving her ſecond huſband, made her will in this form:

"This is the will of me, Johane Clinton, widowe, who was the wife of Thomas Clinton, knight, made 1457, 36 Henry VI; that is to ſaie, firſt, I will that my feoffees whiche nowe be, and hereafter ſhall be, of and in all manors, lands, tenements, and ſervices, which I late had in the counties of Leiceſter, Warwick, Darby, hold and poſſeſſe all the ſaid mannors, lands, and tenements, by three whole yeeres next after my deceaſe; and that the yſſues and ꝓfitts thereof be receyved by mine executors, and not by my feoffees; they for to content and paye all my dettes. Alſo I will that myne executors, of profittes and iſſues of the lands aforeſaid, fynd contynuallie, by the ſpace of three yeeres, one honeſt prieſt to ſing divine ſervice for my ſoule, and for the ſoules of the aforſaid Thomas late my huſbond, and of John Staunton, ſometymes huſband, and of Ralphe Mignell, knight, and Johan his wife, my father and mother. Alſo I will that the abbeſſe and covent of the houſe of Nunnes beſide the Tower of London have of the ſame yſſues and ꝓfittes £45. upon this condicōn, that they and their ſucceſſors for ever recom̄end my ſoule in their devout prayers; and alſo that they hould myne anniverſary ſolemnly with Placebo and Dirige, with a maſſe of Requiem by note yeerly by 10 yeares next after my deceaſe. Alſo I will that the houſe of Calke, in Derbyſhire, have of the ſaid yſſues 40*s.*; and that the churche of Herteſhorne have of the ſame yſſues and ꝓfittes a cheſeble p̃cii 26*s.* 8*d.*; alſo I will that Iſabell Francyes, my daughter's daughter, have of the ſaide iſſues and ꝓfittes to her mariadge 40 markes. Alſo I will that Margaret, ſiſter of the ſaid Iſabell, have of the ſaid yſſues and ꝓfittes 200 markes, upon this condicōn, that ſhee be maried to Robert Wele, the ſonne of John Wele, gentleman, of Glouceſterſhire; and if ſhe be maried to any other man, then I will that the ſaid Margaret have but 100 markes, and no more: and if either of the ſaid Iſabell or Margaret doe dye before that they be maried, then I will that Sicely, ſiſter of the ſaid Iſabell and Margaret, have £20. of the ſaid 200 markes if ſhe lyve to be maried. The reſidue of the ſaid 100 markes I will ſhall be diſpoſed in workes of piety, after the diſcretion of myne executors, by the overſight of the right worſhipfull ladie my ladye dame Margaret counteſſe of Shreweſbury. Alſo I will that Johan Mignel, my god-daughter and ſervaunt, have of the ſayd yſſues and ꝓfittes, to her finding, yeerly 20*s.* during the nonage of Thomas Francyes. Alſo I will that John Shirley, ſonne of Margaret Shirley my daughter, imediatle after my deceaſe, enter into all the manors, landes, and tenements, in the countye of Nottingham, which I hould in dower after the death of John Staunton, ſometyme my huſband. Alſo I will that my ſaid feoffees, after the ſaid three yeeres next after my deceaſe, make eſtate of the moitie of the ſaid manors, landes, and tenements, in the counties of Notingham, Warwicke, and Derby, to the ſaid John Shirley, and the heares of his body lawfully begotten; and for default of ſuch yſſue, to remaine to the right heire of me dame Johan Clinton; and the other moitie of the ſaid manors, landes, and tenements, with the appurtenances, in the countys of Leiceſter, Warwick, and Derby, I will ſhall remayne ſtill in my feoffees handes, and that myne executors ſhall receyve the iſſues and profitts thereof, to diſpoſe in charitable deeds and workes of mercye for the ſoule of me, till Thomas Francyes, ſonne of Anne Francyes, come to the adge of 21 yeeres; and then I will that my ſaid feoffees make an eſtate of the ſaid moitie of the ſaid manors, lands, and tenements, in the counties of Leiceſter, Warwick, and Darby, to the ſaid Thomas Francyes, and to the heires of his body lawfully begotten; and for default of ſuch yſſue, the remainder to the right heires of me the ſaid dame Johan Clinton; and if the ſaid Thomas Francies dye before the age of 21 yeeres, yet I will that the ſaid moitie of the ſaid landes abyd ſtill in my feoffees till he ſhoulde have been of the age of 21 yeeres, and that myne executors receive the yſſues and proffitts thereof, for the ꝑformaunce of this my laſt will. And then I will that my feoffees do make an eſtate, to Iſabel, Margaret, and Cicely, ſiſters of the ſaid Thomas Francyes, to have and to hould to them and their heires of theire body lawfully begotten, upon this condicõn, that the ſame Margaret, Iſabell, and Cicely, ſhall paie unto John Francyes, their ſiſter nounne, in the houſe of the . . . . [1] neere the Tower of London, £3. towards her ſuſtentacion duering her life; and alſo that they ſhall yeerly paie £3. unto Elizabeth Francyes, their ſiſter nounne in the houſe of Poleworthe, duering her life. In witneſſe whereof to this my preſent and laſt will I have put to my ſeale [2]."

[3] Eſch. at Loughborough, 12 June, 7 Edw. IV.

John Shirley, eſq. who "made himſelf no leſs renowned by his rare parts and admirable virtues, than that the generoſity of the noble blood of Shirley, Delawarr, Fitzwalter, Meignell, and Staunton, rendered him honourable. He not only ſucceeded in all the lands which his father poſſeſſed, but likewiſe in all thoſe of his mother's inheritance, among which was this of Staunton-Harold; to the which place he was ſo much affected, that in all his charters, records, and evidences, he intitled himſelf of Staunton Harold; and transferred his ſeat from Shirley thither, where all his ſucceſſors ever ſince have flouriſhed, and lived in great honour and eſtimation, until this preſent; all of them, for the moſt part, making choice of this place for their reſidence, and denominating themſelves, in all their ſtyles, writings, and titles, of Staunton-Harold, even to this day. He was a moſt virtuous gentleman, and ſolicitous to bring up his children in the fear of God, and for the ſervice of their Prince, to whom, upon all occaſions, he was demonſtrated with a moſt ſingular affection and fidelity; their loyalty to their Prince being, as it were, the peculiar patrimony appropriate to the houſe of Shirley [3]." He married Alianore, daughter of ſir Hugh Willoughby, of Wollaton, in Nottinghamſhire; and thus declared his will:

"In Dei nomine, Amen. The 26th day of March, 1485, I John Shirley, of Staunton Harald, eſq. whole of minde and body, orden and make this my preſent teſtament and laſte will: And firſt, I bequeyth my ſoule to Almighti God, and to his bleſſed mother our Lady St. Mari, and to all holy Saints; my body to be bured, where hit ſhall pleaſe God, with my due mortuarye. Alſo I will that my dettes be fully content and paid without dyminution. Alſo I will that Alianore my wife have the maners of Brailesford, &c. with all the landes, &c. for tearme of hire lyffe, in Brailesford, Bradeley, Borowes, Thurvaſton, and Coland, with the advoweſon of the chirch of Braillesford, the maners of Hoone and Harald Staunton, &c. for tearme of hire lyffe, in the name of and for hire dower, &c. Alſo I will that everie of my ſex youger ſonnes unprovided, have of the reſidue of all my oder maners, &c. annuyte of viii marks yerly, for terme of lyffe, &c.; and that Alice, Margaret, Jane, and Alianore, my daughters, have to their mariage every of them a 100 marc', &c.; alſo I will that my ſonne and heire Rauf Shyrley have all the lands, &c. lygging within the lordſhipp of Shyrley, after the deceſe of me and my ſeid wyffe, to him and his heires for evermore; alſo I will that, after my deceſe, my feoffees make an eſtate to Thomas my ſonne, for tearme of his lyeffe, of the foſtery in Hopedale in the Peake, &c.; and for the perfourminge and executing of this my præſent will and teſtament, I orden and make min executors the ſeid Alianore, my truſty and full enterly beloved wyffe, Henry Ferres, knight, Henry Willoughby, eſq. and Richard Knyveton the elder, and my right ſingular and full ſpeciall goode lord John lord Mountjoy, ſuperviſor of the ſame; whom I hertely require and pray as thoſe perſones whome I put my moſte confidence and truſt in, to execute and perfourme, as they will anſwere afore the high judge at the day of Dome. In witnes heireof, &c. I have putt the ſeile of my armes, &c." [4]

He died, at his manor of Staunton Harold, May 8, 1486 [5], ſeiſed of the manors of Staunton Harold, Radcliffe ſuper Wreke, and Long Whatton, and of lands in Burton Overy, Dunton, &c. leaving his wife Alianore a widow; and his corpſe was, with all due funeral pomp, carried to the abbey of Garendon; where his obſequies in ſolemn manner were religiouſly performed, with Dirige, and maſs of Requiem, by the abbot and the whole convent of that monaſtery; and the body was buried in a fair chapel of that church, under a fair alabaſter monument [6].

His ſon and heir, Ralph Shirley, who at his father's death was 26 years old, for his great valour in the battle of Stoke, 1486, was made a banneret; and in 1491 was retained to ſerve the king in his wars beyond ſea for one whole year, with his cuſtrell and page, as alſo 4 demilances, and 40 archers on foot; receiving for his ſaid men at arms, cuſtrell, and page, 18*d.* a day; and 4 demilances 6*d.* In 1497 he was, for his relief, charged with five knights fees, for his lands in Sheepey, Hone, Bradley, Yolgrave, and Brickover, one knight's fee in Braylesford and Wingerworth, and the fourth part of a knight's fee in Staunton Harold. He was four times married. By his firſt wife, Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Thomas Walſh, eſq. of Wanlip, he had one daughter, Anne, married to ſir Thomas Pulteney, knight. The ſecond wife was Anne, daughter of ſir Henry Vernon, of Haddon, in Derbyſhire, knight; the third, Anne, daughter of Thomas Warner; but by neither of theſe had he any iſſue. By the fourth wife, Joan (daughter of ſir Robert Sheffield, knt. recorder of London [7]), he had Francis, his ſon and heir. His laſt will is here tranſcribed:

"In Dei nomine, Amen. The 10th day of March, in the year of our Lord God 1513. I Raufe Shirley, knt. being in ſound mynde and memory, the periele of death dreding, make and ordayne this my laſt will and teſtament in manner and form following. Firſt, I bequeath my ſoule to Almightie God, and to his bleſſed moder Mary, and to all the company of Heven, and my body to be buried in the abbey church of Gerondon, in the chapell where my fader and my wife been leyd, with my due mortuarie and torches and other lights brenning about my corps the day of my buriall, and £20. of money to be diſtributed among poor people in almouſe, by the direction of myne executors. Alſo I will, that there be ſongen and ſaid, the day of my buriall, and as ſoon after as godely poſſible may be, a thouſand maſſes of Requiem, and other maſſes moſt expedient and behovefull for my ſoul's health. Alſo I will that my debts be fully content and paid, without dyminution. Alſo I will that there be paid to the prior and convent of Tutbury 13*s.* 4*d.* out of the rents and profits of my lands and tenements in Eſterleek yearely for evermore. Alſo I will that every of my ſix brethren, that is to ſay, Thomas Shirley, Robert Shirley, Hugh Shirley, Nicholas Shirley, Richard Shirley, and Baudewyn Shirley, have, and be paied of my lands, foure poundes of lawful money of England, at the feaſt of the Annuntiation of our Lady and St. Michaell the Archangell by even portions yearely, for tearme of thier lives, according to my fader's bequeath. Alſo I will that my feoffees which I have enfeoffed in the mannor of Shirley, with the appurtenances, ſtand enfeoffed to the uſe declared in the ſame feoffment. Alſo I will that my feoffees which be infeoffed by me of and in the mannor of Hambroke, with the appurtenances, and in all the meſes, lands, and tenements, meadowes, leſunes, and paſtures, woods, rents, reverſions, and ſervices, and other myne hereditaments, with the appurtenances, in Hambroke, Erthcote, Weſtbury, and Combe, in the pariſh of Weſtbury, in the county of Glouceſter, Magna Chelworth, in the county of Wiltes, and in the towne of Briſtol, after my deceaſe, make a ſufficient and lawful leaſe by indenture of the ſame manor and other the premiſſes to Thomas the abbot of the monaſterie of our bleſſed Lady of Gerondon, and the convent of the ſame place, and their ſucceſſors, for tearme of 99 years; bynding the ſame abbot and convent, and their ſucceſſors, to fynde an honeſt prieſt to ſinge dayly in the chapell where Anne my laſt wife lyeth buried, and I purpoſe to lye, for the ſoules of me and the ſame Anne, and for the ſoules of Thomas Warner and Elizabeth the parentes of the ſame Anne, and for the ſoules of John Shirley and Elioner the parentes of me the ſaid Raufe, and for the ſoules of Elizabeth and Anne my former wives, and for all Chriſtian ſoules; and alſo to fynde a convenient lodgyng within the abbey of Gerondon for foure poore men, to be kept of almouſe, for the love of God; and on woman, to be ther keeper; provided alway, that they be ſuch perſons as be well diſpoſed, and hath neede thereof, and hath no other lyving; and to give to every ſaid 4 men and woman 7d. ob. every weeke, and to be paied on the Satterday with barbor and launder, to pray for all the ſoules above rehearſed, during the ſaid tearme of 99 yeares; and therapon ſufficient and lawful writing to be made betwixt my feoffees on the on party, and the ſaid abbott and convent, and ther ſucceſſors, on the other party, after the wiſdom and diſcretion of the ſame feoffees. The revertion of the ſaid mannor of Hambroke, and other the premiſſes, to the right heire of me the ſaid Raufe Shirley for ever, after the ſaid tearme determined, if the ſame mannor and other the premiſſes be not mortized afore the ende of the ſame tearme; and then the ſaid revertion to be extinct and adnulled, if it be mortized in the meane tyme. Provided alway, if the ſaid abbot and convent, and ther ſucceſſors, performe not the charge above rehearſed contynually for ever in forme aboveſaid, then it ſhall be lawful to the heires of me the ſaid Raufe to re-enter into the ſaid mannor of Hambroke, with the appurtenances, and in all the ſaid meſes, lands, and tenements, and other the premiſſes, in the ſaid countyes of Glouceſter and Wiltes, and in the towne of Briſtoll, and the ſaid mannor and other the premiſſes to reteigne and hold as in my firſt eſtate, and the ſaid abbott and convent and ther ſucceſſors to put out, any thinge to the contrary made notwithſtanding. Alſo I will that my feoffees which I have enfeoffed in my mannor of Barnham, in the county of Suffolk, ſuffer, ayde, and helpe my ſervantes and others, to have and take the yſſues and profitts of the ſame lordſhip, to the uſe and profitts according to theſe patents by me to them thereof made; and after the deceaſe of my ſaid ſervantes and others, I will that my ſaid lordſhip of Barnham, with all the yſſues and profitts of the ſame, come and be to the uſe and profitt of the monaſtarie and monkes of Gerondon, to pray for the ſoules of me the ſaid Raufe, Jane my wife, my parents and friends, and all Chriſtian ſoules. Alſo I will that all my landes and tenements in Hone be to Anne Pulteney my daughter, and her heires, if I deceaſe without other yſſue of my body begotten; provided always, that if the ſaid Anne, or her huſband that now is, or any other huſband in tyme to come, their heires, executors, or any other, myne heires vex or trouble, or ſue any action or accountes of debt, by reaſon of covenants made in tyme paſſed by any of myne anceſtors, or by me to any of the anceſtors of them, or of any of them, or lett or diſturbe the performing and execution of this my laſt will; then I will that my feoffees of and in the mannor of Shirley, and myne executors, ſhall receive, reteigne, and keep in their hands, the yſſues and profitts of all the ſame mannor, and all the lands and tenements in Shirley, till they have received the ſume of two hundredth pounds, to defend the ſame actions; and, after that done, I will that the revertion of the ſame mannor and lordſhip of Shirley be to my right heires. Alſo I will that my feoffees which be enfeoffed of and in the lands and tenements in Ratcliffe upon Wreke, Worthington, and Melburne, with the appurtenances, which I purchaſed myſelfe, take and perceive all the rentes and profitts of the ſame lands and tenements, and to ſee the ſame rentes and profitts yearely to come unto the uſe and profitt of the chaunterie prieſte of St. Katherin in St. Michael's church in Melburne, in the county of Derb. beforeſaid; which chaunterie prieſt I will ſhall uphold a free-ſchoole at Melburne aforeſaid for ever, taking of every ſcholar one peny by the quarter; and alſo to ſinge or ſaye dayly or yearely for ever, on the Sunday, maſſe of the Trinity; on the Mounday, maſſe of Requiem; on Tueſday and Wenſday, maſſe of Salus Populi; on Thurſday, maſſe of the Holy Ghoſt; on Fryday, maſſe of the Holy Croſs; on Saturday, maſſe of our Bleſſed Lady; with Placebo and Dirige dayly, except a double feaſte do lett it; for the profitt of me the ſaid Raufe Shirley, and for the ſoules of John Shirley and Alleanor his wife, the parents of me, Anne, Elizabeth, and Anne, my former wives, and Thomas Warner and Elizabeth his wife, and dayly an Antiphyn of our Bleſſed Lady, with De Profundis, for the founders and benefactors ſoule of the ſaid chauntery, and all Chriſtian ſoules; provided alway, that my ſaid feoffees ſee that the ſaid chauntery prieſt be an honeſt prieſt, and of good vertue and diſpoſition and living. Alſo I will that my feoffees which be enfeoffed of and in all ſuch lands and grounds which I purchaſed myſelfe in a cloſe called Willowes field, within the pariſh of Rakedale, in the county of Leic. ſe that the rents and profitts of the ſame lands and grounds goe to the fynding and upholding of a lampe, to burne continually day and night before the bleſſed Sacrament, in the pariſh church of Rakedale aforeſaid, for ever. Alſo I will that all my lands and tenements that be entayled to the heir male, and came unto me by inherrittance, in Rakedale and Willowes, Ratcliffe upon Wreke, Long Whatton, and Dunton, remayne unto myne heires male, according as they ought to do of right. And I will that all other my lands and tenements before not rehearſed goe and remaine unto the heire-generall, according unto right. Alſo I will that all ſuch perſons as I have made leaſes or grants unto, of lands, tenements, meadowes, and paſtures, or any other myne hereditaments, by indentors, copies, or patents, have, occupie, and enjoy the ſame lands, tenements, meadowes, and paſtures, or other my hereditaments, with the appurtenances, according to my leave and grant. Alſo I will that all lands and tenements in Little Hambroke, Erthcote, Weſtbury, and Combe, in the pariſh of Weſtbury, in the county of Glouceſter, with the yſſues and profitts of the ſame, goe to the uſe and profitts of ſir James Smythe, chaplen, for tearme of his life, to ſing, ſay, and pray, at the abbey of Gerondon, in the countie of Leiceſter, for the ſoule of me, John and Alleanor the parents of me, Anne, Elizabeth, and Anne, my former wives, Thomas Warner and Elizabeth his wife, and all Chriſtian ſoules; and after the deceaſe of the ſaid ſir James, I will that the ſaid lands and tenements, with the profitts of the ſame, goe and remaine to the ſaid houſe of Gerondon, according to the tenure hereafter enſuing. Alſo I will that my feoffees which be enfeoffed of and in my lands and tenements in the counties of Glouceſter and Wiltes ſhall make and ordayne an honeſt prieſt, to ſing and pray at Lughborowe, in the countie of Leiceſter, for the ſoules of me, John and Alleanor the parents of me, Anne, Elizabeth, and Anne, my former wives, Thomas Warner and Elizabeth his wife, and all Chriſtian ſoules; and alſo the ſame prieſt to uphold a free-ſchoole at Lughborowe aforeſaid, during the tearme of 99 years; and the ſame prieſt to have and perceive yearely, during the ſaid tearme, £10. of lawful money, going out of my lands and tenements in Chelworth, in the county of Wiltes, and in the towne of Briſtoll. And at the end of the ſaid tearme, I will the ſaid landes, with the ſaid £10. rents, ſhall come to my right heire, if they be not mortized in the mean tyme. Alſo I will that there be paid yearely to John Lout, my ſervant, during his life, 6*s*. 8*d*. going out of my landes and tenements in Briſtoll aforeſaid; and after the deceaſe of the ſaid John Lout, I will that the ſaid ſome of 6*s*. 8*d*. and the reſidue and remaynment of the ſaid lands, above the ſaid £10. remayne and come to the uſe and profitt of the houſe of Gerondon beforeſaid, according to the tenor following. Alſo I will that the reſidue of all my lands and tenements in the town of Briſtol, with the yſſues and profitts of the ſame, and the rents and remaynments of all my lands and tenements in Little Hambroke, Erthcote, Weſtbury, Combe, and Chelworth, and elſewhere, within the counties of Glouceſter and Wiltes (after the deceaſe of the ſaid John Lout), except the ſaid £10. as is before rehearſed, revert, remayne, and come, unto the uſe and profit of the ſaid houſe of Gerondon, of tearme of 99 years; and at the end of the ſaid tearme, the ſaid lands, with the profitt of the ſame, to revert and come unto my right heire, if they be not mortized in the mean tyme; and the abbott of the ſaid houſe of Gerondon and his ſucceſſors to fynde two prieſts of the bretheren of their houſe, to ſing or ſay maſſe, and pray perpetually, during the ſaid tearme, for the ſoules above rehearſed; and to keep the obit of me the ſaid Rauſe and Anne on St. Katherin even, or on the day before, yearely during the ſaid tearme. Alſo I will that my feoffees which be enfeoffed by me in any of the ſaid lands and tenements above rehearſed, when God ſhall fortune them to deceſſe all but ſix perſons named in my dede of feoffment made by me, then I will that thoſe ſix perſons make another like eſtate. And for the performing of this my laſt will and teſtament, I make and ordeigne myn executors, my couzen John Porte, the king's ſolicitor; Rauſe Lemington, of Loughborough, merchant; Nicholas Shirley, my brother; James Smithe, chaplain; and Thomas Fitzherbert; whom I hereby require and pray, as thoſe perſons in whom I put my beſt confidence and truſt, to execute and performe this my laſt will, as they will anſwere at the day of dome before the Great Judge. And alſo I make and ordayne Thomas the abbot of the ſaid monaſterie of Gerondon my ſupraviſor of this my laſt will and teſtament, in whom likewiſe is my great confidence and truſt. In witneſſe I will one part remaigne in the keeping of myn executors, and another part in the keepyng of my feoffees, and the third part to remaigne in the keeping of the ſuperviſor of myn executors, I have put to my ſeal and ſign manuell[1].

Sir Ralph Shirley died at his manor-houſe at Staunton Harold Jan. 1, 1516-17; and his corpſe was interred in the abbey of Gerondon, in a chapel within that church, with his father and mother, and Anne his third wife, in a fair and ſumptuous tomb, raiſed with curious and ſtately pyramids up to the roof of the chapel; which, after the ſubverſion of all the religious houſes in England, was, by the fall of the church, utterly defaced and buried in the ruins.

April 8, 1518, it was found that ſir Ralph Shirley died ſeiſed of the manor of Staunton Harold, which he held of the king, as of the honour of Tutbury, parcel of the duchy of Lancaſter; but by what ſervice was then unknown. He alſo poſſeſſed the manors of Rakedale and Willoughes, Radcliffe ſuper Wrethek, Long Whatton, and Dunton[2]. Jane lady Shirley, his widow, was afterward re-married to ſir William Haſtings, ſecond ſon to lord Haſtings[3].

"By the eſpecial favour of Francis Shirley, eſq. his only ſon and ſucceſſor, the priory church of Bredon (which he purchaſed of king Henry VIII. as a burial place for himſelf and his ſucceſſors) was granted to the pariſhioners of Bredon (on their petition) with full licence to make uſe of the ſame, for and inſtead of their pariſh church thereto near adjoining, being then almoſt ruinated; which is to be proved by a writing indented, now remaining (1638) among the evidences of ſir Charles Shirley, baronet; in which church are interred ſome of the family[4]."

28 Jan. 1565-6, Francis Shirley, of Staunton Harold, eſq. John Shirley his ſon, then heir apparent, and Jane his wife, (daughter and ſole heir of Thomas Lovell, eſq. of Aſtwell, co. Northampton) granted to Robert Brokeſby, of Shouldby, eſq. in conſideration of £200. all their manors, meſſuages, &c. in Dunton Baſſet, in the county of Leiceſter[5]. Francis Shirley died in 1571 (and his wife the ſame year). He was ſeiſed of the manors of Staunton Harold, Rakedale, and Willowes, and lands in Radcliffe ſuper Wrethek, Thruſſington, and Long Whatton; and (John, his only ſon, having died in the year before) was ſucceeded by his grandſon, George Shirley, eſq. whoſe name occurs in a book of knights fees belonging to the caſtle and honour of Tutbury, in the counties of Stafford, Derby, Nottingham, Leiceſter, and Warwick, taken in 1574, as holding lands in Staunton Harold, formerly belonging to the heirs of Theobald Verdon, by the fourth part of a knight's fee; and at the ſame time Edward Winter, gent. held lands at Worthington on a ſimilar tenure[6]. June 1, 1584, he granted to Joſeph Criſp a park-keeper's licence to kill deer in his park. In 1587 (after the death of Thomas Lord, eſq.) he inherited in right of his mother, inter alia, the manor of Botolph's bridge, co. Huntingdon[7]. In 1609, he obtained from the king a grant of lands in Leiceſterſhire[8]; and, May 22, 1611, was created a baronet, being the fourth gentleman on the earlieſt liſt of creation.

In 1614, he obtained the privilege of holding court-leets in Leiceſterſhire and Derbyſhire, with a new grant of lands in Northamptonſhire[9]; in 1616, had a grant of free-warren over the manors of Sileby and Newbold, co. Leiceſter[10]; and in 1618, the privilege of holding court-leets in Warwickſhire[11].

By Frances, daughter of Henry lord Berkeley, he had ſir Henry Shirley, bart. his eldeſt ſon and ſucceſſor, and ſir Thomas Shirley, knt. of Botolph's bridge, whom Mr. Burton ſtyles "a true and learned Lover of Antiquity."

Sir Henry Shirley, the ſecond baronet (by whom the great park at Staunton was diſparked in 1623) was a keen admirer of the now almoſt obſolete ſport of hawking; which in 1628 involved him in an unpleaſant diſpute[12]. He died 8 Feb. 1633, ſeiſed of the manor of Staunton Harold, worth £20. a year, held of the honour of Tutbury; and alſo of the manors of Rakedale, Willowes, Sileby, &c.[13] He married the lady Dorothy, youngeſt daughter and coheir to Robert Devereux, earl of Eſſex and Eu, and lord Ferrers of Chartley (the favourite of queen Elizabeth, and deſcended from the only daughter and heireſs of Thomas of Woodſtock, duke of Glouceſter, youngeſt ſon of Edward III.) From this heireſs the preſent earl Ferrers enjoys Chartley, and twelve other manors in the county of Stafford.

By this lady ſir Henry had iſſue two ſons; ſir Charles Shirley, bart. born Sept. 9, 1623; Robert; of both whom hereafter; and one daughter, Lettice, married to colonel William Bourk, or De Bourg, afterward earl of Clanrickarde in Ireland; by whom ſhe had iſſue Richard earl of Clanrickarde, and John created lord Bophin in Ireland in the reign of king James II.

"One obſervance before I end," ſays Mr. Burton about the year 1638, "I may make of this family, that, in the revolution of almoſt 600 years from the Conqueſt of England to this preſent, in thoſe turbulent times of the barons' wars, in the reign of king Henry II, king John, and king Henry III, and in thoſe dangerous days of the competition of the crown betwixt the two houſes of York and Lancaſter, they always ſtood upright, and never any of their houſe (though of martial ſpirits and great livelyhoods) ever convented or attaynted.—Out of this houſe is branched, as a cadet of the ſame, the Shirleys of Weſtenſton in Suſſex, much renowned for their valour and warlike exploits; inſomuch that the name of Shirley is famous in the moſt parts of Europe; as Germany, France, Spain, and Italy; but chiefly in Perſia, where ſir Robert Shirley, knight, is ſo much in favour and eſteem with Schia Harabbas[14], the now Great Sophy, or Emperor of Perſia, that he hath made him a viceroy of certain provinces, and given him in marriage one of the neareſt alliances in blood, and that not without deſert, for that (as the general report goeth) he firſt inſtructed the Perſians in the true uſe of military diſcipline, who thereby of late have atchieved many great and famous victories againſt the Turks and others[15]."

Sir Charles Shirley had an early attachment to literature. In 1639, Bancroft's "Two Books of Epigrams and Epitaphs" were dedicated, "To two top-branches of Gentry, ſir Charles Shirley [the third] Baronet, and William Davenport, Eſq.;" the firſt book being addreſſed to ſir Charles:

"This verſe (whoſe Author was ſo near you bred)
Seems to run ſtraight to you for patronage,
As to a brave bed, that hath promiſed
The fruit of honour in maturer age:
Deign then theſe leaves to ſweeten with your Spring's Fair growth, and liſten while a blackbird ſings."

The following lines conclude the firſt Book, addreſſed alſo to the ſame reſpectable baronet:

"Could I but coin you in my mind, you ſhould
Be of the right ſtamp, as were all your old Forefathers, men of merit and renown,
Whoſe meaneſt puts our modern Nobles down.
Their houſes ſeem'd as hoſpitals for poor,
And Charity ſtill waited at their door;
As Fame will upon you, whilſt you aſpire,
To equal their deſert, and my deſire."

Sir Charles Shirley was a conſiderable ſufferer by the civil war: June 8, 1646, he paid to the Committee at Haberdaſhers hall £600. for the 20th and 5th part of his whole eſtate, by virtue of an ordinance of parliament of Aug. 12, 1645, on the public faith of the kingdom[1]; and died early in that year, unmarried.

Sir Robert Shirley, the fourth baronet, brother to Charles, and the only ſurviving ſon of ſir Henry, was an early and zealous advocate for the cauſe of his royal maſter; which involved him, at the latter end of May 1648, in a diſpute with the parliamentary garriſon at Aſhby de la Zouch; and was attended with ſerious conſequences. The particulars of the charge againſt him are here ſtated from original documents.

"1. That ſir Robert Shirley, with his men and ſome malignants, being drinking at Aſhby de la Zouch, ſome of his men quarrelled in the ſtreet there with a ſoldier of that garriſon for the parliament; and ſir Robert did ride up to them with his ſword by his ſide, and ſaid he would juſtify the men in doing it.

"2. That, ſir Robert Shirley being diſarmed by the ſoldier, he did ride up with his men to the guard of the garriſon, and refuſed to ſtand or ſtay when the guard willed him ſo to do; ſaying he would come in; and ſome of his men ſtruck the ſoldiers on guard, which occaſioned a tumult. And the governor coming forth, pacified it, and took ſir Robert into his chamber there; where ſir Robert ſaid, "he would juſtify his men in what they had done, though they had killed ſome of the ſoldiers."

"3. That, ſir Robert Shirley being there afterwards, he wiſhed two of his men to bring up his cornet and his troop; and thereupon, being ſent away with a guard to Leiceſter, he ſaid he had 100 muſkets hid in a coal-pit, and 25 caſe of piſtols hid there; and that his colliers would be plundering the governor's chamber.

"4. That, ſir Robert Shirley being thereupon confined to Leiceſter, and ſome priſoners of quality brought in from Willoughby fight, ſir Robert went to the marſhal's houſe without leave, and beſtowed ſtore of wine and bread on them, and ſate up moſt part of the night in private converſe and ſpeech with them.

"5. That, ſir Robert Shirley afterwards gave colours to divers malignants in Leiceſter; the committee there at the ſame time liſting and giving colours for the parliament."

"Primo Junii, 1648. Sir Robert Shirley, examinated to the charge for the buſineſs at Aſhby de Zouch upon Tueſday laſt, confeſſeth that he had his ſword by his ſide; but denies that he rode up to aſſiſt his men quarreling there. He urged to know the ſoldier's name, becauſe he ſaid that one of his men's horſe had trodden on his toe, that, if any damage came upon it, he might know who was dampnified by it, and that ſir Robert himſelf might not receive prejudice upon further diſpute of it. He ſaith that the ſoldier which took away his ſword led his horſe by the bridle; and denies that he rode up to the guard to his knowledge; but went as he was led, and aſked for Mr. Bainbrigge the governor, to ſpeak with him about the buſineſs in the town. He confeſſeth he ſaid, that if they would be pleaſed to let his ſervants go, he would be reſponſible for them if they would take his word for it; and denies any other ſpeech of juſtifying his men in what they did, to his knowledge. He confeſſeth Mr. Bainbrigge offered to take his word for his forthcoming to the committee here on Thurſday morning; and he was thankful to him for it; and told him he was a minor, and under age[2], and thought the time ſo ſpent that he had rather tarry by it than go home. He denies that he had any of his men bringing up his cornet and his troop; only he ſaid to the guard with him in the ſtreet, "March in my troop," going from the town towards the Angel in Aſhby. He ſaith that ſome troopers queſtioning him by the way of his forces and colliers, he ſaid, they were all plundering the town of Aſhby. And being aſked by ſome of thoſe that brought him to Leiceſter for his arms, and of the 25 caſe of piſtols which he brought from London, he ſaid that they were in a coal-pit; and the like for the muſkets: for, the ordinary troop queſtioning him with many queſtions, he was ſo perplexed, and aſked beyond himſelf, that he gave them any anſwer he firſt thought of, there being no officer that examined him, which made him take the leſs care what he ſaid to them, and ſcarce knows or remembers what they aſked, or what he anſwered them. And denies that he hath or had any ſuch muſkets or piſtols in any coal-pit or elſewhere, whatſoever he ſaid to thoſe troops, to whom he held himſelf not bound to give a particular account. He confeſſeth that he hath five or ſix guns, and not other arms to his beſt remembrance. And denies that he hath or had any cornet or troop." It does not appear in what manner this unpleaſant diſpute was ended.

Sir Robert Shirley married, in or about 1647, Catharine, daughter of Humphrey Okeover, of Okeover, co. Stafford, and Wimeſwould, co. Leiceſter, eſq. and ſiſter to ſir Rowland Okeover, knt.; by whom he had iſſue three ſons; 1. Seymour, his ſucceſſor; 2. Sewallis, who died an infant; and, 3. Robert, afterwards the ſeventh baronet. Alſo two daughters; Catharine, married to Peter Venables, eſq. baron of Kinderton, in the county palatine of Cheſter; and Dorothy, married to George Vernon, of Sudbury, co. Derby, eſq.; from whom the preſent lord Vernon is deſcended.

The loyalty of ſir Robert, in ſeveral other inſtances, having drawn on him the vengeance of the uſurping powers, he was on ſeven different occaſions impriſoned.

On the 4th of May, 1650, a warrant was iſſued from the council of ſtate, to ſeize, inventory, and ſecure, all the eſtates, real and perſonal, of ſir Robert Shirley, bart. accuſed of high delinquency; and he was himſelf ſent to the Tower of London as a cloſe priſoner, by an order of the council of ſtate, as appears by the following letter:

"Atkinſon, I deſire that a petition be drawn, and preſented to the lord preſident[3] and the council of ſtate, to deſire (if they think fit) that I may have the benefit of a ſervant, and the liberty of the Tower; and that you take the advice of counſel herein, that you put nothing in the petition but what is fitting for me to aſk, and reaſonable for them to grant; but be ſure it be done with all civility as may be, as knowing to whom it is to be preferred. This is all I have to ſay, but that I am your loving maſter,

From the Tower, May 29, 1650. ROBERT SHIRLEY."

"To the right honourable the lord preſident and the reſt of the council of ſtate.

"My Lord; I have aſſumed the boldneſs to be a moſt humble ſuitor to your lordſhip on the behalf of my maſter ſir Robert Shirley, that your honours may be pleaſed to do him the noble favour to cauſe this his humble petition to be read. Your honours' moſt humble ſervant, ANTHONY ATKINSON."

"The humble petition of ſir Robert Shirley, bart. now your honours' priſoner in the Tower;

"Sheweth, that he being committed cloſe priſoner by your honours' command, humbly deſireth that you will be pleaſed to admit William Drinkwater his ſervant to attend him during his reſtraint, and alſo that he may have the benefit and liberty of the ſaid Tower, to walk for his health. And he ſhall reſt much bound unto your honours for your noble favour towards him.

[2] The preciſe age of ſir Robert Shirley is not known, nor the date of his marriage; but, by this document, it appears that he was not of age in 1648; and by a petition in p. 714, that he had "a wife and children" in July 1650; in which year he made a ſettlement. His birth, therefore, may be fairly dated in 1629.

May 29, 1650. ROBERT SHIRLEY."

"To the keepers of Chartley parke.

"Having received information, that, by the appointment of the council of ſtate, the eſtate of ſir Robert Shirley, bart. is inventored; and having the experience of the liberty taken when ſuch occaſion is tendered of deſtruction of all ſorts of game, and knowing how plentifully Chartley park is ſtored, we hereby require you that you be as careful for the preſervation of the ſaid game of the ſaid parke as formerly you have been; and that in caſe any perſon ſhall attempt the deſtruction of any of the ſaid game of the ſaid park, that you cauſe them to be brought before ſome juſtice of peace for this county, that they be proceeded againſt according to law. Given under our hands this 18th of May, 1650, THO. CROMPTON,

(A true copy.) F. DANVERS.

THO. ADSHEDS."

"To the right honourable the council of ſtate:

"The humble petition of ſir Robert Shirley, bart.

"Sheweth, That your petitioner, by your former favours to him (which with all thankfulneſs he acknowledgeth) is emboldened to inform your honours, that he is indebted to ſeveral perſons in very great ſums of money, for his father's, his brother's, and his own proper debt, and likewiſe by a ſurcharge of his moiety of the late earl of Eſſex's eſtates, your petitioner paying £200. per annum more than the ſame is worth at preſent.

"That your petitioner, by your honours' late ſecuring of his eſtate, is altogether diſabled to ſatisfy his creditors, many whereof will fall into inevitable ruin, if not timely prevented by payment; and likewiſe altogether unprovided for a preſent livelihood for himſelf, wife, children, and family.

"The premiſes tenderly conſidered, your petitioner's humble bequeſt is, that your honours would be pleaſed to recall all your warrants from the committees for ſecuring your petitioner's eſtate in the ſeveral counties; and that your petitioner may be permitted to receive the iſſues and profits thereof, whereby he may be enabled to pay his juſt debts, and provide for himſelf and his family. And your petitioner ſhall ever pray, &c. July 10, 1650."

On the 30th of Auguſt, and again on the 11th of September, he thus renewed his application:

"To the right honourable the lord preſident and council of ſtate.

"The humble petition of ſir Robert Shirley, bart.

"Sheweth, That your petitioner hath been impriſoned in the Tower of London ever ſince May laſt. And being called before your honours, nothing (as he humbly conceives) was proved againſt him, and (as he aſſuredly hopes) nothing can be, to deſerve your diſpleaſure, or his farther reſtraint.

"That your petitioner's eſtate (now under ſecurement, as he is informed, by order from this honourable board) is incumbered with divers debts, dowers, and annuities, of very great value, which are to be paid at Michaelmas next, on great forfeitures; which, if not performed by your petitioner, will cauſe the utter ruin of your petitioner's fortune and reputation.

"In conſideration whereof, your petitioner humbly beſeecheth this honourable board to grant his liberty (on good ſureties) and to free his eſtates, that he may diſcharge thoſe engagements which are juſtly due, and relieve himſelf, his wife, and family. And your petitioner ſhall ever pray, &c. ROBERT SHIRLEY."

Oct. 5, 1650, he for the laſt time petitioned for his liberty, that he might be able to furniſh the 13 horſes and arms charged on his eſtate. This application had its due weight; and he was for a time diſcharged from cuſtody.

The amiable diſpoſition of this excellent young baronet may be judged of from the following fact:

"Sir Robert Shirley pulled down an old ruinous church at Staunton Harold, and in place thereof, at his own charges, built a new one, complete for the workmanſhip; plentiful and honourable for the furniture, ornaments, and endowment; but moſt admirable for the time wherein the ſame was undertaken and finiſhed, it being then when the roofs of our cathedrals were generally pulled down, and the foundation of all other churches undermined: the time and manner of which work is ſet forth by an inſcription over the entrance thus:

'In the yeare 1653,
when all thinges ſacred were throughout ye Nation either demoliſht or profaned;
ſir ROBERT SHIRLEY, Barronet, founded this Church;
whoſe ſingular praiſe it is,
to have done the beſt things in ye worſt times, and hoped them in the moſt calamitous.

The Righteous ſhall be had in everlaſting remembrance.'

By which beneficence the devout founder, both heir and anceſtor of hereditary devotion and loyalty, hath not only built a church; but, in his example and memory, hath left a ſermon to be preached there, to all poſterity, of piety towards God, and charity towards man[1]; whilſt himſelf is gone, we doubt not, to take his place in the Church Triumphant above."

The above inſcription (which we have introduced in the words of Mr. Staveley[2]) is on a tablet of white marble; over which remain the arms of Shirley, impaling Okeover, and the creſts of each carved in ſtone; and on each ſide a large figure of an angel.

"It being told the uſurping powers then reigning, that ſir Robert Shirley had built a church, they directed an order of council to him to fit out a ſhip; ſaying, he that could afford to build a church, could, no doubt, afford alſo to equip a man of war. And thus he, and other good men, were endeavoured to be frighted from doing any works of piety[3]."

How ſoon after this he was again impriſoned, we do not learn; but by his laſt will, dated Nov. 29, 1654, he gave £1000. to be diſpoſed of unto ſuch diſtreſſed perſons as had loſt their eſtates in the ſervice of the late king Charles, in ſuch manner as his executors ſhould think fit. In caſe the church he was then building at Staunton Harold ſhould not be finiſhed before his death, he bequeathed ſo much as his executors ſhould think convenient to perfect the ſame according to his intention; and directs reſtitution to be made of whatever rents or profits he had received of any impropriation, tithes, or lands belonging to any churches, chapels, &c.; the ſame to be diſtributed among orthodox and diſtreſſed clergymen, at the diſcretion of his executors. To his dear ſiſter Leta Burke, wife of William Burke, eſq. he gives an annuity of £200. to continue till ſhe or her huſband come to the quiet poſſeſſion and enjoyment of their lands in Ireland. To Mrs. Catharine Sheldon an annuity of £100. To his ſiſter Burke a ring of £100. value. To his brother in law Burke the beſt horſe in his ſtable; and to his loving friend Mr. John Morton the next beſt. To his dear friend colonel Vere Cromwell £200.; and to his couſin L. Burdett £100.

He died in the Tower, in the very prime of life (not having attained his 28th year) Nov. 6, 1656, not without ſuſpicion of poiſon; and at his death, a funeral ſermon was preached from Luke vii. 5. He loved our country much, and hath built us a ſynagogue[4].

The will was proved at London, June 14, 1657; and adminiſtration granted to dame Catharine; power being reſerved to the executors, Gilbert Sheldon, D.D. Jeffrey Palmer, eſq. and Anthony Atkinſon, gent.[1]

Sir Robert's portrait is engraved in Plate XCV. by the munificence of his immediate deſcendant the preſent earl Ferrers; to whoſe condeſcenſion I am proud to acknowledge the favour of much material aſſiſtance in the arduous progreſs of compiling the preſent Hiſtory.

In a book, wherein is kept a number of official letters ſigned by Charles I. to one of his lordſhip's anceſtors, is a letter of condolence (of which Plate XCVI. is a fac-ſimile) paſted within the cover of the book, written by Charles II. to dame Catharine Shirley, after the death of her huſband. This lady ſurvived till October 1672.

Sir Seymour Shirley, the fifth baronet, married Feb. 6, 1666, lady Diana, daughter to Robert earl of Ayleſbury; and dying July 20, 1667, left his lady enceint; and in January 1667-8 ſhe was delivered of a poſthumous ſon and heir. She was afterwards re-married to John lord Ros; and died in July 1672.

Sir Robert Shirley, the ſixth baronet, died in March 1668-9, aged 14 months; and was ſucceeded by his uncle,

Sir Robert Shirley, the ſeventh baronet, born at Eaſt Sheen, Oct. 20, 1650, during his father's impriſonment in the Tower. On the death of Robert Devereux, the laſt earl of Eſſex[2] of that name (only ſon of Robert beheaded in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and brother of Dorothy who became the wife of ſir Henry Shirley as aforeſaid), without iſſue, which happened Sept. 14, 1646; the earldoms of Eſſex and Eu becoming extinct, and the title of viſcount Hereford devolving on ſir Walter Devereux, of Caſtle-Bromwich, co. Warwick, the principal remaining branch of that family; king Charles II. reſtored to ſir Robert Shirley, bart. the title of lord Ferrers of Chartley (which was in abeyance between him and the marquis of Hertford, who married Frances ſiſter and coheireſs with Dorothy); and who accordingly, by that title, was called by writ to the houſe of peers, Dec. 14, 1677, and took his place according to the antient writ of ſummons (to John de Ferrars his lineal anceſtor) Feb. 6, 27 Edw. I. On this occaſion he obtained the following grant of ſupporters (the ſame as thoſe borne by the family of Devereux earl of Eſſex) from ſir William Dugdale, Garter king at arms:

"To all and ſingular, &c. ſir William Dugdale, knt. Garter, &c. Whereas our ſovereign lord king Charles II. taking into his princely conſideration the ſpecial ſervices of ſir Robert Shirley, of Staunton Harold, in the county of Leiceſter, bart. deceaſed, which were by him performed to his maſter at ſuch a time as he was conſtrained for his refuge to betake himſelf into foreign parts from the danger of the late uſurpers: as alſo the preſent merits of ſir Robert Shirley, bart. ſon and heir to the ſaid ſir Robert, and grandſon and heir to the lady Dorothy, one of the ſiſters to Robert late earl of Eſſex, viſcount Hereford and lord Ferrers, and, by the death of the ſaid earl without iſſue, coheir to the lands of his inheritance; hath been graciouſly pleaſed, by his writ under the great ſeal of England, bearing date the 14th day of this inſtant December, to ſummon him the ſaid ſir Robert Shirley to this preſent Parliament now ſitting at Weſtminſter, by the title of lord Ferrers, there to conſult and adviſe touching the moſt important affairs of the realm; which title of lord Ferrers deſcended to the ſaid earl of Eſſex by lineal ſucceſſion from Walter Devereux (his anceſtor); who, having married Anne the ſole daughter and heir to William lord Ferrers, was in the ſecond year of king Edward IV. ſummoned to parliament as lord Ferrers, but, by the death of the ſaid earl without iſſue, hath till now been in abeyance, &c. &c.: And whereas it is an eſpecial and peculiar right and preheminence belonging to the peers of this realm (whereof the ſaid ſir Robert Shirley now lord Ferrers is one) to have certain ſupporters to their arms, &c.: Now know ye therefore, that I the ſaid Garter, &c. In witneſs whereof I have hereunto ſubſcribed my name, and affixed the ſeal of my office, the 31ſt day of December, in the 29th year of the reign of our ſovereign lord Charles II. by the grace of God, king of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. annoque Dñi 1677. (Signed) WILLIAM DUGDALE, Garter."

Lord Ferrers was maſter of the horſe and ſteward of the houſhold to queen Catharine, conſort of king Charles II; ſworn of the privy council of king William May 25, 1699; and again, in the reign of queen Anne, Nov. 25, 1708. Sept. 3, 1711, he was advanced to the dignity of viſcount Tamworth and earl Ferrers; the preamble of the patent of creation running thus: "Nothing can be a more acceptable ſubject of our royal favour, than that virtue which is conſpicuous in noblemen, and is kept up by a ſtrict regard to their blood and dignity. Since, therefore, our very faithful and beloved counſellor Robert lord Ferrers of Chartley, deſcended by the father's ſide from a very antient family, being chief among thoſe of the equeſtrian order; but, by the grandmother's ſide, who was co-heireſs of the noble earls of Eſſex, uniting in himſelf the illuſtrious blood of York and Ferrers, was thought worthy by our uncle, of happy memory, King Charles the Second, to revive the ſeat and title which was due to ſuch great names, and, as it were, almoſt extinct: We farther, favouring that equitable purpoſe of our Predeceſſor, and having regard to the unblemiſhed reputation, approved fidelity, and ſteady virtue of this excellent Lord, are willing to honour him with the ſplendour of a higher title in our moſt auguſt Houſe of Peers, where he has always been the firſt propoſer or aſſertor of ſuch councils as were for the good of the Commonwealth. Now know ye, &c."

Mr. Wolley, who about this period compiled his MS Hiſtory of Derbyſhire, ſays, "Staunton Harold is a noble ſeat, well becoming the antiquity of the family it belongs to. It has a handſome new front towards the gardens, which are large and good; on one ſide whereof, Weſtward, there is a very good ſtudy or library. The gardens are well watered with fountains and canals, very good aviaries, a decoy, and ſtations for a great many exotic fowls. The park and woods about it are large, and reach within half a mile of Caulk, and a mile of Melbourne; but, being ſeated in a clay ſoil, it is ſomewhat dirty coming to it. On the South-eaſt ſide is a very handſome well-built ſtone church with a fine ſteeple. The Eaſt end of the church abuts on a very large canal, the biggeſt in all the county. The gardens lie on the North-weſt ſide of the houſe, conſiſting of ſeveral parterres in eaſy deſcents from the houſe, which add a gracefulneſs to the one and the other. In this lordſhip are coal-delphs; but, there being better coal got, and in great quantities, and at low charge, at Cole Orton, about a mile off Weſtward, thoſe at preſent (1712) are not much wrought[3]."

Mackay, in his Tour through England, early in the reign of George I. calls Staunton-Harold "a noble ſeat, as big as a little town, and the garden adorned with ſtatues;" and, ſpeaking of the firſt earl Ferrers, adds, "This noble lord is of an eminent and antient family; he keeps as hoſpitable an houſe, and entertains as nobly, as any peer of the realm."

Robert earl Ferrers was twice married; had a large family by each lady; and died Dec. 25, 1717.

By his firſt wife, Elizabeth daughter and heir to Laurence Waſhington, of Gareſdon, co. Wilts, eſq. (one of the juſtices of the court of . . . .) to whom he was married in 1671, and who died in October 1693, he had iſſue ten ſons and ſeven daughters;

1. Robert, and 2. Waſhington; of both whom hereafter.

3. Charles, born April 9, 1682;
4. Another Charles, born Jan. 21, 1684;
5. Lewis, born July 13, 1685;
6. George, born Oct. 20, 1686;
7. Ferrers, born April 23, 1689;
8. Walter, born May 27, 1690;

} all died young.

[2] Of this nobleman's father earl Ferrers poſſeſſes a fine portrait, with dark brown hair, long beard, and whiſkers; a very large ruff, under which appears a blue ribbon ſuſpended from his neck. He is elegantly dreſſed in white and gold ſattin, over which is a black cloak or mantle.

9. Henry, born Nov. 14, 1691; and 10. Laurence, born Sept. 26, 1693; of both whom alſo hereafter.

The daughters were,

1. Elizabeth, and, 2. Catharine; both died young.

3. Elizabeth, born Jan. 20, 1678; married Walter Clarges, eſq half-brother to ſir Thomas Clarges, bart.

4. Anna-Eleanora, born Nov. 12, 1679; died in May 1754.

5. Catharine; died unmarried Sept. 23, 1736.

6. Dorothy, born May 24, 1683; married to John Cotes, eſq. of Woodcote, Shropſhire, and had iſſue.

7. Barbara, born Feb. 5, 1688.

Robert (the eldeſt ſon), born Sept. 4, 1673, married, 1ſt, Catharine, daughter of Peter Venables, baron of Kinderton; and ſhe deceaſing in her nonage, he married, ſecondly (Sept. 27, 1688) Anne, daughter of ſir Humphrey Ferrers, of Tamworth caſtle, knt. who died in March, 1697.

This Robert Shirley, who died Feb. 25, 1698-9, had by his ſecond lady one daughter and three ſons;

1. Robert, born Dec. 28, 1692; who, on his grandfather's being created earl Ferrers in 1711, acquired the title of lord viſcount Tamworth; and, dying unmarried July 5, 1714, in his 22d year, was buried at Staunton Harold, with a handſome monument[1].

2. Ferrers, born 1697, was entered as a nobleman at Chriſt Church, Oxford, April 26, 1710. He died on the 10th of October following; and was buried in the college chapel, where a mural tablet is thus inſcribed by the hand of early friendſhip:

> "Memoriæ ſacrum > viri honorabilis FERRERS SHIRLEY, > filii natu ſecundi > honoratiſſimi vicecomitis de Tamworth[2], > (honoratiſſimi Roberti comitis de Ferrers > filii natu maximi:)
> annos abhinc circiter quinquaginta
> Ædis Chriſti ſuperioris ordinis commenſalis; > adoleſcentis vultu adeo honeſto ac liberali, > et moribus adeo puris atque illibatis > ut nihil ſupra.
> Honoratiſſimus Jacob vicecomes de Folkeſtone > ejuſdem Ædis, ordinis, ac temporis, > arctiſſimo Neceſſitudinis vinculo > nimis heu! brevi conjunctus, > priſtinæ non immemor amicitiæ, > pignus hoc fidei tumulo ſuperſtitis > excitari teſtamento juſſit, 1761."

3. Thomas, died May 10, 1708, ſ. p.

Elizabeth, their only ſiſter and heireſs, born in Auguſt 1694, was married in 1716 to James Compton earl of Northampton; became in 1717, on her grandfather's death, baroneſs De Ferrars of Chartley, Bourchier, Baſſet of Drayton, and Louvaine; and, dying March 13, 1741, Charlotte her only ſurviving daughter ſucceeded to her mother's titles; and in 1751 was married to the hon. George Townſhend (the preſent marquis); and, dying Sept. 13, 1770, her eldeſt ſon George became baron de Ferrars, &c.; and, by patent, dated May 18, 1784, was advanced to the dignity of earl of the county of Leiceſter; and is alſo heir to the marquiſate of Townſhend.

Waſhington (ſecond ſon of the firſt earl, born June 22, 1677), who in 1717 became ſecond earl Ferrers, and in 1725, and again in 1727, was conſtituted lord lieutenant of Staffordſhire, married Mary daughter of ſir Richard Levinz, bart. one of the judges of the king's bench in Ireland; and by her (who died 1740) had three daughters, coheirs; 1. Elizabeth, married June 24, 1725, to Joſeph Gaſcoigne Nightingale, of Mamhead, co. Devon, eſq. (by whom ſhe had one ſon, Waſhington Gaſcoigne, eſq. who died unmarried in 1754; and Elizabeth, who married William earl of Liſburne in the kingdom of Ireland, and died May 10, 1755, leaving iſſue.) Lady Elizabeth Nightingale died Aug. 17, 1731, æt. 27; and her huſband July 20, 1752, æt. 56; directing by his will a monument to be erected in Weſtminſter Abbey, which has immortalized their memories, and the fame of Roubilliac.

The other daughters of the ſecond earl were,

2. Selina, born 1705; married June 3, 1728, to Theophilus Haſtings earl of Huntingdon (ſhe was mother of the late earl of Huntingdon, and died in 1791, aged 87.)

3. Mary, married, June 29, 1730, Thomas Needham, viſcount Kilmorey of Ireland; and died, without iſſue, Aug. 4, 1767.

Earl Waſhington died April 14, 1729.

The next ſix ſons of the firſt earl, Charles, Charles, Lewis, George, Ferrers, Walter, all died unmarried.

Henry, the ninth ſon, ſucceeded, as third earl Ferrers, in 1729; was appointed lord lieutenant of Staffordſhire 1731; and died unmarried in Auguſt 1745.

Laurence, the tenth ſon of the firſt earl, "was a gentleman whoſe honour was inviolable, his good-nature engaging, and his religion ſerious; a moſt affectionate huſband, a tender parent, and a kind maſter[3]." He died April 27, 1743; having had iſſue, by Anne, daughter of ſir Walter Clarges, bart. of Aſton, Herts, (who died May 29, 1782), ſix ſons and ſix daughters.

Robert the firſt earl Ferrers married, ſecondly, in Auguſt 1699, Selina daughter of George Finch, eſq.; who ſurvived him nearly 45 years, and reſided in a large houſe at Twickenham[4], which the earl her huſband had built, not far from Mr. Pope's, on the oppoſite ſide of the lane, and where ſhe died in 1762[5]. This lady and one of her daughters are thus recorded on a flat ſtone on the North ſide of Twickenham church-yard:

> "Here lieth the right honourable Selina > counteſs dowager Ferrers, > who departed this life March 20, 1762,
> in the 80th year of her age.
> Alſo here lieth the body of > the honourable lady Mary Tryon, > widow of Charles Tryon, of Buckinghamſhire, eſq.
> daughter of Robert earl Ferrers, > who died May 17, 1771, aged 68."

By this lady his lordſhip had the following ten children, making in all twenty-ſeven:

1. Robert, born May 27, 1700; elected M. P. for Stamford 1727; died unmarried in July 1738.

2. George, died an infant, 1704.

3. George, born 1705; a captain in the firſt regiment of foot-guards; reſided at Twickenham in Middleſex, and at Eatendon, co. Warwick. He married Mary, daughter of Humphry Sturt, eſq. by whom he had two ſons, George[6] and Evelyn[7]; and two daughters, Selina[8] and Margaret[9]. He died Oct. 22, 1787[10], aged 82; and his widow died in 1799.

[3] Staunton Harold Family Regiſter, ſigned by his chaplain.

[4] This houſe had the advantage of very extenſive gardens and grounds; and a terrace facing the Thames, in the centre of which is a handſome ſummer-houſe of brick, with ſtone ornaments and a dome top, commanding an extenſive view of the river and the ſurrounding country. On the death of Selina counteſs Ferrers, it became the property of her ſon the hon. George Shirley; and at his death was purchaſed by the late Welbore Ellis, eſq. (afterwards lord Mendip), who was alſo the owner of Mr Pope's villa. The old houſe was very lately taken down, and a ſmall one erected in the meadow looking on the Thames; and on the ſite of the old houſe (of which the wings were left ſtanding) is erected a neat and commodious dwelling.

[6] Married firſt Miſs Wood, who died in 1784, ſ. p.; ſecondly, Miſs Stanley. He died March 15, 1793, ſ. p.

[7] Married Miſs Frampton of Dorſetſhire, and has iſſue.

[8] "Sir Thomas George Skipwith, bart. married at Marybone, Sept. 23, 1785, to Selina daughter of the honourable George Shirley." Pariſh Regiſter.—This lady is now living, a widow.

[9] Married, in 1782, John Smith, of Combhay, co. Somerſet; and has iſſue.

[10] He died and was buried at Eatendon, where he has a noble monument (for the expence of which his father had bequeathed £1000. with the intent of having his own monument erected in the chapel of Staunton Harold.) It is about 12 feet high, of a pyramidical form. On it are the figures, as large as life, of the earl and counteſs, his father and mother, in their robes, with their coronets in their hands; and in the centre is Mr. Shirley, in a recumbent poſture, in a ſuit of armour, with a truncheon in his hand; and a long inſcription of the intermarriages of the family: ſo that it is Mr. George Shirley's monument, not that of his father. Admiral Waſhington earl Ferrers objected to having this monument put up in Staunton Harold chapel for the foregoing reaſon.

6. Selina, ſecond wife to Peter Bathurſt, eſq. of Clarendon Park, Wilts; brother to Allen firſt earl Bathurſt; died Dec. 14, 1777, having had 5 ſons and 10 daughters.

7. Mary[1], married to Charles Tryon, eſq. of Buckinghamſhire; died May 17, 1771.

8. Anne, married, May 15, 1729, to ſir Robert Farneſe, bart. of Walderſhare, Kent. She was ſir Robert's third wife; and had by him one daughter Selina, married to the preſent ſir Edward Dering, bart. Sir Robert died March 14, 1733; his lady, Feb. 26, 1779.

9. Frances[2], died unmarried July 15, 1778.

10. Steuarta, died unmarried, January 1, 1768.

1. Laurence, fourth earl Ferrers, eldeſt ſon of the laſt-mentioned Laurence, and grandſon of the firſt earl, was born Auguſt 18, 1720. He married, Sept. 16, 1752, Mary, daughter of Amos Meredith, eſq. ſiſter to ſir William Meredith, bart. (who, after his lordſhip's death, married, March 28, 1769, lord Frederick Campbell, brother to John Campbell, the preſent duke of Argyle, and is ſtill living.) Leaving no iſſue, earl Laurence was ſucceeded in 1760 by his next brother,

2. Waſhington, fifth earl Ferrers; who was born May 26, 1722, and, after the neceſſary years of probation, as midſhipman, lieutenant, and commander, with high credit and reputation, was appointed, April 19, 1741, captain of the Fox frigate; and afterwards in ſeveral other ſhips (particularly in the Temple under ſir Edward Hawke in 1759) diſtinguiſhed himſelf. He was elected F. R. S. Dec. 14, 1761, in compliment to his obſervations on the tranſit of Venus, and other uſeful diſcoveries in mathematical and nautical knowledge; and was advanced, March 31, 1775, to the rank of rear-admiral; and Feb. 3, 1776, to that of vice-admiral. By his taſte the preſent ſplendid manſion at Staunton Harold was formed, the plan being wholly his own; and he lived to ſee it nearly finiſhed. The old edifice had two turrets and Gothic gates at the entrance. His lordſhip married Miſs Anne Elliot of Plymouth, by whom he had no iſſue. He died Oct. 1, 1778; and his counteſs March 26, 1791. He alſo was ſucceeded by his next brother,

3. Robert, ſixth and late earl Ferrers, who was born July 10, 1723; died April 17, 1787; and was buried at Bredon. He married Catharine, daughter of Rowland Cotton, of Etwall, in Derbyſhire, eſq. by whom (who died March 16, 1786, and was buried at Bredon by her own requeſt) he had iſſue, 1. Robert, the preſent earl; of whom hereafter. 2. Laurence-Rowland, born Nov. 2, 1757; and died in February 1772. 3. Waſhington, born Nov. 13, 1760, married, 1781, Frances daughter of the Hon. and Rev. William Ward, and firſt couſin to William the preſent viſcount Dudley and Ward; by whom he has iſſue one ſon, Robert-William, born 1783; and two daughters, Frances, born 1782, and Julia-Anne, born 1785.

4. Walter, born Sept. 28, 1725; entered into holy orders; married Henrietta Philips; and died April 7, 1786; leaving Walter, Frances, and another daughter.

5. Anne, born 1726; 6. Mary, born 1728; 7. Another Mary, born 1730; all died infants.

8. Elizabeth, born April 5, 1732; died Aug. 31, 1803.

9. Thomas, born April 7, 1733, having entered early into the royal navy, was promoted, Oct. 11, 1755, to the rank of lieutenant; poſt-captain Nov. 19, 1759; and ſoon after captain of the Kingſton; and deputy ranger of the Green Park, St. James's and Hyde parks. He married, March 30, 1773, Mary widow of ſir Stephen Anderſon, bart. and reſides at Horkſtow Hall, co. Linc.

10. Anne, born June 29, 1734; now living, 1803.

11. John, born Aug. 4, 1735; died young.

12. Jane, born Aug. 4, 1737; died an infant; was embalmed; and is depoſited in the vault at Staunton.

Robert the ſeventh and preſent earl Ferrers, eldeſt ſon of Robert the ſixth earl, born Sept. 21, 1756, had, by Elizabeth his firſt lady, Robert-Sewallis Shirley, commonly called lord Tamworth, who was born Nov. 9, 1778; and married, Sept. 5, 1800, Sophia-Carolina Curzon, daughter of the hon. Nathaniel Curzon (eldeſt ſon of Nathaniel lord Scarſdale) by Sophia daughter of Edward Noel late viſcount Wentworth. His lordſhip married, ſecondly, Elizabeth, youngeſt daughter of the late Wrightſon Mundy, eſq. of Markeaton, co. Derby, and of Oſbaſton, co. Leiceſter.

The manſion-houſe at Staunton Harold, the largeſt and moſt elegant diſplay of modern architecture in the county (ſee Plate XCVII.), is a light and elegant ſquare building, backed by a fine wood, in contraſt with a wild heath at a due diſtance, and a variety of delightful ſcenery ſurrounds it (ſee Plate XCVIII.)

The South-eaſt, or grand front, is in the ſtyle of Palladio; the pediment ſupported by Ionic pillars, and thoſe again upheld by columns of the Doric order. The centre of this front is of ſtone, the reſt brick ornamented with ſtone. On the pediment ſtand three lively figures from the antique. On the other parts of the manſion are alſo ſome ſpirited caſts, one of which is an exceedingly large lion, on the South-weſt front. This front is very extenſive, and built in the form of a Roman H. On the North-eaſt is the library front, originally deſigned by Inigo Jones, and nearly preſerved in the preſent ſtructure.

Beſides ſeveral other good rooms in this noble edifice, about 60 in all, is a with-drawing room, 38 feet long, hung with a rich paper, repreſenting blue damaſk, edged with a gold carved border.

The firſt apartment you enter in the South front is the hall, which is about 48 feet by 38 feet and 16 feet high. On the left is the principal dining-room, 45 by 30; beyond which is a room of good ſize, and a ſtair-caſe. From the right ſide of the hall, on entering a veſtibule, the grand ſtair-caſe appears. The common dining-parlour, which is adjoining, is 30 feet by 20; beyond which is a handſome with-drawing room of good dimenſions. All theſe rooms are 16 feet high.

The library is 16 feet high, meaſures not leſs than 72 feet by 18, and abounds with choice and valuable works. In it are buſts in marble, by Scheemaker, of Laurence and Anne Shirley; and of Laurence, Waſhington, Elizabeth, and Anne Shirley, their children

On the SHIRLEY pedigree (which, when unrolled, reaches more than half the length of this large room) are richly emblazoned the arms and ſeveral monuments and portraits of that antient and noble family; with copious abſtracts of ſeveral of their wills, deeds, &c.

In the library are alſo ſeveral curioſities, brought from India by one of the family; amongſt others, the complete works of Confucius (the Chineſe philoſopher) in 16 ſmall quarto volumes, bound in Turkey leather.

[1] "Mr. Tryon and the honourable Mary Shirley were married, in the Biſhop's chapel at Fulham, by licence, May 3, 1722."

[2] Of this lady, when young, there was a fine whole length portrait, in a riding-habit and hat, in the old family-houſe at Twickenham; and there is ſtill a portrait in crayons at York-place in that village; the reſidence of James Whitchurch, eſq. She was celebrated in the well-known ballad of "Fanny, blooming fair," uſually aſcribed to lord Cheſterfield, but which was more probably written by Mr. Thomas Philips, a dramatic bard, to whom it was attributed ſo early as in 1733; and for whoſe benefit, as the author of that particular ballad, a play was acted at the Haymarket, May 26, 1736; and in the account of whoſe death, in the Daily Poſt, March 12, 1739, he is again poſitively called the author of that ſong: nor does it appear that his claim to it was ever contradicted; yet lord Cheſterfield ſeems to have permitted its inſertion in Dodſley's Collection, with other pieces written by him.—To this lady Mr. Pope addreſſed a beautiful little poem *, on receiving from her "a ſtandiſh and two pens;' and Dr. Warton mentions her as "a lady whoſe great merit Mr. Pope took a real pleaſure in celebrating †."

* To enter into the ſpirit of the Poet's Addreſs, it is neceſſary to premiſe that he was threatened with a proſecution in the Houſe of Lords, for "The Epilogue to the Satires." On which, with great reſentment againſt his enemies, for not being willing to diſtinguiſh between "Grave Epiſtles bringing Vice to light," and licentious Libels, he began a third Dialogue, more ſevere and ſublime than the firſt and ſecond; which being no ſecret, matters were ſoon compromiſed. His enemies agreed to drop the proſecution, and he promiſed to leave the third Dialogue unfiniſhed and ſuppreſſed. This affair occaſioned this little beautiful poem, to which it alludes throughout, but more eſpecially in the four laſt ſtanzas.

Here is alſo a very curious old bugle-horn, or elephant's tooth formed like one; on which are ſome beautiful figures of dogs purſuing ſtags, and every ſpecies of game uſually hunted, all equally well executed, ſuppoſed by Benvenuto Cellini. This much reſembles Ulphus's horn, ſhewn at the cathedral of York, which is alſo an elephant's tooth; but not ſo richly carved, nor ſo well executed as this, though the ſubject is the ſame.

The principal pictures at Staunton Harold, moſt of which were purchaſed by the preſent earl, and the remainder are become his private property, are theſe:

In the Hall.

A Crucifixion, unfiniſhed, in chiaro oſcuro, ſuppoſed to be by Michael Angelo; the drawing very fine.

Sir Robert Shirley, by Vandyke. His lady by Lely.

A large picture, repreſenting General Monk receiving Charles II.; in bad condition.

A Man Cook, and an old Woman, by Vander Vaart.

Apollo chaſing away Night and her attendants, by Simon Vouet; a pair of excellent flower-pieces, by Baptiſta; and ſome other pictures.

Dining Parlour.

One of Wright's beſt pieces, the Lecture on the Orrery; it is an extraordinary performance; but the engravings from it are ſo numerous, that it needs not a minute deſcription. The perſon taking notes repreſents Mr. Burdett, a celebrated ſurveyor and mathematician[1]. The other figures are all portraits; and the little boy is intended for Mr. Laurence-Rowland Shirley, who was brother to the preſent earl.

Portraits of the firſt earl when baron Ferrers, and his lady, by Lely; alſo ſome of their daughters.

A dead peacock and a hare, by old Wœnix, is in a maſterly ſtyle; and a landſcape, figures, and ruins, by Wynants, in his beſt manner.

Old Dining Parlour.

Over the chimney-piece is a large picture of a Crucifixion, by Carraci; very fine.

A ſmall full-length of Charles II. in his robes; very highly finiſhed.

Six large portraits of Ladies, ſuppoſed by Lely; one of them appears to be Charles the Second's Queen.

Decollation of St. John; in indifferent condition.

Two Flemiſh landſcapes; but indifferent.

Library.

A good portrait of Shakſpeare; painter unknown.

The Laſt Judgement, by Reubens[2]; very fine.

Great Drawing-room.

An excellent Venus with Cupids, by Corregio.

Six Ladies, king Charles's Beauties, duplicates of thoſe at Hampton Court Palace, and painted by ſir Peter Lely. Theſe, together with portraits of king Charles, and ſome other pictures, were given by that Monarch to Robert earl Ferrers; to whom, after the profeſſions in his letter to his mother, he might have made good thoſe promiſes in a more liberal manner; but it is not always the cuſtom of princes to demonſtrate their gratitude to thoſe who have ſacrificed their lives or property in their ſervice.

A very large picture, in which are full length figures of the firſt earl Ferrers (when baron) in armour, his lady, two ſons, and two daughters; a well-painted picture, by Vander Vaart.

Hon. Laurence Shirley and his lady.

Lady Catharine Shirley.

Mary counteſs Ferrers, wife of Waſhington ſecond earl Ferrers.

A boy blowing bubbles, by M. Angelo Carravagio.

Two good landſcapes, by Berghem.

Head of the Virgin, by Raphael; fine.

Encampment of an army, and its companion, a battle, both by Wowvermans; very fine.

Ruins and figures, by Giſolphi; a Sea-port, and ſhips careening, with its companion, in a good ſtyle, by a Venetian maſter; and ſome other pictures.

Best Bedchamber and Dressing-room.

Over the chimney is a picture of live fowls, by young Wœnix; very ſpirited.

King Charles II. in the dreſs of the order of the Garter; ſuppoſed by Vandyke.

The firſt Lord Tamworth, when a youth, by Vander Vaart; very fine.

Waſhington earl Ferrers, ſon of the firſt earl.

Suſannah and the Elders, by Pelegrino.

A land ſtorm, by Pouſſin; a good picture.

A ſmall battle piece by Bourganioni; very fine.

A ſmall picture of cattle; indifferent.

And ſome good portraits of Italian noblemen.

Billiard-room.

Over the chimney-piece is a view of Staunton-Harold, in its antient ſtate.

William the Third; and George prince of Denmark.

Several portraits of ladies and gentlemen; ſome of them by Lely.

Earl Ferrers's Dressing Room.

Over the chimney piece is a good landſcape, with nymphs ſacrificing to Flora, by Globler and Lareſſe.

Sir Robert Shirley[3], the Perſian general, a head only, in a turban, &c.; an old picture, and damaged.

A good miniature of the favourite earl of Eſſex.

And ſome more landſcapes and portraits.

Earl Ferrers is the ſole proprietor of the lordſhip of Staunton Harold, conſiſting chiefly of corn lands and wood and ſome meadows, let, at an average, for about 22*s.* an acre; and containing within it 52 houſes of different ſorts (including a range of colliers houſes, conſtituting a ſort of village called Lount); and 287 inhabitants, 144 males; 143 females. Of theſe 52 are chiefly employed in agriculture, 6 of them being farmers keeping teams; and 18 in trade or manufactures[4].

The ſoil is fertile generally, except near the collieries. In the valleys the air is rather moiſt; but on the hills dry and clear, and upon the whole healthy.

Sand, lime-ſtone, iron-ſtone, and coal, are found here, but no gravel. Some veins of lead alſo are upon the eſtate; and formerly a ſhaft was driven to purſue a vein of lead in the lime-ſtone: but no very conſiderable quantity was obtained; and the expence of getting proved very great.—The coal and lime works are lately become very extenſive; and the price of coals is riſen from 6*s.* (when his lordſhip let the collieries) to 18*s.* and even 20*s.* a load.

The Park contains about 150 acres of land, and has in it about 80 or 100 head of remarkably fine deer. It was diſparked by Waſhington earl Ferrers; but the preſent earl repaired the fence, and re-ſtocked it.

A fine ſheet of water, or lake, of conſiderable extent, adorned with ſwans, runs through great part of it; at the upper end of which is a pond of ſeven acres, conſtituting a fine piece of water, called The Church Pool; over the lower end of which, and next the lake, is built a handſome bridge, correſponding with the houſe. The lake covers a ſpace of between 20 and 30 acres, and is 18 or 20 feet deep about the wideſt part; it is half a mile long, about a quarter of a mile wide, and the head of it is a remarkable height. It produces carp, tench, eels, pike of an immenſe ſize, large perch, bream, and the inferior ſorts of fiſh in abundance. The other ponds produce the ſame. The brooks, ſome few trout and cray-fiſh. At the counteſs of Huntingdon's wedding here, in 1728, a carp was dreſſed, which weighed 24 pounds.

The lordſhip alſo abounds with every ſpecies of game uſually found in the county of Leiceſter; and the numbers of pools and ponds attract plenty of wild ducks and other water-fowl; as the woods and ſand-hills near them furniſh large ſupplies of pheaſants, rabbits, &c.—There is a very cold mineral ſpring in one of the woods; where has been a bath, of which the ſteps and veſtiges remain.

[1] Mr. P. Burdett (who was afterwards chief-engineer to the prince of Baden in Germany) received in 1768, from the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, their prize for the County Map of Derbyſhire, in ſix ſheets, on a ſcale of one inch to a mile, from an actual ſurvey; with another on a reduced ſheet. Mr. Mitchell ſaid it was by much the beſt Engliſh County Map we have. The plates were ſold, among Mr. John Chapman's, Dec. 14, 1784, for 54 guineas. Mr. Burdett was alſo employed by Mr. Prior to take the ſurvey of Leiceſterſhire; which he was prevented from completing by his engagement with the prince of Baden.

[3] Of whom, and of his lady, ſee a particular account in pp. 721, 722.

[4] From the Return to Parliament, 1801.

The CHAPEL, (ſee Plate XCII.)

dedicated to The Holy Trinity, conſiſts of a beautiful embattled tower (in which are ſix good bells, inſcribed "Sir Robert Shirley, Founder, 1653"); a nave and two ailes, ſeparated by three arches, over which are clereſtory windows; and a very handſome chancel, parted from the nave by elegant wrought iron gates, on which are the family arms, ſupporters, and coronet.

The cieling is painted; and the aſcent to the altar is by three ſteps of blueiſh marble.

The chancel is paved with marble.

The furniture of the chapel is purple velvet, with rich gold fringe and embroidery.

The communion-plate, which is gilt, remarkably fine, antient, and coſtly, was given to the chapel by ſir Robert Shirley, the founder.

The font is plain and decent.

The organ is the production of the celebrated Father Schmidt, and is extremely ſweet-toned and melodious.

Robert de Ferrariis earl of Nottingham and Derby gave the tithes of Staunton Harold to Bredon priory.

Anſketil prior of St. Oſwald of Noſtell granted to Richard ſon of Harald de Lecha, to have a free chapel at Staunton; to which the ſaid Richard added certain lands called Scallacre, on condition that the prior and convent ſhould always find, at their own charge, a chaplain to officiate in the chapel of Staunton. The two grants for that purpoſe ſhall here be given at large.

1. "Sciant omnes ſancte eccleſie filii tam preſentes quam futuri, quod ego Anſketilus [1] prior de Sancto Oſwaldo, totuſque conventus tam apud Sanctum Oſwaldum quam apud Bredonam commorantes, concedimus, & preſenti ſcripto noſtro confirmavimus, Ricardo filio Haraldi de Lechâ, & heredibus ſuis de Stantonâ in perpetuum, capellanum manentem apud Stantonam, ad ſerviendum capelle Stantone, & ad celebrandum ibidem divinum officium ſumptibus noſtris, per totum annum, excepto die Hardulfi, in quo die homines de Stantonâ venient ex conſuetudine ad eccleſiam beati Hardulfi, ſicut ad matricem eccleſiam ſuam de Bredonâ. 2. "Sciant omnes ſancte eccleſie filii tam preſentes quam futuri, quod ego Ricardus filius Haraldi de Lechâ, communi conſilio hominum meorum de Stantonâ, conceſſi, & hâc preſenti cartâ meâ confirmavi, pro amore Dei & Sancte Marie, & pro ſalute anime mee & parentum meorum, Deo & Sancte Marie & Beato Hardulfo de Bredonâ, & canonicis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, in puram & perpetuam eleemoſinam, liberam & quietam ab omni ſervitio ſeculari, totam terram que appellatur Scallacre; ſcilicet, in latitudine inter ſepem haie de Stantonâ & diviſam inter Stantonam & Andreſkirkam; & in longitudine inter Brunhage & viam que dividit diviſam inter campum de Wrthintonâ & Stantonâ, exceptâ unâ rodâ quam retineo ad viam habendam juxta haiam meam[3]. Hanc quidem conceſſionem fecimus ego & homines mei tali conditione, quod prior & canonici de Bredonâ invenient mihi, & hominibus meis de Stantonâ, & heredibus meis in perpetuum, ſuis ſumptibus, capellanum manentem apud Stantonam, qui ibi miniſtrabit, per totum annum, excepto die Sancti Hardulfi, in quo die homines mei de Stantonâ venient, ex conſuetudine, ad eccleſiam Beati Hardulfi in Bredonâ, ſicut ad matricem eccleſiam ſuam. Homines verò de Stantonâ ſacramentum baptiſmatis percipient in capellâ apud Stantonam, & ſponſalia ibi ſua habebunt, & purificationes, & confeſſiones, & dominici corporis communionem, & omnia jura eccleſiaſtica, exceptâ ſepulturâ. Omnes enim homines de predictâ villâ ſepulturam [accipient] apud matricem eccleſiam ſuam de Bredonâ, ſicut parochiani illius eccleſie; & panem benedictum, more ſolito, matrici eccleſie de Bredonâ, & omnes decimationes ſuas, & oblationes, & obventiones, & cetera jura ſua, matrici eccleſie ſue de Bredonâ perſolvent, exceptâ paſchali cerâ, que dabitur capelle Stantone ad faciendum cereum de Paſchâ, propter ſervitium per totam ebdomadam. Ego vero Ricardus & heredes mei dabimus matrici eccleſie de Bredonâ, & canonicis ibidem degentibus, omnes oblationes domûs mee, & omnes decimas & obventiones, de blado, de lino, de ferro, de molendinis, de vivariis, de pomario, de hortis, de lanâ, de agnis, de vitulis, de pullis, de porcis, & de omnibus quibuſcumque rationabiliter debent perſolvi decime, exceptis fœno & pannagio. Capellanus verò, qui apud Stantonam miniſtrabit, habebit manſuram unam, ſcilicet Wetecroft, cum horto, ubi poſſit manere, & omnes communitates predicte ville; &, ſi eis viſus fuerit inutilis, removebunt ipſum, & alium loco ipſius ſubſtituent. Ego ſepedictus Ricardus & heredes mei totam predictam terram prefatis canonicis de Bredonâ warantizabimus; & ipſi mihi & heredibus meis unam virgatam, que data fuit capelle, quietam clamaverunt. Hiis teſtibus; Nicho priore de Calk, R. decano de Donington, T. de Bagwordiâ; Henrico de Bradeſale, Henrico clerico de Melburnâ, Stephano capellano de Melburnâ, Guarino de Cnipeſtonâ, Roberto de Buelles, Roberto de Kirzun, Thomâ de Kirzun, Roberto de Anvers, & Willielmo de Quatermars[4].

The laſt-mentioned grant was confirmed in 1247 by Philip de Staunton, great grandſon of Richard de Lecha.

In 1310, the former grants were again confirmed at Bredon; and in the ſame year occurs a deed for the conſecration of the chapel, dated at Bredon, on the Wedneſday before the feaſt of St. Vincent the Martyr.

In the ſame year a compoſition alſo occurs between Robert Poumfret prior of Bredon and ſir William de Eſtaunton, chevaler, pour les diſmes de ſouth boys dans le manoire de Staunton; and another relative to the tithes of Skalacre and the woods in Staunton. A leaſe was granted, Feb. 23, 1523, by Richard prior of St. Oſwald's and John prior of Bredon, to Robert Heyſilrigg, eſq. and Eleanor his wife, of all the tithe corn and hay of Worthington, Newbold, Staunton, and Wylſton, with all tithes, oblations, and profits, the tithe barn and yard, and the prieſt's houſe at Worthington, for 25 years, at a rent of *£*12. 6*s*. 8*d*.; the ſaid Robert to be exempted by the prior from all ſynodals, taxes, ſubſidies, &c. and all other things, except finding two ſufficient prieſts, one at Worthington, and another at Staunton; and to retain out of his rent 10*s*. towards the payment of the prieſt at Staunton[4].

The tithes were leaſed, Sept. 1, 1535, by Anery prior of St. Oſwald's and Thomas Clarke prior of Bredon, for the ſame rent, to Francis Shirley, eſq. and Dorothy his wife, for 21 years; and, at the diſſolution of religious houſes, having then fallen to the crown, were again granted by queen Elizabeth to Francis Shirley, eſq.[5]

As parcel of the priory of St. Oſwald of Noſtell, the priory of Bredon, with its appurtenances, was granted to John lord Grey in 1554[6].

The preſent chapel was entirely new-built, as has been already ſtated; and is ſerved by one of earl Ferrers's chaplains; his ſalary ad libitum.

The following inſcription is placed under the battlements, round the chancel, on the outſide of the church:

"SIR ROBERT SHIRLEY, BARONET, FOUNDER OF THIS CHURCH, ANNO DOMINI MDCLIII. ON WHOSE SOUL GOD HAVE MERCY."

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

In a vault under the chancel, ſeveral of the noble family of the Shirleys lie buried; and in it is a child (the daughter of Laurence ſon of Robert firſt earl Ferrers) preſerved by embalming for 75 years paſt.

Over the outer door of the vault,
"MORS MIHI LUCRUM."

Within the chapel are ſeveral banners and trophies, with arms and creſts, trophies, armour, &c.

On a white tablet on the North ſide of the chancel:

"Heic juxta ſitus eſt

Under the above tablet is a ſplendid monument, with a full court-dreſs ſtatue[9], large wig, flowing cravat, &c.; arms of Shirley and Ferrers quarterly; motto, "Non magna loquimur, ſed vivimus;" and this inſcription:

"This monument is erected to the memory of the Right Honble
ROBERT SHIRLEY lord
TAMWORTH[10]; who died of the ſmall-pox, on the 5th of July, anno Domini 1714, in the 22d year of his age; and was interr'd in the vault underneath this church. He was eldeſt ſon to the Honble Robert Shirley and Anne his wife, who was daughter and heireſs to ſir Humphry Ferrers of Tamworth Caſtle, in the county of Warwick; and he was grandſon and heir apparent to the Right Honourable ROBERT SHIRLEY, Earl FERRERS.

Here peaceful lies beneath this marble tomb,
Virtue and Youth cut off in vernal bloom.
The few who to accompliſh'd worth aſpire
Experience aſk, and length of days require;
But Merit here at once with life was given;
One quick'ning breath inſpir'd them both from Heaven.
Profuſely Virtue from its fountain flow'd,
But Life, alas! was ſparingly beſtow'd:
The promis'd fruit to blow too ſoon began,
Bloom'd in the boy, ſcarce ripen'd in the man.
Yet, when th' Almighty doom'd his early death,
Without repining he reſign'd his breath.
In him Religion with ſweet temper join'd
Prudence of thought with fortitude of mind.
In duty ſtrict, juſt to the ties of blood,
In friendſhip firm, to all benignly good.
Such rules from what examples could he trace,
Whoſe life for imitation wanted ſpace?
Virtues innate no forming models need;
But patterns leave for ages that ſucceed."

On an altar tomb in the chapel-yard:

"Here lieth the body of the Right Honourable lady Catherine Shirley, third daughter of Robert earl Ferrers, by Elizabeth his firſt wife; who died on the 21ſt of Sept. 1736, aged 56.
She was a perſon of great merit, and poſſeſſed of many amiable qualities, which made her death much lamented
by all that knew her.
In compliance with her requeſt, ſhe was buried in this church-yard."

[1] "In the Place chancel, in Wiſtenſton church, formerly belonging to the Shirleys, and now (1776) to the earl of Thanet, are ſeveral monuments and grave-ſtones of conſiderable antiquity, though the former are chiefly in ruins, and the whole church in ſuch bad repair, that the roof will probably fall in, if not repaired within a few years." Sir W. Burrell, MSS. 5639. p. 544.—On a grave-ſtone on the South ſide of the chancel has been the portrait of a man in an arch, in complete armour, large as life (probably Ralph Shirley), now deſtroyed.

[3] Cecily, daughter of a Francis Shirley, of Weſt Grinſted, married John Wilſon, of Fletching.

[4] In the above MS. p. 131, is a drawing of an altar tomb at Wiſtenſton, with these two inſcriptions:

"Here lieth William Shirley, ſone of ſir Richard Shirley, knight, deceaſed the 29th day of May, a° 1551, and in the 5 yeare of Kinge Edward the 6."

"Here lieth
Robert Elrington, eſq.
late of Weſton,
who deceaſed the 9th of February, 1569."

[5] On the North wall, on a ſtone monument, have been inſerted in braſs the portraits of a man and his wife (he in armour), kneeling on a cuſhion, on each ſide of a deſk, under a Grecian arch ſupported by pillars; and labels iſſuing from their mouths. Between them a ſhield with the arms of Shirley impaling Kempe; and over it a ſmall portrait; a ſhield alſo over the man, another over the woman: and this inſcription:

"Here lieth the body of ſir Thomas Shirley, knt.
who deceaſed in October 1612, who was married unto Mrs. Anne Kempe, daughter of ſir Thomas Kempe, knight, with whom he lived in wedlock the ſpace of 53 yeares, by whom he had 12 children, five ſons and ſeaven daughters,
whereof three of them died in their infancies;
the reſidue, being three ſons and 6 daughters, lived to be married, as is expreſſed upon this monument."

[11] Jane, daughter of ſir Edward Onſlow, by Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Thomas Shirley, knt. was married to ſir Edward Carr, gentleman penſioner to king James I. and king Charles I; who died in 1635, and was buried at Hillingdon.

[12] Son of Edward Shirley, eſq. who died March 16, 1558; and grandſon of John Shirley, eſq. clerk of the kitchen to king Henry VII. and cofferer to king Henry VIII; who died Aug. 3, 1528. See his epitaph, with thoſe of his ſon and grandſon, in the Topographer, vol. IV. pp. 338, 339.

[13] John and Thomas; Anne, Jane, Cecily, Elizabeth, and Camilla.

[14] Sir Thomas Shirley was born in Weſtminſter in 1638. He ſtudied medicine in France; and, after taking the degree of M. D. returned to England, where he practiſed with ſo much reputation and ſucceſs, that king Charles II. made him one of his phyſicians. Shirley did not enjoy a long career; for he died on the 8th of Auguſt, 1678, at the age of 40. In his time, Wiſtenſton, with an eſtate of £3000 a year, paſſed to ſir John Fagg, created a baronet Dec. 22, 1660. He publiſhed "A Philoſophical Eſſay, declaring the probable Cauſes whence Stones are produced in the greater World; from which Occaſion is taken to ſearch into the Origin of all Bodies; diſcovering them to proceed from Water and Seeds. Being a Prodromus to a Medicinal Tract concerning the Cauſes and Cure of the Stone in the Kidneys and Bladders of Man. Written by Dr. Thomas Shirley, Phyſician in ordinary to his Majeſty, 1672," 12mo; dedicated to the Duke of Buckingham; and dated "from my houſe in Newton ſtreet, over againſt New Southampton-ſtreet in High Holbourn, June 27, 1672." In this work he explains the formation of calculi in the kidneys and bladder; and makes obſervations on the cure of the diſeaſes they produce. This treatiſe was publiſhed at Hamburgh in Latin, 1675, 12mo; and alſo in 1699, under the title of "Diſſertatio Philoſophica explicans Cauſas probabiles Lapidum in Microcoſmo." He was ſuppoſed alſo to be the author of "A Diſſertation on Scurvy Graſs (Cochlearia); London, 1677," 8vo.

Dr. Fuller, under Suſſex, ſays, " The antient extraction of the Shirleys in this county is ſufficiently known[1]. The laſt age ſaw a leaſh of brethren of this family, ſeverally eminent. This mindeth me of the Roman Horatii; though theſe expreſſed themſelves in a different kind for the honour of their country. Pardon me if reckoning them up not according to their age.

" Sir Anthony Shirley, ſecond ſon to ſir Thomas, ſet forth from Plymouth, May 21, 1596, in a ſhip called the Bevis of Southampton, attended with ſix leſſer veſſels. His deſign for St. Thomas was violently diverted by the contagion they found on the South coaſt of Africa, where the rain did ſtink as it fell down from the heavens, and within ſix hours did turn into maggots. This made him turn his courſe to America, where he took and kept the city of Saint Jago two days and nights, with 280 men (whereof 80 were wounded in the ſervice), againſt 3000 Portugals. Hence he made for the Iſle of Fuego, in the midſt whereof a mountain, Ætna-like, always burning; and the wind did drive ſuch a ſhower of aſhes upon them, that one might have wrote his name with his finger on the upper deck. However, in this fiery iſland they furniſhed themſelves with good water, which they much wanted. Hence he ſailed to the Iſland of Margarita; which to him did not anſwer its name, not finding here the pearl-dredgers which he expected. Nor was his gain conſiderable in taking the town of St. Martha, the iſle and chief town of Jamaica, whence he ſailed more than 30 leagues up the river Rio-dolce, where he met with great extremity. At laſt, being diſeaſed in perſon, diſtreſſed for victuals, and deſerted by all his other ſhips, he made by Newfoundland to England, where he arrived June 15, 1597. Now although ſome behold his voyage, begun with more courage than counſel, carried on with more valour than advice, and coming off with more honour than profit to himſelf or the nation (the Spaniard being rather frighted than harmed, rather braved than frighted therewith), yet impartial judgements, who meaſure not worth by ſucceſs, juſtly allow it a prime place amongſt the probable (though not proſperous) Engliſh adventures[2]."

Sir Anthony Shirley was in 1582 B. A. and fellow of All Souls college, Oxford (where his buſt is ſtill preſerved). He gave early ſigns of much ſagacity and capacity for buſineſs. On quitting the Univerſity, he was entered at the Inns of Court, and then travelled; after which he became known to Robert earl of Eſſex, by whom he was knighted, and under whoſe auſpices he undertook ſeveral voyages. Queen Elizabeth ſent him in 1596 into America; and afterwards, in the winter of 1598, into Italy, to aſſiſt the Ferrareſe who had revolted from the Pope. But, having heard on his way that they had made their peace, he embarked May 10, 1599, for that country from Venice, accompanied by his younger brother ſir Robert and 25 other gentlemen; among whom were ſome cannon-founders, then much wanted in Perſia. The cauſes of his going thither, the particulars of his voyage, and the ſtrange accidents on the way, particularly his being plundered of his jewels and nearly the whole of his property at Babylon, are amply detailed in Purchas's Collection of Voyages[3]. At length reaching Caſbin, he was kindly received by Shah Abbas, the new king of Perſia; whom ſir Anthony informed in a ſhort ſpeech, " that the fame of his royal virtues had brought him from a far country to be a preſent ſpectator of them, as he had been a wonderer at the report of them afar off;" to which the king moſt affably anſwered. Next morning he ſent the king a preſent of ſix pair of pendants of exceeding fair emeralds, and marvellous artificially cut; and two other jewels of topaſſes excellently well cut alſo; one cup of three pieces, ſet together with gold enameled, the other a ſalt, and a very fair ewer of chryſtal, covered with a kind of cut-work, of ſilver and gilt. In return, next day after dinner, the king viſited ſir Anthony at his lodging, to peruſe certain models of fortifications in ſome books which alone had eſcaped on the ſpoil which had been made of him at Babylon. Next night the king ſent for him again to the bazar, or exchange; the ſhops and roofs of which were ſo full of light, that it ſeemed all of fire; where certain men preſented the monarch with fruits, which he diſtributed to the company, and ſo continued for ſome hours; and in that time entreated ſir Anthony would remain with him in Perſia. At the end of ſix weeks, the king having urgent occaſion to go to Caſſan, he ſent to ſir Anthony Shirley 1000 tomanas, worth 16,000 ducats; 40 horſes all furniſhed, two with exceeding rich ſaddles plated with gold, and ſet with rubies and turkiſſes; the reſt either plated with ſilver, or velvet embroidered and gilt; 16 mules; 12 camels laden with tents, and all furniture for his houſe and voyage to Caſſan, to which place he was directed to follow the king from Caſbin. He was alſo made a Mirza; and, falling afterwards into a dangerous ſickneſs, the king never failed daily to viſit him in perſon[4]. In 1600, the king employed him on a general embaſſage to all the principal Chriſtian powers, to engage them to arm againſt the Turks, while he attacked them on another ſide; but expreſſly ſtipulated, that ſir Robert, " being younger, and therefore the more to be tendered, and not every day expoſed to new labours, ſhould be left in Perſia;" which was agreed to[4]. In October 1602, ſir Anthony was ſent embaſſador from the emperor of Germany to the king of Morocco; where he reſided five months in great pomp, and at his departure bought the freedom of two Portugueſe gentlemen at the price of £10,000.[5] After this he ſettled at the court of Spain, and returned no more to Perſia. In 1608, he was appointed by the king of Spain admiral of the Levant Seas, and next in place to the viceroy of Naples, with an appointment of 500 ducats a month[6]. He was made a knight alſo of the order of St. Michael in France; a knight of St. Jago in Spain; and was, by the emperor of Germany, raiſed to the dignity of a count. King James I, jealous of his greatneſs with the king of Spain, commanded him to return home; but he refuſed to obey the royal mandate; and died in that kingdom after the year 1636[7].

The relation of ſir Anthony's ſeveral Voyages is to be found in the Collections of Hackluyt and Purchas, and in three ſeparate publications; all of which being now extremely rare, the titles ſhall here be copied.

1. " A true Relation of the Voyage undertaken by ſir Anthony Sherley, knight, anno 1596, intended for the Iſle of San Tomé; but performed to S. Jago, Dominica, Margarita, along the coaſt of Terra firma, to the Iſle of Jamaica, the Bay of Honduras, 30 leagues up Rio Dolce, and homeward by Newfoundland; with the memorable Exploits atchieved in all this Voyage[8]."

2. " Sir Anthonie his Voyage over the Caſpian ſea and through Ruſſia, taken out of ſir William Parry his Diſcourſe of the whole Voyage of ſir Anthonie, in which he accompanied him; London, 1601[9]."

3. " A brief Compendium of the Hiſtory of ſir Anthony Sherley's Travels into Perſia, and employed thence Ambaſſador to the Chriſtian Princes; penned by himſelf, and recommended to his Brother ſir Robert Sherley, ſince that ſent on like Ambaſſage by the king of Perſia, 1613[10]."

" Sir Robert Shirley, youngeſt ſon to ſir Thomas, was by his brother Anthony entered in the Perſian court. Here he performed great ſervice againſt the Turks, and ſhewed the difference betwixt Perſian and Engliſh valour; the latter having therein as much courage and more mercy, giving quarter to captives who craved it, and performing life to thoſe to whom he promiſed it. Theſe his actions drew the envy of the Perſian lords, and love of the ladies, amongſt whom one (reputed a kinſwoman to the great Sophy), after ſome oppoſition, was married unto him. She had more of ebony[1] than ivory in her complexion; yet amiable enough, and very valiant; a quality conſiderable in that ſex in thoſe countries. With her he came over into England, and lived many years therein[2]. He much affected to appear in foreign veſts; and, as if

[2] See Mr. Burton's character of this famous general, but wretched ſcholar, p. 712.—He firſt "betook himſelf to travel about 1595; and ſerved divers Chriſtian princes for the ſpace of five years, but chiefly under Rodulphus the Roman emperor, who employed him in embaſſy, wherein he ſo diſcreetly and honourably demeaned himſelf, that he was made a count of the Empire, by patent dated June 2, 1609. Purchas, p. 1809.—After that, he went into Perſia, and ſerved ten years very faithfully and valiantly againſt the Turk; and was made general of the artillery by Shaw Abbas, who held him in ſo high eſtimation, that he gave him the lady Tereſia in marriage, the daughter of Iſmy Hawn, prince of the city Hercaſſia Major, whoſe ſiſter was one of the queens of Perſia. The Perſian employed him unto ſundry princes in Europe; he was ſent ambaſſador to Rome in 1609; entered that city with great magnificence; and was treated with great diſtinction by the Pope[*]. In 1611 he was ſent on an eſpecial embaſſy to king James[†]; arrived here in the ſummer; and on the 12th of October had audience at Hampton Court, where he delivered his letters, and ſhewed his commiſſion; all which purported the Perſian's great love and affection unto his majeſty, with hearty deſire of amity with the king of Great Britain, and frank offer of free commerce unto all his highneſs's ſubjects throughout all the Perſian dominions, &c. The count Shirley was entertained and reſpected here as an honourable ambaſſador. He brought with him Tereſia his wife, big with child, who was ſhortly after delivered of a ſon, unto whom the queen was godmother, and prince Henry was godfather, who called the child Henry after his own name. The ambaſſador ſtaid in England above a year after that; and, having received the king's gracious letters to the Perſian, by which time, as his majeſty had appointed, there was a well-furniſhed ſhip provided[‡], to tranſport him, his wife and ſervants, into the parts of the Eaſt Indies, and to land him as near the Perſian's dominions as they could; and, upon his departure from the ſhip, that then, as the king had ordained, they ſhould deliver unto the ambaſſador £500. in money to bear his charge by land, and to do him what farther kindneſs they could, he embarked at Dover in the month of January 1612. He left his ſon Henry in England. Captain Thomas Powell, of Herefordſhire, whom the king then honoured with knighthood, accompanied the ambaſſador both coming and going: he was colonel of 700 horſe under the Perſian; and at this time married an Engliſh woman, who went now over with him. Captain Newport was ſelected captain of the ſhip for tranſportation of this lord ambaſſador and his retinue; and becauſe this voyage is extraordinary from others, I have here ſet it down briefly. They went hence by the Canaries, and in April they came to the Cape of Bona Speranza, where they refreſhed themſelves with water and victual. From thence they ſailed to the great iſland called St. Lawrence, formerly called Mallagaſca, where they took in freſh water again. From thence they went to an iſland called Mothillia, and there they refreſhed themſelves with all manner of delicate fleſh and pleaſant fruits; this is one of the moſt pleaſant and fertile places in the world. And from thence they ſailed into Arabia Felix, unto a city called Dophar, where, through extreme foul weather, they remained 28 days; and from thence they ſailed into the mouth of the Gulph of Perſia, where it was meant the lord ambaſſador ſhould have landed; but, finding the place very inconvenient, they ſailed thence to Gaudell, where a revolted duke from the Perſian, with his forces being there, ſought treacherouſly to ſurprize the ambaſſador, and to take the ſhip with the merchants, their goods and all; but, by God's providence, the duke's treaſon was diſcovered by a Perſian hermit; by which means the Engliſh were miraculouſly delivered from extreme danger[§]. From this place they ſet ſail again, and went into the river Synde, where captain Newport very ſafely landed the lord ambaſſador and ſir Thomas Powell, with their wives, and all their company that embarked with them from England, where they were moſt joyfully and honourably received of the governor and of the inhabitants of the country, which country is under the Great Maghoore, upon the borders of Perſia[].—Sir Robert Shirley came a ſecond time into this country in 1623-4; which he finally quitted, on the occaſion deſcribed above, on Good Friday 1626, together with Nogdi-Ally-beg the Perſian ambaſſador, and ſir Dormer Cotton as ambaſſador extraordinary from king Charles I. to the Perſian court, having with them "ſix great and well-manned ſhips." On the 27th of November, they came to an anchor in Swalley road on the coaſt of India; where ſir Robert Shirley's antagoniſt died; having deſperately poiſoned himſelf for four days, eating only opium; and was buried at Serrat near the grave of Tom Coryat. Jan. 20, 1626-7, they reached Gumbrown, where ſir Robert Shirley entered the town, to acquaint the ſultan with the Engliſh ambaſſador's arrival, and to demand ſuch entertainment as befitted his excellency and travaile to the Perſian court. They were entertained with a coſtly banquet, and ſtore of Shyraz wine; and at the end of February they viſited the great duke of Shyraz; where ſir Robert, having drunk his grace's health in a cup of pure gold, put the goblet in his pocket, with a compliment, "that, after ſo mean a perſon as himſelf had breathed in it, it was impiety to offer it back to his grace;" which was well accepted. After paſſing 26 days with this "merry duke," they departed on Lady-day for Spahawn, the Perſian metropolis; where they arrived on the 10th of April; and on May-day departed thence to the court, then at Aſharaff, 400 miles diſtant; which they reached on the 25th of May; and where the lord ambaſſador, with ſir Robert Shirley in his company, and ſeven or eight Engliſh gentlemen his followers, were magnificently received and entertained. The ambaſſador, by his interpreter, acquainted Shaw Abbas why he had undertaken ſo great a journey, to "congratulate his good ſucceſs againſt the common enemy of Chriſtendom, the Turk; to aggrandize the traffick of raw ſilk, and other Perſian ſtaple merchandizes; to ſee ſir Robert Shirley purge his honour from thoſe ſcandalous imputations Nogdi-Ally-beg his late ambaſſador had blemiſhed him with; and that perpetual amity might be continued between the two famous monarchs of Great Britain and Perſia." The Pot-ſhaugh roſe up; and, in the Turkiſh tongue, gave him a gracious anſwer; and, concerning ſir Robert Shirley, ſaid, "he had been long of his acquaintance, and done more for him than any of his native ſubjects; that, if Nogdi-beg had laid aſperſions unjuſtly on him, he ſhould have decent ſatisfaction. It argued indeed Nogdi-beg was guilty of ſome heinous crime, in that he rather choſe to kill himſelf, than ſtand to his purgation from ſo impartial a juſtice: in ſome ſort he preſaged my rigour; for, if he had come, by my head (an oath of no ſmall force), I had cut him in as many pieces as there are days in a year, and burnt them in the open market with ſtinking dogs' turds. But touching a perpetual league of true friendſhip with the monarch of Great Britain your maſter, I embrace it moſt heartily, and wiſh them accurſed that go about to eclipſe it. And you are truly welcome (ſpeaking to my lord ambaſſador) that have done me that honour none of my famous predeceſſors ever had before me: for, as you are the firſt ambaſſador who ever came hither out of your nation, ſo I account your maſter the firſt of the worſhipers of Jeſus, and of you in a higher reſpect than any other ambaſſador." On Whitmonday they left Aſharaff, and about the firſt of July reached Caſbyn, where they found that the current of the king's good will had been diverted by the load-ſtar of Perſia, the grand favourite Mahomet Ally-beg; who entertained our ambaſſador with a lofty look, and wiſhed him to truſt his ſecrets to his cabinet, wherein the miſteries of the whole ſtate were locked, the king ſhewing himſelf unwilling to be further troubled. The ambaſſador might in any other place than Perſia have returned him the lye; but, perceiving no remedy, and deſiring to haſte home, imparted ſo much as he ſaw neceſſary. Touching ſir Robert Shirley, he was to expect no other ſatisfaction; his enemy was dead, and at the Caſpian ſea the king had ſufficiently

[*] A portrait of him, engraved at this period, is inſcribed, "RobertusSherley Anglus, comes Ceſareus, eques auratus;" and under the coat is, "Magni Sophi Perſarum legatus ad ſereniſſ. D. N. (There muſt be a miſtake, however, in the date of his age; he was then about 45.) Another portrait, a whole length in his Perſian habit, engraved by Birrell from a drawing made by W. Gardiner from the original portrait at Petworth, was publiſhed in 1799 by Mr. Edward Harding, and is here given in Plate C. A third old portrait of him (a head only, in a turban) remains at Staunton Harold. (See p. 718).

[‡] In the Britiſh Muſeum are preſerved the articles of agreement (1611) between ſir Henry Thynne, of London, knt. and ſir Robert Shirley, knt. lord ambaſſador for the king of Perſia, to convey the ambaſſador and his retinue (not exceeding 25 perſons) to Perſia, in a ſhip and pinaſe lying at Lymington, to remain in Perſia eight months, whilſt the ambaſſador provides goods to load the ſhip and pinaſe, conſiſting of 100 bales of raw ſilk, cotton, yarn, Perſian carpets, and indigo, free from all charge and incumbrance; two parts for the uſe of ſir Robert Thynne and his adventurers; and the third part for the uſe of ſir Robert Shirley. The ſhip and penaſe to be victualled to Perſia and back again, and during their ſtay in Perſia, and to have alſo an honourable reward from the king of Perſia. Charters, XXIX. 70.

[§] "Beware," ſays Mr. Herbert, "by ſir Robert Shirley's example, of Cape Guader, not far from Goadell, in 25 degrees; an infamous port, and inhabited by a perfidious people. Under pretext of amity, they allured Shirley and his lady a ſhore in 1613; where, but for a hodgee that underſtood their drift and honeſtly revealed it, they had been murdered, with Newport their captain; and merely to play the thieves with them."

if his clothes were his limbs, accounted himſelf never ready till he had ſomething of the Perſian habit about him. At laſt, a conteſt happening betwixt him and the Perſian ambaſſador (to whom ſome reported ſir Robert gave a box on the ear), the king ſent them both into Perſia, there mutually to impeach one another; and joined Dr. Gough[1] (a ſenior fellow of Trinity college in Cambridge) in commiſſion with ſir Robert. In this voyage (as I am informed) both died on the ſeas before the controverted difference was ever heard in the court of Perſia about the beginning of the reign of king Charles[2]." Thus far Dr. Fuller. But it appears, that the Perſian ambaſſador poiſoned himſelf during the voyage on the coaſt of Surat; and that ſir Robert Shirley lived to reach the Perſian court; where, not being able to obtain an authentic ſatisfaction, he died of a broken heart, July 13, 1627, aged 63. The lady Tereſia, his widow, returned to Europe, and ſettled at Rome[3]. Theſe facts are confirmed by the Travels of Thomas Herbert, eſq. who accompanied the ambaſſador honoured him: but, to ſpeak truly, the Pot-ſhaugh had then no affection to him, when, by reaſon of his age, he was diſabled to do him farther ſervice; adding (but out of an enemy's mouth) that all his embaſſies and meſſages to the princes of Chriſtendom were frivolous and counterfeit: but, when our ambaſſador objected, "he was in perſon there, to juſtify his authority; that he had the king's letter of credence to teſtify, ſigned and ſtamped by the Shaugh himſelf; and that it had been a ridiculous preſumption in Shirley to have dared to conteſt with Abbas to his face if he had been an impoſtor;" the favourite had not wherewith to anſwer, ſave that, "if ſo our ambaſſador pleaſed to lend him that phirman ſir Robert Shirley had brought in his defence, he would return it him next day, with his maſter's ſpeech concerning it." Three days paſſed ere Mahomet-Ally-beg would vouchſafe to return the letter, or give that ſatisfaction he had promiſed. At length he came, and told the ambaſſador, "that the king had looked upon it, had denied it to be his, and in a great rage had burnt it; wiſhing ſir Robert Shirley would depart his kingdom, becauſe (old, and as he thought) troubleſome." It was in vain to challenge the pragmatic Pagan in point of honour: nor knew he any recourſe by juſtice to eaſe himſelf. We all were verily perſuaded he never ſhewed it to the king, nor had any way enquired of him concerning it. The truth is, ſir Robert Shirley's old age and diſability to ſerve the Perſian made them ſlight and caſhier his penſion, even then when he moſt expected thanks and other acknowledgements. Hence came thoſe diſcontents, nay, that arrow of death that arreſted him. On he 13th of July (in leſs than a fortnight after entering Caſbyn) he gave this miſerable and fickle world an ultimatum vale in his great climacterick: and (wanting a fitter place for burial) was entombed under the threſhold of his own houſe in this city, without much ceremony. He was brother to two active gentlemen, ſir Anthony and ſir Thomas Shirley; a family not needing hyperboles. He was the greateſt traveller in his time; and no man had eaten more ſalt than he; none had more reliſhed the mutabilities of Fortune. He had a heart as free as any man: his patience was more philoſophical than his intellect, having ſmall acquaintance with the Muſes. Many cities he ſaw, many hills climbed over, and taſted of many ſeveral waters; yet Athens, Parnaſſus, Hippocrene, were ſtrangers to him; his notion prompted him to other employments. He had taſted of ſundry princes' favours: by Rodulph II. he was created a Palatine of the Empire; and by pope Paul V. an earl of the ſacred palace of Lateran; from whom he had power to legitimate the Indians; and from the Perſian monarch had enriched himſelf by many meriting ſervices; but obtained leaſt (as Scipio, Cæſar, Beliſarius, &c.) when he beſt deſerved and moſt expected it. Rank me with thoſe that honour him: and in that he wants the gilded trophies and hieroglyphicks of honour to illuſtrate his wretched ſepulchre (his virtue can out-brave thoſe bubbles of vanity, Facta ducis vivunt: and till ſome will do it better) accept this ultima amoris expreſſio, from him who ſo long travelled with him, that ſo much honoured him:

"Poſt extant latos terræque mariſque labores,	After land-ſweats, and many a ſtorm at ſea,
Parvula Sherleyum nunc tenet urna ſenem.	This hillock aged Shirley's reſt muſt be.

On the 23d of July, 10 days after ſir Robert Shirley, a deadly flux brought that religious gentleman ſir Dodmore [Dormer] Cotton the ambaſſador, in the vigour of his age, to an immortal home. Our duty commanding us to ſee him buried in the beſt ſort we could, a dormitory we obtained in Cazbyn amongſt the Armenian graves, who alſo with their prieſts aſſiſted at the holy ceremony: his horſe (which was led before) had a black velvet ſaddle on his back; his coffin we covered with a crimſon ſattin quilt (black they account not of) lined with purple taffata; upon the horſe were laid his Bible, ſword, and hat. Mr. Hedges, Mr. Stodoart, Mr. Emmery, Mr. Molam, Dick the Interpreter, and ſuch others of his followers as were healthy, attended the corpſe; and Dr. Goch [Gough], a reverend gentleman, buried him. He was vivum omnis virtutis exemplar; and I wiſh I could better expreſs my love than by decking his hearſe with this impoliſhed Epicædium:

"En! procul a patriis ſitus eſt Cottonius oris,	Lo! Noble Cotton, far from home hath found
Anglus in Aſſyriâ contumulatus humo.	A reſting-place in the Aſſyrian ground.

[3] "The thrice worthy and undaunted lady Tereſia," ſays Mr. Herbert, "firſt drew breath in Circaſhia. Her birth was Chriſtian; her degree noble: by accident ſhe was mewd in the haram of Perſia (10,000 more he never ſees); was of no kin to the king; but by his benevolence beſtowed on this man ſhe ſo long lived with, ſhe ſo much cheriſhed. At what time her beloved lord lay dead, and ſhe half dead through a long dyſentery, to comfort her (after the faſhion of Perſia) one John a Dutchman, a Jew, a painter, regarding neither her ſex, her faith, her melancholy, complots with Mahomet-Ally-beg to undo her, by pretending a deep engagement her huſband was in to one Crole, a Fleming; and (knowing he was dead) bad her aſk him if it were not true; if he denied it, it ſhould be forfeited. She might have paid them by like ſophiſtry; that, if he would affirm it, ſhe would pay it them. But they haſte to the cawſee, or juſtice, to attach her goods; and a faithful honeſt gentleman of our company has quick notice of it (Mr. Robert Hedges by name); who haſtens to her houſe, and perſuades her to make quick conveyance: at which, the amazed lady tears the ſattin quilt ſhe lays upon, and with her feeble hands ſhews that pathetic virtue a ſtronger could not well have bettered; and, taking thence a cabinet, ſome jewels, and rich gems, entreats that worthy gentleman to ſafeguard them till the danger was gone: he readily obeys, and is no ſooner out of doors when John the boor enters, with ſupercilious looks, attended by ſome Pagan ſerjeants, who (without much talk to her, or pity to her diſtreſs) rifled about, broke open her cheſts, and carried away what was valuable or vendable, ſome rich veſts, coſtly turbans, and a dagger of great price; but finding no jewels (ſuch they had ſeen him wear, and the oſtrich feather alſo, which they had worried in their oſtrich appetite), they grew madded with ſhame, and made her horſes, camels, and aſſes, bear them company; not caring if the lady ſtarved. The gentleman, ſo ſoon as the ſky was clear, returned; and, beſide his words of comfort, gladded her heart in delivering her her jewels again, of double value by that conqueſt: without which good hap, I am perſuaded, her other fortune reached not to £50.; a ſmall revenue for ſo brave a lady; and eſpecially uſeful is money in thoſe uncharitable regions, where women are made ſlaves to libidinous Pagans: but God provided better for her, and (beyond our expectation) has placed her in Rome; where I hear ſhe now moſt happily enjoys herſelf." Herbert, p. 204.

There is a portrait of lady Shirley, in a Perſian dreſs, at Preſton houſe, near Brighthelmſtone; and whole lengths of her and her huſband, both capital portraits, in the green drawing-room at Petworth: he is ſtanding; ſhe is ſitting. A portrait of her was alſo painted many years after by Vandyck (perhaps copied from an original by a former painter), and engraved by Hollar; which repreſents her with a chaplet of roſes on her head; long hair; part of which is braided, and twined with a rope of pearls; naked breaſts; and a necklace. This print, which has only the painter's and engraver's names, is very ſcarce.—The lady Tereſia is ſaid to have fallen in love with ſir Robert for his valour; and Dr. Fuller informs us that ſhe herſelf was very valiant.

dor to Perſia, and publiſhed his narrative in 1638. The particulars alſo of ſir Robert Shirley's reception at the court of king James I, his introduction to king Charles I, and the cauſe of his final departure from England, are thus accurately detailed in a curious (and now ſcarce) publication, by ſir James Finett, who was maſter of the ceremonies to both the above-named monarchs, and relates facts to which he was a witneſs:

"The nineteenth of January, 1623-4, having received directions from my lord chamberlaine to repaire to New-market for attendance of ſir Robert Sherrley (arrived ambaſſador from the king of Perſia) to his audience, which by his majeſties appointment he was to have there with the advantage and commodity of his neere abode at Saxham (his firſt reſt after his landing and long travels, and whence his ſiſter the lady Crofts ſent to me to London, to prepare his acceſs to his majeſty). As ſoone as he was come to court, I ſent my man to him with notice of my coming thither to ſerve him; and having received anſwer of his deſires to be diſpatcht for his ſpeedy return, I acquainted both the duke of Buckingham and maſter ſecretary Conway with the cauſe of my comming, and the addreſs I had from my lord chamberlain to him too for my further goverment: ſo the 27th of January, I was ſent to Saxham with the king's coach only, and five gentlemen, the king's ſervants; and parting thence the next morning early (in obedience of a command ſent poſt to me thither from my lord duke after midnight, that the king, having aſſigned the audience for the afternoone, would have me bring the ambaſſador by ten in the forenoone), we came with three coaches, beſides the king's, to court; where, conducting him immediately up to the prince's privy chamber (which, in abſence of his highneſs, was purpoſely hung for honour to the ambaſſador), he was fetcht thence by the earle of Angleſey through the privy chamber, and the with-drawing chamber (where the duke met him) into the king's bed-chamber: there, having made his two firſt reſpects of approach with his turban on (his whole habit being Perſian), at the third he took it off, and laid it at the king's feet, and made his ſpeech of entrance kneeling, till the king willing him to ariſe and cover, he did; and preſenting his letters of credence (written in the Perſian language, and underſtood for want of an interpreter, no where then to be found in England:) After this, having gracious words and countenances from his majeſty, he returned, accompanied as he came to the prince his lodgings, where maſter ſecretary Conway repairing to him, entertained him an hour with diſcourſe concerning the propoſitions of his negotiation (which he had a little before delivered to him and the duke in writing), and ſo returned to Saxham. Immediately upon this ambaſſador's arrival at court, I acquainted the duke with his intention to lay his turban at the king's feet (though he ſaid he had kept it always on in the preſence of the emperour and the king of Spaine), and thereby made way for his majeſtie's allowance of his covering, which was otherwiſe doubted would not have been permitted in regard of his natural ſubjection; though in his former imployment into England (when he wore his own country habit) he had been (after ſome queſtion about it) allowed to cover in the king's preſence.

"The 12th of February he came to London with my attendance, in company of his ſiſter Crofts and others met between Tottenham and Newington with ſix coaches, whereof one with four horſes, and hired by me at the king's charge, by my lord chamberlain's permiſſion for that day only, his lordſhip ſaying, he had yet no order for it from his majeſty.

"The 14th of February, having received an aſſignation for his audience of the prince at St. Jameſes (his highnes' coach and two horſes being commanded to be ready there at twelve o'clock), I found there the earle of Arundel (ſon to the lord marqueſs Hamilton, and gentleman of the prince his bed-chamber) with ſix or ſeven more of his highneſs' ſervants that had received order for his conduction to his preſence. We went thence to the ambaſſador's lodgings in Fleet-ſtreet; and there meeting the lord North and ſome gentlemen of his kindred, we brought him to the prince his preſence chamber at St. Jameſes, where his highneſs ſtanding ready to receive him, the ambaſſador entered, performing all his reverences with his turban on, bowing himſelf low at his ſecond reverence, and touching the ground with his right hand, and then his head; when come neere the prince (who ſtood uncovered) he fell on his knee; but, inſtantly raiſed by his highneſs, he fell to the complimental part, and from that to the earneſt of his errand, which, offered to the prince's conſideration in writing, he retired as he entered, and returned to his home with the conduction mentioned [1]."

"The 13th of April, 1625, I conducted the Perſian ambaſſador (ſir Robert Sherley) from his lodging at Tower-hill to an audience of his Majeſty at Whitehall. Deſcending at the great gate of the court, I brought him (as I had my directions from the lord chamberlain) through the darke paſſage from the Sermon court to the councell-chamber on the late queen's ſide, whence going to the king's privy chamber, I there gave notice of the ambaſſador's arrivall to a gentleman-uſher of that chamber (all further paſſage being begun then to be debarred to all but privy councellours and bed-chamber men) who conveying my intimation to my lord chamberlain in the privy galleries, I had a charge returned, that, conducting him by the way of the late queen's lodging to his majeſty in his with-drawing chamber, no other but myſelfe ſhould go along with him; this obeyed, he paſſed with his majeſty ſome few words of condoling complement, and returned by the way he entered [2]."

"About the middle of February, 1625-6, the merchants of the Eaſt Indian Company, having ſignified to his majeſty, that a ſhip (long held for loſt, and then arrived at Portſmouth) had brought in her an ambaſſador from the king of Perſia, obtained his majeſtie's coach (with the earle of Warwick, the maſter of the ceremonies, and other gentlemen the king's ſervants in it) for his reception at Kingſton, and tranſport to London. Theſe merchants (with an affected honour beyond that done to the other Perſian ambaſſador ſir Robert Sherley) had procured the king's coach to be drawn with eight horſes (as with the more grace to the latter to diſgrace the former). He came to London the 19th of February, and was lodgd (the merchants defraying him) in the houſe of alderman Holliday, then deceaſed. There reſting himſelfe two dayes, his audience was ſollicited and aſſigned for Shrove Tueſday following; which ſuſpected by ſir Robert Sherley and his friends to be a plot of the merchants by ſo haſtning an audience to prevent his repair to court, and to prepoſſeſs the king with the new ambaſſador's reports, he entreated the earle of Cleaveland, huſband to his niece, to accompany him at a viſite he would beſtow on the ſaid ambaſſador for his wellcome, and for the declaring of his own quality of ambaſſador from the ſame king, from whom he had ſo long negotiated here under that title. To this purpoſe, the earle of Cleaveland addreſſing himſelf to the lord chamberlaine for his favour in procuring from the lord Conway, principall ſecretary, the letters of credence brought to king James by ſir Robert Sherley; the lord chamberlaine excepting his medling in it, as being, he ſaid, no duty of his place; from him the

In 1611, being then but young, ſhe came into England with her huſband; and was brought to bed of a ſon, to whom the queen ſtood godmother, and prince Henry godfather. The following letter on that occaſion is preſerved in Harl. MSS. 7008. 73.

"Moſt renownede Prince, The great honnors, and favors, it hathe pleaſed your Highnes to uſe towards me, hathe imbouldnede me to wright thes fewe lyns, which ſhal be to beſeeche your Highnes to criſten a ſonn which God hathe geven me. Your Highnes in this ſhal make your ſervant happy, whos whole londginge to doe your Highnes ſom ſegnniolated ſervis worthy to be eſteemed in your prinſly breſt. I have not the pen of Siſſero; yet want I not menes to ſownde your Highneſſe's worthy prayſes into the ears of forran nattions and mighty princes; and I aſſure myſelfe your high borne ſperrit thirſtes after fame, the period of greate princes ambiſſiones. And farther, I will ever be your Highnes moſt humbele and obſervaunt ſervaunt, ROBERT SHERLEY.

earle of Cleaveland went to the duke of Buckingham, and by his meanes obtaind allowance from his majeſtie for the lord Conway to impart them for ſo much uſe and ſight as might ſerve the ambaſſador Sherley's turne for the other's ſatisfaction; ſo as my lord Cleaveland having gotten them into his hands, he, the morning that the new-come ambaſſador was in the afternoone to have audience, departed with the king's coach and ſeven other (eight or nine gentlemen and myſelf accompanying him) to ſir Robert Sherley's lodging on Tower Hill; whence being ready to ſet forth towards the other ambaſſador's, I propounded the fitneſs of ſending to him before (to avoid the incivility, as it might be interpreted, of a ſurpriſe) with ſignification of our inſtant coming to him to viſite him. To this his anſwer met us on the way, without other complement than that we might come. Entring the hall, where he then was ſitting in a chair on his legs double under him, after the Perſian poſture, and affording no motion of reſpect to any of us, ſir Robert Sherley gave him a ſalutation, and ſate down on a ſtoole neer him, while my lord of Cleaveland by an interpreter ſignified in three words the cauſe of the ambaſſador Sherley's and his and our comming to him; but with little returne of regard from him, till I informing the interpreter of the new ambaſſador what my lord's quality was, he let fall his truſt-up-leggs from his chaire, and made a kinde of reſpect to his lordſhip. This done, ſir Robert Sherley, unfoulding his letters, and (as the Perſian uſe is in reverence to their king) firſt touching his eyes with them, next holding them over his head, and, after kiſſing them, he preſented them to the ambaſſador, that he, receiving them, might performe the like obſervance; when he, ſuddenly riſing out of his chaire, ſtept to ſir Robert Sherley, ſnatcht his letters from him, toare them, and gave him a blow on the face with his fiſt; and, while my lord of Cleaveland ſtepping between kept of the offer of a further violence, the Perſian's ſon next at hand flew upon ſir Robert Sherley, and, with two or three blows more, overthrew him; when maſter Maxwell of the bed-chamber, and my lord of Cleaveland, neareſt to him, pulling him back (while we of the company laid hands on our ſwords, but not drawing them, becauſe not any one ſword or dagger was drawn by the Perſians) my lord of Ceaveland remonſtrated to the ambaſſador the danger, and inſolencie of the fact, ſaying, "that if he and the gentlemen there with him had not borne more reſpect to that king whom he repreſented, then he, the ambaſſador, had done to the letters ſhewed him for juſtification of the other's quality, neither he nor thoſe about him that had committed that inſolency ſhould have gone alive out of that place." After theſe words, he made ſome ſhew of acknowledgement, and ſaid, "he was ſorrey he had offended his lordſhip and us by his act which he had performed (tranſported with extreame rage againſt a perſon that had dared to counterfeit the king his maſter's hand, which was alwayes, he ſaid, ſet on the top of his letters, when theſe letters he had ſhewed had it on the back ſide) and to heare, as he had done, that ſo meane a fellow, and an impoſtor, ſhould preſume to ſay he had married the king his maſter's neece." To this ſir Robert Sherley (who was in the meane time retyred behind the company amazed and counfounded with his blow and treatment) ſtept in, and anſwered, "That he never ſaid he had married the king's neece, but the queen's kinſwoman; and that for the manner alleadged of ſigning his letters, it was true, that the king of Perſia, in all employments of his own ſubjects to forren princes, or in writing to them, uſed to ſigne above in the front of his letters; but, that when he employed a ſtranger to any forren prince, his ſignature was uſually affixed on the back ſide of his letters, that before their opening they might ſhew who ſent them." To this the ambaſſador replyed with ſcornfull looks only. We all with little or no reſpects to him departed; and, conducting ſir Robert Sherley to his lodging, accompanied the earle of Cleaveland inſtantly to court; where finding the duke of Buckingham in the preſence-chamber (the king being even then come forth to dinner) his lordſhip acquainted his majeſty with our adventure, and I received preſent order to let ſir Lewes Lewkner know, "that he ſhould inſtantly repaire to the new-come Perſian ambaſſador, and tell him that his audience for that afternoone was thought fit to be ſuſpended, and remitted to another day, that his majeſty might be particularly informed of the cauſes of the diſagreement and diſorder happened." The greateſt blot and fault of this adoe was caſt upon ſir Robert Sherley for his default in his reſolution, not to returne with blows, or words at leaſt, the affront done him; which had he done, would have confirmed the truth of his repreſentative quality, and not given ſubject (from ſuch weakneſſe and want of ſpirit diſcovered by him) to the merchants to diſpute, as they confidently did, and to his own friends to defend, the ſoundneſs of his commiſſion; yet at length, he writing to his majeſty, and beſeeching him to ſend him into Perſia with his two letters tyed about his neck for tryall whether they were true or falſe, the world began to have a conceit of his unjuſt ſufferance, and the king to charge it home to the merchants, with his command and eſpeciall pleaſure ſignified to them, that he ſhould be ſent along in their fleet, then ready to part for the Eaſt Indies, and be by them landed in Perſia, there to make his purgation; which they, though unwillingly, aſſented to; and, preſſing for the other ambaſſador's audience, he had it, after eight or ten dayes delay, aſſigned and given him the 6th of March, fetcht to it by the earle of Warwick, &c. Entering the Banquetting-houſe, where his majeſty ſtood under the ſtate to receive him, without one looke or geſture of reſpect, till coming cloſe to the king's perſon, he clapt his letters to his eyes, one after the other, kiſſed them, and preſented them to the hand of his majeſty, but not ſo much as bowing his body at their delivery; onely, having finiſhed his little ceremony, he in his retrait, after ſome twenty paces made with his back to the king, turned about, and waving his hand on each ſide imperiouſly, as commanding a proſpect, hindred by the multitude that preſſed in between his ſight and the king's, he made a kind of a ſtooping reverence; ſo a ſecond, and a third, and departed. When, underſtanding that the queen was gone abroad (whom he meant to viſite) he imployed the time a while in a walke with all his coaches about Saint Jameſes Parke, and, returning, ſaw her majeſty. The next day I brought the other ambaſſador, ſir Robert Sherley, to a private audience of his majeſty in his withdrawing-chamber. After many conteſtations between the merchants and the ambaſſador Sherley, whether he were to be defrayed by them, as the king required, or by the king, ſince his majeſty had intimated his reſolution that he ſhould be tranſported to Perſia in the fleet that was to paſs for the Eaſt Indies at the beginning of May, and in them alſo the other ambaſſador, that time being come of their departure, they both arrived too late at the place of their imbarking, the Downs, for performance of that voyage in that ſeaſon; the fleet, that could no longer ſtay for them, being already gone (though ſir Robert Sherley had gotten the ſtart of the other, and imbarked in a pinnace of the fleet, together with ſir Dormer Cotton, imployed by his majeſty at the ſame time ambaſſador to the king of Perſia, both for truth whether Sherley were or not an impoſtor, and alſo to fix a trade there, which the other ambaſſador came to negotiate); ſo as they were all forced to returne to London, and there attend the opportunity of departure in March ten moneths after, when begining their voyage (the two differing ambaſſadors in ſeveral ſhips) they all three dyed on the way, and with them the quarrell and inquirie after it [1]."

Of ſir Thomas Shirley, Dr. Fuller ſays, "I name him the laſt (though the eldeſt ſon of his father), becauſe laſt appearing in the world, mens activity not always obſerving the method of their regiſter. As the trophies of Miltiades would not ſuffer Themiſtocles to ſleep, ſo the atchievements of his two younger brethren gave an alarum unto his ſpirit. He was aſhamed to ſee them worn, like flowers, in the breaſts and boſoms of foreign princes, whilſt he himſelf withered upon the ſtalk he grew on. This made him leave his aged father [1] and fair inheritance in this county, and to undertake ſea voyages into foreign parts, to the great honour of his nation, but ſmall enriching of himſelf; ſo that he might ſay to his ſon as Æneas to Aſcanius,

"As to the general performances of theſe three brethren, I know the affidavit of a Poet carrieth but a ſmall credit in the court of Hiſtory; and the comedy made of them [2] is but a friendly foe to their memory, as ſuſpected more accommodated to pleaſe the preſent ſpectators than inform poſterity. However, as the belief of Mitio (when an inventory of his adopted ſon's miſdemeanors was brought unto him) embraced a middle and moderate way, nec omnia credere nec nihil, neither to believe all things nor nothing of what was told him: ſo in the liſt of their atchievements we may ſafely pitch on the ſame proportion; and when abatement is made for poetical embelliſhments, the remainder will ſpeak them Worthies in their generations."

TONGE.

This village was by the Conqueror given to Henry de Ferrariis, who held it at the general ſurvey; at which period it was conſidered as the principal part of the ſeveral manors which were afterwards connected with that of Bredon.

From Henry it came by deſcent to William de Ferrariis junior, earl of Nottingham, who gave the tithes here to the priory of Bredon, in which pariſh it lies [4].

"Willus comes junior de Ferr' & comes de Nottingham dedit eccleſiam de Bredon, co. Leic', cum decimis tenentium ſuorum in Tonge, Anderſkirke, & Wiveleſton, cum capellis de Worthington & Stanton, & decimas de Newbold & Diſeworth, de feodo ſuo, canonicis de Noſtel, com' Ebor'. [5]"

"Wills comes de Ferrariis, filius Willi comitis, &c. dedi Rogero de Pantulf & heredibus ſuis terram illam quam Willus de Pantulf frater prius dedit ei, ſcil' Tungam, pro ſervitio dimidii militis, &c. Teſt'; Roberto de Ferrariis, Henrico filio Walkelini, Willo de Richeamonte tunc ſeneſcallo, Henrico de Serr', Robto filio Walkelini, juvene, Henrico filio Sewalli, Roberto de Grendon, Roberto de Stanton, Willielmo de Wardâ, Gilberto de Boſcherniâ, & aliis [6]."

William Pantulf gave to the nuns of Langley four bovates of land in Tonge, with the ſite of a water-mill; which was confirmed by his daughter Iſolda, with the ſuit and toll of the mill, four bovates of land in the lordſhip of Tonge, free common in the woods and paſture, and pannage for their hogs [7].

Roger la Zouch granted to Henry de Hugefort and his heirs three virgates of land, with three meſſuages, and their appurtenances, in Nortone and The Shaw; ſix acres of wood in Scherley, and one in The Brand; & unum vivarium cum ſitu vinarii & refullon' aque ſuper Luccleford; feeding for 20 full-aged hogs (porcos ſuperannuatos) and a boar, or for 40 young hogs (junioris ætatis), in all the woods belonging to his manor of Tonge, free of pannage; with a permiſſion, if he had not ſo many hogs, to receive the pannage for 20 hogs and a boar from any of his homagers; for all beyond that number, a reaſonable ſum to be paid for the peſſona required to fatten them. All the ways, paths, waters, mills, bruerae, turbaries, quarries, fiſheries, marleries, &c. belonging to the manor of Tonge, are alſo aſſigned by this grant; with liberty to take marle at pleaſure for manuring land; and of fiſhing in all the waters within the manor, excepting the vivary in the demeſne, uſque le Pas & Trenſwall; alſo free eſtover; liberty to cut wood for fewel; to employ ſix men for five days in collecting nuts; and to depaſture oxen and other live ſtock with thoſe of the lord of the manor. The acknowledgement for this grant, in lieu of all payments and ſervices, was a garland of roſes on the feaſt of St. John the Baptiſt, to be delivered within the vill of Tonge. Witneſſes; ſir Walter de Huggefort, ſir William de Beumyes, and others [1].

Alan la Zouch confirmed to John de Prees all the lands, tenements, and liberties, which he held under the grant of ſir William de Beameys, within the fee of Roger le Vernon, Roger la Zouch his father, and Robert Collet, with the addition of the land held by Robert de Becerton in The Brand; and all the waſte near The Pool between the wood and the marle-pit (marleram) of Methoplekes, near the way leading to Tonge by the ſide of the wood; and all the waſte between the Brodemere and the wood of Lucleford, at a rent of 5*d*. a year. Witneſſes; ſir William de Huggefort, Hugh de Bolynghale, Hugh de Beckbury, Humphrey de Umfraſton, and others.

In 1240, Robert de Tateſhall, in right of his mother Iſolda Pantulph, held lands here under earl Robert de Ferrariis [2].

Radcliffe upon Sore, co. Nottingham, was held of the king, in capite, by the ſerjeancy of keeping hawks for him, upon the old feoffment, in the reign of Henry I.; but temp. Henry III. theſe ſerjeancies were let out to rent by Robert de Paſſelewe; and ſeveral perſons had ſhares; and ſome paid rent to Thomas Pigot (Picot) beſides the king's rent; and, among others, the prior of Bredon held two virgates [3].

Robert Schirloc, of Tonge, occurs as a juror 1306 [4].

Joan de Driby, one of the daughters and coheirs of Robert de Tateſhall, was owner of her father's property at Tonge in 1311.

"Pateat univerſis per preſentes, quòd ego Johanna de Dryby, domina de Tateſhale, attornavi, & loco meo poſui, dilectum meum Willielmum de Wodecot, ad ponendum Hugonem Jordan de Neubold in ſeyſinam in unâ placeâ vaſti & paſture mee, cum pertinentiis, in Tung, unam dimidiam acram per perticatas viginti quatuor pedum admenſuratas continente, ſecundùm quod in quâdam cartâ inter me & predictum Hugonem Jordan inde factâ & indentatâ pleniùs continetur; ratum & gratum habitura quicquid idem Willielmus nomine meo in premiſſis duxerit faciendum. Datas apud caſtrum de Tateſhal, die Dominicâ proximâ poſt feſtum Natalis Domini, anno regni regis Edwardi filii regis Edwardi quarto." [5]

John de Driby was lord of Bredon and Tateſhal in 1333 [6].

In Cardinal Pole's Archiepiſcopal Viſitation of the dioceſe of Lincoln, 1556, the following report is made concerning the church of Bredon, "Vacat, & diu vacavit, ratione junctionis extra Curiam Augmentationis. Cauſa eſt in audientiâ coram reverendiſſimo Domino Cardinali [7]."

In 1561, there were 24 families in Tonge.

Thomas Gray, gent. died 14 Jan. 1608-9, ſeiſed of the manor of Langley, called Gray's Langley; and alſo of the water-mill at Tonge, with a meadow there [8].

The family of Starkey had lands and reſided here, and at Bredon, temp. Hen. VII. and for many years after, as appears by the following Pedigree, extracted from the Viſitation of 1619.

In 1630, this lordſhip was divided between Henry earl of Stamford and certain inferior freeholders; two of whom were John Sherwood and John Swindall.

Mr. Richard Sutton (brother of Robert Sutton, of Aram, co. Notts, eſq. who, "having diverſly manifeſted his fidelity to king Charles I. in ſupplying his majeſty with conſiderable aid, and large aſſiſtance upon garriſoning the town of Newark upon Trent, where during the whole courſe of that deſtructive war, he performed no little ſervice [9]," was created lord Lexington of Averham Nov. 21, 1645) held lands here in 1648. He married Elizabeth Stanhope, half ſiſter to Philip earl of Cheſterfield.

The lady Moriſon, daughter of ſir —— Harrington, widow of ſir Richard Moriſon, knt. purchaſed this manor in fee-farm of the king; and afterward ſold it to the lady Corbett, who gave it to Thomas Boothby, her ſon by her firſt huſband, who enjoyed it in 1655 [10].

Mr. Thomas Peſtell [11], the ejected vicar of Packington, in 1659, dedicated a volume of Sermons "to Thomas lord viſcount Beaumont of Cole Orton, and Mr. Robert Sutton [12], heir to Mr. Richard Sutton, of Tongue in Leiceſterſhire."

In 1660, major Benſkin was reſident at Tonge [13].

In 1673, Mr. William Muggleſtone paid a fee-farm rent of £3. for the tithes of Tonge; and in 1710, an act was paſſed for ſale of certain lands and tithes in the pariſh of Tonge in Leiceſterſhire, late the eſtate of William Muggleſtone, deceaſed; and for the diſtribution of the money thereby ariſing, purſuant to a ſettlement made of the ſaid lands and tithes by the ſaid William Muggleſtone [14].

In 1722, ſix freeholders polled from Tonge; and four in 1775.

In 1759, Ann Cowliſhaw, widow, was the impropriatrix of all the great tithes of and in Tonge, and a proprietor of lands there; and her ſon Skevington Dickenſon Cowliſhaw is the preſent owner, 1802.

The Bredon award, dated and executed Nov. 27, 1761, recites that the right honourable Henry earl of Stamford was lord of the ſaid manor of Bredon, Tonge, and Wilſon, patron of the vicarage, and proprietor of the principal part of the lands and grounds in all the ſaid fields; ſir Thomas Palmer, &c. &c. (as already ſtated in p. 686. from the act for the incloſure): And whereas the ſaid earl and the chaplains and poor of Wigſton's Hoſpital in Leiceſter, &c. &c. and others, are all the perſons now intereſted in the ſame lands and grounds, &c. &c. unto and for the ſaid chaplain and poor (of Wigſton's Hoſpital) in lieu of all their ſhare, intereſt, right of common, and other property in the lands and grounds by the ſaid act intended to be incloſed, and of the ſaid incloſures to be allotted as aforeſaid, part of which is now in leaſe to Henry Biddle, and the remainder to Samuel Turner, the ſeveral pieces, plots, or parcels of land, following; &c. &c. All which ſaid ſeveral pieces, plots, or parcels of land, allotted as aforeſaid to the ſaid chaplains and poor, contain 33a. 3r. 20p. or thereabouts, and are their full proportion of the ſaid lands, grounds, and incloſures, to be incloſed and allotted as aforeſaid. &c. &c. And as for and concerning all the tythable incloſures in the liberty of Bredon, liable in virtue of the ſaid act to the ſaid rent or yearly ſum of 2*s.* for every ſtatute acre thereof, and ſo in proportion for every greater or leſs quantity than an acre, in lieu of the great tythes of the ſame incloſures; we find that ſuch incloſures contain in the whole 163a. 3r. 26p. which, after the rate of 2*s.* an acre, amounts to the annual ſum of 16*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.* &c. &c. And as for and concerning all the tythable incloſures in the reſpective liberties of Tonge and Wilſon (except ſuch as adjoin or abut upon any of the unincloſed land or ground therein reſpectively, and do not contain four ſtatute acres or more), there not being any belonging to any proprietor of ſuch incloſure who has not land in thoſe reſpective fields; we have, as before mentioned, aſſigned, ſet out, allotted, and appointed, unto and for the ſaid impropriatrix of Tonge and the ſaid impropriatrix of Wilſon reſpectively, in lieu of their reſpective great tythes of ſuch reſpective tythable incloſures (except as before excepted) ſuch parcel and quantity of the land and ground in the ſaid ſeveral open fields of Tonge and Wilſon reſpectively, as, quantity and quality conſidered, contains one full eighth part in quantity only, not quality, of ſuch reſpective incloſures. And as for and concerning the ſaid rent or yearly ſum of 30*l.* in and by the ſaid act provided and directed to be paid to the ſaid Joſeph Hooley and his ſucceſſors, vicars of the ſaid vicarage of Bredon for the time being, for ever, in lieu of the ſmall tythes and vicarial dues in the ſaid act ſpecified (except as therein is excepted); we have aſſigned and appointed, &c. &c. the ſame to be paid to him and them, by all the ſaid ſeveral and reſpective proprietors, out of their ſaid ſeveral allotments, and by the reſpective proprietors thereof reſpectively for the time being, for ever, out of ſuch allotments reſpectively (except the ſaid reſpective impropriators and the ſaid impropriatrix, in reſpect of their reſpective allotments in lieu of their ſaid ſeveral impropriations) &c. &c.[2]

Bredon and Tonge, by the return to parliament in 1801, contained 181 inhabited houſes (and 7 uninhabited); 190 families; 391 males, 424 females, total 815; of which 173 were chiefly employed in agriculture; and 125 in trade, manufactures, or handicraft.

WILSON, WILSTON, WOLLASTON, or WIVELESTON.

This little hamlet was by the Conqueror given to Henry de Ferrariis, as a member of the manor of Tonge, together with Andreſkirk adjoining to it.

Robert de Ferrariis earl of Nottingham and Derby, his grandſon, gave the tithes of Wilſton, and certain lands there, to the priory of Bredon.

Fulcher de Edneſhou and Margaret his wife, with the conſent of their ſon, gave to the nuns of Langley eight bovates of land in Wiveleſton [1].

It was after poſſeſſed by the Pantulphs lords of Bredon.

The prioreſs and convent of Langley had alſo ſeveral lands and tithes in Wiveleſton, by the gift of William Pantulph their founder.

Burgia wife of William Pantulph gave them the tithes of her mill at Wiveleſton [2].

In 1240, Robert de Tateſhall held lands here of the fee of William de Ferrariis earl of Derby.

In 1296, it appeared that a part of Wollaſton was held in fee of the honour of Winton; and that Carbo de Trumpington held ſix virgates of land there, of Roger de Trumpington and other free tenants in Sheriſby; and that the ſaid Roger and they held of the heireſſes of the earl; and the heireſſes of the king in villanage.

At the ſame time it appeared that another part of Wollaſton was held in fee of the honour of Leiceſter; and that Walter Jacob held three virgates of land, and the freeholders five virgates of land there, of Ralph Danett; and Ralph Danett of the earl; and the earl of the king. Of the ſame honour John le Botiller and four freeholders held lands there of William le Botiller; and William le Botiller of the earl; and the earl of the king [3].

William Balle and William Talun, both of Weveleſton, occur as jurors in 1306 [4].

Robert de Holland had a grant in 1308, inter alia, of the manor of Wiveleſton [5].

In 1360, Elizabeth de Burg, wife of Theobald de Verdon, held at her death a quarter of one knight's fee, with the appurtenances, in Thorpe juxta Littleburne and Willeſdon, which John Chaynell and other freeholders there held [6].

Jan. 20, 1462-3, king Edward IV. in conſideration of the faithful ſervices of John Bell, one of the marſhals of his chamber, and of his ſon Robert, granted to them, the ſaid John and Robert Bell, a certain toft, with a virgate of land, at Wollaſton, then forfeited to the king, for that one Robert Bell had given them to the above John and Robert for their lives without any fine or enrolment in the king's courts [7].

"Rex omnibus ad quos, &c. ſalutem. Sciatis quod nos (in conſideratione fidelium ſerviciorum que humiles ſervitores noſtri Johannes Belle, unus mareſcallorum, & Robertus Belle, filius ejus, unus gercionum camere noſtre, nobis impendêre & in poſterum impendere intendunt) dedimus, &c. eiſdem quoddam toftum, cum unâ virgatâ terre eidem pertinente, jacentem in villâ de Wollaſton, in com. Leiceſt', non excedent' annuum valorem xiii s̄. & iv đ. nobis forisfactum ratione quod quidam Robertus Belle, poſſeſſor eorundem tofti & virgate terre, prefatis Johanni & Roberto . . . . habenda & gaudenda predicta toftum & virgatam terre, durante vitâ ſuâ & alterius eorum diutius viventis, per eadem ſervicia prout ab antiquo tenebantur, abſque aliquo compoto, ſeu aliquo alio inde nobis in aliquo reddendo ſeu ſolvendo, &c. Teſte Rege, apud Weſtm. xx° die Januarii [8]."

In 1499, Ralph Conſtable died ſeiſed, in right of Anne his wife, of certain lands and tenements in Wilſton [9].

In 1516, the prieſt of the chantry of St. Katharine at Melbourne had lands and tenements at Wilſton and King's Newton [10].

In 1535, the tithes of Wilſton, with thoſe of Staunton, &c. were leaſed by the prior of Bredon to Francis Shirley, eſq. who, after the diſſolution, obtained a new grant of them from the crown.

In 1564, there were 40 families in Wilſton.

In 1606, ſir Henry Beaumont died ſeiſed of the great tithes of Wilſton [11].

In 1641, Mr. Burton deſcribes the property in Wilſton as "divided between Henry earl of Stamford and certain inferior freeholders; but the royalty," he adds, "belongs to my lord, as lord of Bredon, in which pariſh it lies [12]."

Beaumont Dixie, eſq. is ſtyled "of Wilſon" in 1680.

In 1722, four freeholders polled from Wilſton, and ſeven in 1778, ſix of whom were reſident, and occupied their own land.

In 1759, the Rev. Henry Swindell, clerk, of Beaumont, in the county of Derby, was the impropriator of all the great tithes of and in Wilſon, and a proprietor of land there. He ſold his eſtate at Wilſon to John Avaine, of Bredon; who ſold the ſame eſtate to William Morley, the preſent owner, 1802.

WORTHINGTON

was antiently accounted a member of Tonge, and with that was given to Henry de Ferrariis by the Conqueror [13].

Four ploughlands in Werditone, in which were five ploughs, were valued in the reign of the Confeſſor at twelve pence. At the general ſurvey this lordſhip was worth twenty ſhillings, and was held by Henry de Ferrieres. Four ſocmen, with ſix villans and two bordars, had three ploughs. There was a wood four furlongs long and three broad. Of this land Alwin claimed the ſoc of one ploughland, affirming that it belonged to the king's fee in Scepeſhefde [14].

In the reign of king Henry II. Robert de Ferrariis earl of Derby gave (inter alia) certain lands in the village, and the ſervice of half a knight's here and at Newbold, to Bertram de Verdon, in frank marriage with Maud his daughter; but whether the Goldingtons, who were lords of this manor in the time of king John, were firſt enfeoffed therein by Ferrers or Verdon, we cannot, at this diſtance of time, determine [15].

"Mem. q̄d Rob̄tus de Ferrariis, comes Derbeie, dedit dñ̄o Bertramo de Verdon quatuor feoda militum, cum Matildâ filiâ ſuâ, in liberum maritagium; viz. in Crakemers et Broughton, continen' unum feodum militis & dimidium; Fenewale, continen' dimidium feodum; Novam Aulam de Staunton, continen' dimidium feodum; Herteſhorne, continen' tres partes feodi; Worthington & Newbold, cont' dī feodi; Staunton Harold, cont' quartam partem feodi militis. Item, memorand' quod poſtquam comes predictus dederat quatuor feoda antedicta remanſerunt in manu ſuâ ſeptem virgate terre, cum uno boſco dicto Baſſet haye, & aliis pertinentiis, in Newbold; quem boſcum Johannes Baſſet âſſartavit ex dimiſione dñi Edmundi comitis Lancaſtrie & Ferrers, & continet quintam partem feodi militis [16]."

In 1240, Philip de Staunton held the fourth part of a knight's fee in Staunton Harold and Worthington under Roeſia de Verdon, who held the ſame under the earl de Ferrariis[1].

"Johanna filia Petri de Goldington petit verſus Petrum de Goldington fratrem ſuum totam terram de Worthington, que eſt de feodo Bertrami de Verdon, quam pater ejuſdem Johannes ei dedit in maritagio cum Wiłło Pantulf viro ſuo[2]."

"Johannes Crioll & Johanna uxor ejus petunt verſus Petrum de Goldington tenendum ſicut terra illa que data fuit eidem Johanni in libero maritagio ex dono Petri de Goldington & Eve uxoris ſue, & unde Wiłłus pater ejus & Johanna uxor ejus ſeiſiti fuerunt tempore Henrici regis patris domini regis nunc. Petrus venit, & defendit jus, &c.; & dicit quod terra illa de Wirthington fuit de maritagio Eve matris ſue, & eidem deſcendit tanquam recto heredi; & preterea ponit ſe in magnâ aſſiſâ, ſi ſufficere non poteſt carta Petri patris ſui & Eve matris ſue, que teſtatur quod ſi non poſſint ei terram illam warrantizare eſchambiam ei facient ad valentiam in Stokes, vel in Cotes. Vive voces teſtium carte predicte, &c."[3]

Peter de Worthington granted and confirmed to John Picot, of Worthington, and his heirs, for his homage and ſervice, five acres and a half of arable land, lying diſperſed in the territory of Worthington in the ſeveral places in the deed particularly expreſſed. Hiis teſtibus; Radulpho de Verdon, Philippo de Stanton, Rogero . . . . . . Henrico Picot, Johanne de Ceſtr', Rogero de Wyneliſton, Richardo Coco, Alano de Stanton, & multis aliis[4].

In 1252, Peter de Goldington died ſeiſed of it (being then held in capite of John lord Verdon), by the ſervice of one knight's fee, leaving Maud the wife of ſir Alan Rohaud, and Iſabel wife to Ralph Boſon, his daughters and coheirs, who ſhared this lordſhip and the reſt of their father's inheritance, Dioniſia their ſiſter dying without iſſue[5].

"Aſſiſa venit recognitura ſi Petrus de Goldington, &c. ubi conſtat quod idem Petrus tenuit tenementa in Cotes, Goldington, & Ravenſthorpe, de rege in capite, & obiit ſine herede maſculo; habens tres filias & heredes, ſcilicet, Dioniſſa nupta Miloni de Haſtings, Matildis nupta Alano filio Roaldi, & Iſabella nupta Wiłło Nodariis: ipſi litigaverunt de partibus ſuis[6]."

Boſon's part (or at leaſt a large ſhare of it) came to the abbey of Gerendon; Ralph Boſon of Claxton and Lora his wife granting them one bovate, two virgates, 30*s*. of yearly rent, all Worthington wood, and the whole ſoil to the ſame adjacent, with the coal-mines and common of paſture within the ſaid lordſhip. They had alſo one virgate and five bovates here of the gift of Theobald lord Verdon, conſtable of Ireland. The ſaid Ralph alſo gave them a bovate of land here, held of him by Richard Greye; with the ſame Richard and all his chattels, and their whole ſequel, and an annual rent of 30*s*. and a pound of pepper; releaſing alſo the monks from an accuſtomed rent of half a pound of cumin, and a pair of white gloves[7].

"Omnibus Chriſti fidelibus hoc preſens ſcriptum viſuris vel audituris, Theobaldus de Verdon, conſtabularius Hybernie, ſalutem in Dño. "Omnibus Chriſti, &c. Wiłłus filius Johannis Marmion de Worthington & Emme uxoris ejus, &c. dediſſe &c. Radulpho la . . . & Agnete uxori ejus . . . 1261."

In 1296, it appeared by an inquiſition in the Exchequer, that the town of Worthington was held in fee of the honour of Verdon; and that Theobald de Verdon held lands there of John de Verdon, and John de Verdon of the king[9].

In 1304, Nicholas Kirriel held lands at Worthington; and Nicholas his ſon and heir was aged 21[10].

Roger Colſton, William Pakeman, and others, granted divers lands here to the canons of Bredon; and the Roppeleys ſeem alſo to have had an intereſt here about the time of king Edward I.; for then Gervaſe prior of Bredon gave leave to ſir Simon de Roppeſley, knt. to have a chantry "in capellâ infra dominicam curiam ſuam apud Worthington," for his life only[11].

Roger de Somervile, of Whichnor, co. Stafford, was ſeiſed of lands here and at Newbold in the time of Edward II. which he gave to James his brother, and to the heirs of his body lawfully begotten, for ever[12].

William the ſon of Ralph Sacheverell, of Staunton Harold, granted and confirmed to William the ſon of Robert Sacheverell and Agnes his wife, and their heirs, all his right and claim to a meſſuage and eight acres and a half and one rood of land, with the appurtenances, in Worthington and Newbold. Hiis teſtibus; Henrico de Somervile, Johanne de Worthington, Willielmo de Bredona, Johanne de Fenton, Willielmo Balle de Winlaſton, Simone Pakeman, Johanne de Worthington, Galfrido More de eadem, Simone filio Richardi de eadem, Willielmo de Wodecote de Oſgrethrop, Roberto de Wodecote de eadem, Ada de Thurgiton de Newbold, Roberto filio Simoni filii Jurdani de eadem, Edmundo Epporehull de Aſton, Willielmo Werdon de eadem, Gilberto de Greyſham de eadem, Willielmo de Wattona capello, & aliis. Dated at Worthington, on Eaſter Monday 1305.

Joan the daughter of Ralph Sacheverell, of Staunton Harold, granted and confirmed to William, the ſon of Robert Sacheverell and Agnes his wife, and their heirs, all her right and claim to the meſſuage and lands mentioned in the laſt deed. The ſame witneſſes and date as the laſt deed.

Simon ſon of Richard of Worthington occurs as a juror in 1306[13].

In 1316, Theobald de Verdon held at his death a quarter of one knight's fee, with the appurtenances, in Worthington[14].

In 1328, ſir Robert Holland held the advowſon of Worthington in right of his wife Maud, daughter of Alan la Zouch of Aſhby[15].

Agnes, the relict of William de Sacheverell, clerk, in her pure and legal viduity, granted and confirmed to her ſon Robert de Sacheverell, and his heirs, all her right and claim in all the lands and tenements, rents, poſſeſſions, and reverſions, in the towns of Worthington and Newbold, which he had of the gift of the ſaid William de Sacheverell her huſband. bus; Willielmo de Bredon, Willielmo Pakeman de Worthington, Simone de Heydon de eadem, Thomâ Foucher de Oſmondeſton, Johanne Franceys de eadem, Pagano de Gourney de Belton, Henrico de Weſton de Alweſton, Willielmo de Holton, clerico, & aliis. Dated at Bolton, on Thurſday after St. Lawrence, 1336.

In 1346, Roger de Robaud (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 10*s.* 8*d.* for a quarter and a fortieth part of one knight's fee, and the abbot of Gerondon 12*d.* for a fortieth part of one knight's fee, in Worthington and Newbold, parcel of the fee of Tutbury[1].

Robaud's lands paſſed in marriage by an heir-general in 1360 to ſir Thomas de Champernon, as hath been ſhewn under Claxton[2]; and in that year Elizabeth de Burg, wife of Theobald de Verdon, deceaſed, held a quarter of one knight's fee, with the appurtenances, in Worthington and Newbold Verdon, which Thomas de Champernon and his wife and other freeholders held there[3].

Thomas Pigott, ſon and heir of John Pigott, of Worthington, granted and confirmed to John Maneille, of the ſame place, and his heirs, one acre of land in Worthington and Newbold. Hiis teſtibus; Johanne Pond de Worthington; Johanne Bayle de eadem; Richard' Balle de eadem; Johanne Thaxton de eadem; Johanne Dexter de eadem; & multis aliis. Dated at Worthington, on Wedneſday next before the feaſt of the Aſcenſion, 1443.

Roger de Coleſton granted and confirmed to Adam Sturgunt, of Newbold, and his heirs, one half acre of land lying in the fields of Worthington, and another half acre of land lying on a piece of ground called The Wolgergriff. Hiis teſtibus; Olivero Pygot de Worthington, Hugone de Braunſton de eadem, Petro Dering de eadem, Simone filio Richardi de eadem, Willo Payn de Newbold, Galfrido Pygot de eadem, Richardo Petit de eadem, & aliis[4].

May 16, 1462, king Edward IV. granted divers lands at Worthington and Whitwick (late parcel of the poſſeſſions of John Beaumont, eſq.) to Richard Haſtings, eſq. and his heirs male[5].

In 1475, ſir John Champernon died ſeiſed of the manor of Worthington, held of John Marbury; leaving Blanch the wife of Robert Willoughby lord Broke, and Joan married to —— Talbot, his daughters and coheirs, the latter of whom died without iſſue[6].

This manor came ſoon after, by purchaſe, it is ſuppoſed, to Henry Winter, who died ſeiſed of it Aug. 10, 1491.

In 1507, certain lands and tenements at Worthington and Newbold were held by —— Talbot of the king, as of the dutchy of Lancaſter, by the ſervice of 13*s.* 4*d.* a year[7].

In 1528, William Compton died ſeiſed of the manor of Worthington, held of the king, as of his honour of Tutbury[8].

In 1536, the tithes of Worthington, Wilſton, and Tonge, with thoſe of Staunton, were leaſed, by the prior of Bredon, to Thomas Shirley, eſq. who, after the diſſolution of the priory, obtained a grant of them from queen Elizabeth[9].

In 1540, Robert Winter died ſeiſed of this manor[10]; which Robert was father to George Winter[11], who married Anne, daughter and coheir to John Herdwicke, of Lindley; and by her had iſſue Edward Winter, who aliened it to Griffin Hanmer, eſq.; who held the manor of Worthington in capite about 1605.

In 1564, there were 34 families in Worthington and Newbold.

March 29, 1606, ſir Henry Beaumont died ſeiſed of the tithes of wheat, grain, and hay, in Worthington, Newbold, and Wilſon[12].

Soon after this period, the manor of Worthington was purchaſed by dame Judith Corbett[13].

In a ſubſidy of 1617, are theſe entries:

"Bredon. William Davenant, gent. in terris 4*l.*
Worthington, Newbold, and Stanton:
Sir Henry Shirley, bart. in terris (ſum omitted).
Dame Judith Corbett, in terris 3*l.*
Thomas Boothbie, gent. in terris 3*l.*

The family of Winter continued to reſide here, though they had no longer the manor; for, in 1619, their pedigree was entered as of this place[14].

Lands here were alſo poſſeſſed at that period by the family of Pilkington, of Staunton le Dale in Derbyſhire; whoſe pedigree is preſerved by Mr. Le Neve[15].

The Winters ſeem to have removed to Carcolſton[16] in Nottinghamſhire, and afterwards to Langley in Derbyſhire; from one of which places the MS. of Mr. Baſſano preſerves the following neat epitaph on Mrs. Dorothy Winter, ſpinſter:

"Occidet heu Virgo nulli pietate fecunda;
Terras deſtituit, quiſque ſuperna petit.
Abſterſit lachrymas merito quas fudimus omnes,
Ac Letho luctum lætitiamque tulit."

"Worthington was given by dame Judith Corbett, to Thomas Boothby her ſecond ſon; which Judith was daughter to Thomas Auſtin, of Oxley farm in Staffordſhire, and was firſt married to William Boothby, citizen of London, by whom ſhe had iſſue, William, who died without iſſue; Thomas, now (1641) lord of this manor and of Tooley Park; Henry, a citizen of London; Richard, to whom ſhe gave the manor of Marſton; and Robert; and one daughter, Elizabeth, married to ſir Andrew Corbett, of Norton, knt. This Judith took to her ſecond huſband, William Baſſett, of Blore, in the county of Stafford, eſq. by whom ſhe had an only daughter and coheir, Elizabeth, firſt married to Henry Howard, third ſon to Thomas earl of Suffolk; and after to William earl of Newcaſtle. She was laſtly married to ſir Richard Corbett, of Morton Corbett, knight of the Bath, by whom ſhe had no iſſue; and, ſurviving him, and having attained great riches, purchaſed a great eſtate in this and other counties; all which ſhe left to her ſon by her firſt huſband. She died in 1640, aged 74[17]."

On the 2d of June, 1660, the effects of a whirlwind were ſeverely felt in this and the adjacent villages, which was thus deſcribed by two contemporary writers:

"About three or four of the clock in the afternoon it began to be very dark with clouds, as if ſome very great ſtorm were ready to come; which occaſioned many people about Worthington to repair from the fields into their houſes; and ſuddenly there aroſe a mighty whirlwind, which untiled and unthatched many of the houſes in Worthington; and thence it went to Worthington hall, where the effects were as great or greater. It took away, or caſt down, ſeveral bays of a building there, bringing down the great barn. Alſo it took up a great log of wood from a mill-pond, whirling it out. And ſo it paſſed on to a wood called Spring wood, where the place that it paſſed through may be yet diſcerned, by the great trees blown down, and arms of trees, and unbarking of many trees, &c. Thence it paſſed along to Tonge, a village near it, where it blew down many trees, tearing ſome up by the roots. Amongſt other things there, major Benſkin told Mr. Archdale Palmer, late high-ſheriff, that it took away a hive of bees of his, of which he could never hear ſince. And though there was harm to dogs, by the fall of tiles, &c. the Lord wonderfully preſerved men, women, and children [1]."

[16] Mr. Robert Winter, vicar of Carcolſton, purchaſed in 1599 a houſe at Langley, a pretty village near Heanor in Derbyſhire; which is deſcribed as "a ſweet gentleman's ſeat, eſpecially by the then Mr. Edward Winter's improvement thereof in 1680, by making gardens, orchards, and a little paddock for deer; but ſince, at the Revolution, by his misfortune of being a Nonjuror, he was forced to ſell this eſtate, which was purchaſed by ſir Nathanael Curzon, bart. The pedigree of this branch of the family is thus ſtated in Dr. Pegge's MS Collections for Derbyſhire:

Robert Winter, vicar of Carcolſton 1599.=..... widow of ..... Warde, a freeholder in Carcolſton.

Edmund* Winter, vicar of Carcolſton, living 1677; settled at Langley.=Frances, daughter of William Leapur, of Oſmaſton near Derby, and widow of ..... Johnſon.

Elizabeth, dau. of Robert Spenſer, of Holehouſe, died ſ. p.=Edward Winter, of Langley, 1689.=........ 2d wife.

Elizabeth, married to Edward Elliott, of Heanor.

A Mr. Robert Winter, couſin german to Edward, was living at Dunſtable in 1686.

[17] Burton, MS. 1641.

* Not Edward, as in Thoroton, p. 126. He did not immediately ſucceed his father in the vicarage. A Mr. Johnſon intervened, who was the moſt famous ſchool-maſter of his time, and was the author of a book of Latin Epigrams, printed at London by John Beale, 1685.

"Near the town of Worthington, began a very dreadful whirlwind; which turned an houſe on one ſide, tore up a great tree by the roots, caſting it four or five yards from the place where it grew; it rent off the great limbs of an apple-tree, and threw down a houſe into the ſtreet; the chapel was ſorely ſhaken, and the chancel in danger of falling; then paſſed off with great force and noiſe to Worthington hall, where it overturned five bays of barn building and a gate-houſe. It blew down a ſtack of chimnies, and hurried a man into the orchard, where with his arm he catched hold of a tree, and ſo ſtayed himſelf. Hence it paſſed, renting trees and turning ſome up by the roots, to a houſe that ſtands alone, where it took away a load of thorns, few of which could ever be found after; it took out alſo the ſide of another houſe. At a town called Tonge, it overthrew a bay of barn building, and rent a houſe, where a woman with three children were miraculouſly preſerved; to this houſe alſo it brought a great log of wood, none knows from whence. Between Worthington and Tonge, it is conceived that this wind rent off, and turned up by the roots, twenty loads of wood; it carried away likewiſe a hive of bees, which could not afterward be heard of. This whirlwind ran three miles in length, and the effects of it were ſeen above 20 yards in breadth. Some ſay that flames of fire were ſeen in it [2]."

This manor, and a conſiderable eſtate, with the old manor-houſe, which has been for a ſeries of years ruinous, was purchaſed from the Boothbys, about 1676, by ſir Robert Shirley, bart. (afterwards created earl Ferrers.)

In 1722, 11 freeholders polled from Bredon, and 15 from Worthington; and, in 1775, 11 from Bredon, and 20 from Worthington.

By an act of parliament paſſed in 1802, for dividing, allotting, and incloſing, within the manors of Worthington and Bredon on the Hill, and townſhip of Newbold, all in the pariſh of Bredon on the Hill, the ſeveral open fields, meadows, commons, and waſte grounds, called Brandfield, Smoyle, otherwiſe Linvilfield, and Bredon-field, and alſo a certain open or lot meadow, called The Mill Meadow, and ſeveral commons or waſte grounds, called The Brand, The Griffy Dam, The Gelſmore, and The Newbold Hurſt, and other commonable lands and waſte grounds, containing together by eſtimation about 1200 acres. In this act the right honourable George Harry earl of Stamford and Warrington is deſcribed as the ſole lord of the manor of Bredon on the Hill, and of the ſoil of the common called The Brand therein [3]; the right honourable Robert earl Ferrers as lord of the manor of Worthington; and the ſaid earl of Stamford and Warrington, ſir George Howland Beaumont, bart. and John Mynors Bulſtrode, gent. as lords of the ſoil of the ſeveral commons and waſte grounds within the ſaid manor of Worthington, as follows; viz. the ſaid earl of Stamford and Warrington is ſole lord of the ſoil of a certain part of the common called Griffy Dam, and John Mynors Bulſtrode, gent. ſole lord of the ſoil of the reſidue of the ſaid common called Griffy Dam; ſir George Howland Beaumont, bart. ſole lord of the ſoil of the ſaid commons called Gelſmore and Newbold Hurſt; and the ſaid John Mynors Bulſtrode ſole lord of the ſoil of the town ſtreets and the other waſte grounds in Worthington and Newbold aforeſaid; and the ſaid earl of Stamford and Warrington, ſir George Howland Beaumont, and John Mynors Bulſtrode, in their ſeveral rights as aforeſaid, entitled to all cottages and buildings erected upon the ſaid commons and waſte grounds, and to all mines and minerals whatſoever within and under the ſame. The earl of Stamford and Warrington is alſo deſcribed as patron of the vicarage of Bredon on the Hill; George Iliff Foſter, clerk, as the preſent vicar. And the earl of Stamford and Warrington, ſir John Palmer, bart. and Clement Winſtanley, eſq. as the now ſurviving truſtees of a charity for the augmentation of ſmall vicarages in the county of Leiceſter, called Tobias Ruſtat's Charity, are impropriators of all the great tithes; and the ſaid George Iliff Foſter, as vicar, entitled to the ſmall tithes, of the common called The Brand; Nathaniel lord Scarſdale is the impropriator of the tithes of corn, grain, hay, wool, and lamb, and the ſaid John Mynors Bulſtrode impropriator of the ſmall tithes, ariſing within the manor of Worthington and townſhip of Newbold; and earl Ferrers, ſir George Howland Beaumont, Edward Dawſon, eſq. Joſeph Boultbee, eſq. and the ſaid John Mynors Bulſtrode, William Frearſon, John Hackett, and others, are the owners and proprietors of certain antient meſſuages or common-right houſes, ſituate within the ſaid manor of Worthington and townſhip of Newbold aforeſaid, in reſpect whereof they are entitled to the herbage of all the ſaid commons or waſte grounds, and to right of common at certain ſeaſons of the year upon the ſaid open fields and common meadows; and they, together with the ſaid George Harry earl of Stamford and Warrington, Nathaniel lord Scarſdale, and others, are entitled to all the lands in the ſaid open fields and meadows, and the right of common thereon. An allotment, not exceeding two acres, is firſt directed to be made, for the purpoſe of public watering-places for cattle, or for getting materials for making and repairing public roads; and, after the roads are ſet out, lord Scarſdale, as impropriator, to have ſuch an allotment as ſhall be equal in value to one-ſixth part of the reſidue of all the open fields, and one-tenth part of the reſidue of the commons called Griffy Dam, Gelſmore, and Newbold Hurſt, and of the antient or preſent incloſed lands within the manor of Worthington and townſhip of Newbold. The commiſſioners are then to allot to the earl of Stamford and Warrington, ſir John Palmer, and Clement Winſtanley, eſq. as truſtees as aforeſaid, ſo much of the common called The Brand, as ſhall be equal in value to one-tenth part of the ſaid common called The Brand; which ſaid allotments, ſo to be made to lord Scarſdale, the earl of Stamford and Warrington, ſir John Palmer, and Clement Winſtanley reſpectively, to be in full compenſation for all the great and other tithes whatſoever belonging to the ſaid lord Scarſdale, ariſing within the ſaid manor of Worthington and townſhip of Newbold, and for all the great tithes belonging to the ſaid earl of Stamford and Warrington, ſir John Palmer, and Clement Winſtanley, as truſtees, ariſing from the common or waſte ground called The Brand. The ſaid commiſſioners are next to allot to John Mynors Bulſtrode ſuch part of the lands intended to be divided as ſhall be equal in value to all the ſmall tithes, and payments in lieu of ſmall tithes, belonging to the ſaid John Mynors Bulſtrode, ariſing within the manor of Worthington and townſhip of Newbold; and alſo allot to the ſaid George Iliff Foſter, as vicar of Bredon on the Hill, and his ſucceſſors, ſuch part of the common called The Brand, as ſhall be equal in value to the ſmall tithes, and payments in lieu of ſmall tithes, belonging to the ſaid George Iliff Foſter as vicar aforeſaid, ariſing and renewing from and out of the ſaid common called The Brand; which allotments reſpectively ſhall be in full compenſation for all the ſaid ſmall tithes, and payments in lieu of ſmall tithes, belonging to the ſaid John Mynors Bulſtrode, ariſing within the manor of Worthington and townſhip of Newbold, and for all the ſmall tithes, and payments in lieu of ſmall tithes, of the ſaid George Iliff Foſter as vicar, ariſing from the common called The Brand. An allotment is then to be made to the earl of Stamford and Warrington, ſir George Howland Beaumont, and John Mynors Bulſtrode, as lords as aforeſaid, in ſeveralty, and, according to ſuch their ſeveral and reſpective rights and intereſts as aforeſaid, of ſo much of the reſidue of the commons and waſte grounds hereby intended to be divided as ſhall be equal in value to one-eighteenth part of the whole of the ſaid commons and waſte grounds, as a full recompence for their right to the ſoil of the ſaid commons and waſte grounds. The reſidue of the lands and grounds intended to be divided unto and amongſt the ſeveral perſons who, at the time of making ſuch diviſion and incloſure, ſhall be entitled to lands, property, or right of common, in, over, or upon the ſame, in proportion and according to their reſpective ſhares, rights, property, and intereſts therein; and the allotment to be made to earl Ferrers, in lieu of his lands in the ſaid open fields, and his ſeveral rights of common, to be ſet out and allotted in Smoyle-field and Bredon-field, or one of them, in ſuch ſituation as the ſaid earl Ferrers ſhall direct, ſo that the ſame be not laid out nearer to the townſhip of Bredon on the Hill aforeſaid, than the range of the eſtate of the ſaid Robert earl Ferrers in Staunton Harold. All cottages or tenements now ſtanding upon The Brand and part of Griffy Dam to be allotted to the earl of Stamford and Warrington, as lord of the manor and ſoil. And all cottages and other buildings now ſtanding upon the commons and waſte grounds, called the Griffy Dam, the Gelſmore, and the Newbold Hurſt, together with the gardens and intakes from ſuch commons and waſte grounds uſed and enjoyed therewith, for or in reſpect of which, within 20 years immediately preceding the paſſing of this act, any rent or acknowledgement hath been paid to the ſaid ſir George Howland Beaumont and John Mynors Bulſtrode, or either of them, ſhall be deemed to belong to them the ſaid ſir George Howland Beaumont and John Mynors Bulſtrode, their heirs and aſſigns, according to their ſeveral and reſpective rights as lords as aforeſaid, and ſhall be allotted to them according to their ſaid ſeveral and reſpective rights by the ſaid commiſſioners, upon a valuation to be made of ſuch gardens and intakes, according to their unimproved ſtate, and the quality and value of the common land adjoining thereto; and that all other intakes, encroachments, and incloſures, made upon or from the ſaid commons and waſte grounds within 20 years as aforeſaid, or for or in reſpect of which any rent or acknowledgement hath within that period been paid or made to ſeveral perſons having right of common on the ſaid commons and waſte grounds, ſhall be deemed to be part of the ſaid commons and waſte grounds intended to be divided in purſuance of this act. The tithe-owners to be exempt from the expence of obtaining and executing this act, and of ring fencing their allotments. Proprietors not having ſufficient property in the lands to be incloſed, to pay the value of their tithes in money. The award to be made by the ſaid commiſſioners by the ſaid recited act is to be depoſited in the antient priory church of Bredon on the Hill, or ſuch other place as the ſaid commiſſioners ſhall appoint. A reſervation of the minerals under the commons to Harry earl of Stamford and Warrington, ſir George Howland Beaumont, and John Mynors Bulſtrode, as lords of the manors. And a proviſo, that this act ſhall not prejudice the right of earl Ferrers to the manor of Worthington, or to the ſeigniories, royalties, game, fiſheries, rights, cuſtoms, and ſervices, incident or belonging to the ſaid manor; but that it ſhall be lawful for the ſaid earl, his heirs and aſſigns, as lord or lords of the ſaid manor, at all times hereafter, to have, hold, enjoy, receive, and take, all courts and profits of courts, rents, ſervices, fines, chief rents, or quit rents, royalties and privileges, incident and belonging to the ſaid manor; and take, kill, and deſtroy, at his and their free will and pleaſure, all manner of game upon any lands and grounds within the ſaid manor, to and for his and their own uſe.

[3] The Brand is a common in the pariſh of Bredon, which has been open to the inhabitants of Worthington; and on that account is incloſed under that act.

The lordſhip conſiſts of ſeveral farms; of which the chief is poſſeſſed by earl Ferrers, who has conſiderable property here; is lord of the manor, and poſſeſſes the mill and brook which turns the wheel.

The townſhips of Worthington and Newbold, by the return to parliament in 1801, contained 249 inhabited houſes, and 6 uninhabited; having in them 524 males, 572 females, total 1096. Of theſe 210 were chiefly employed in agriculture, and 158 in trade, manufacture, or handicraft.

GRIFFY, OR GRIFFITH'S DAM, is a little hamlet, or vill, within the lordſhip of Worthington, ſituate near Cole Orton moor; and has within it a mineral ſpring, ſuppoſed to be chalybeate[1].

In the election of 1722, William Dexter polled as a freeholder in Griffy Dam.

In the poll-book of 1775, two freeholders of Worthington (James Radford, and Francis Swann potcarrier) are entered as reſident at Griffy Dam.

The CHAPEL (ſee Plate XCII.)

dedicated to St. Matthew, conſiſts of a low tower; a South porch; a nave and chancel, and has five old lancet windows. The ſeats are old, and open.

On the ſides of the altar are a piſcina and locker.

It was given (with Bredon) to the priory of Noſtell by Robert de Ferrariis earl of Nottingham[2].

In 1552, the commiſſioners reported that the chapel of Worthington contained,

"In primis, two belles in the ſteple.
Itm, one chalice of ſylver.
Itm, tow veſtementes, wythe the albes to them belonginge."

Worthington is deſcribed, in Bacon's Liber Regis, to be a curacy in the gift of lord Scarſdale.

The chapel is endowed with £12. a year, payable by the impropriator.

There has been Queen Anne's bounty added twice to it; and the curacy is now about £50. a year.

The preſent curate is the Rev. Francis Harris, vicar of Whitwick, and reſident at Cole Orton.

[1] Iron-ſtone is commonly found where there is coal; but not always coal where there is iron-ſtone. Conſequently there are generally chalybeate ſprings in the neighbourhood of coal-mines. See Short on Mineral Waters.

COLE-ORTON,

antiently called Ovretone, takes its name of diſtinction from the pit-coals ſcattered on the moor, which for more than two centuries have been dug here in great abundance, to the great profit of the lords of the ſoil[1]. It conſiſts of two townſhips; one called The Over Town, or Cole-Orton Saucey; the other The Nether Town, or Overton Quatermarſh, or Quatremains, from the antient lords thereof[2] ſo named. It is a beautiful high ſituation, commanding a circle of country on every ſide; one way to the hills of Bradgate and Charley Foreſt; another to Gracedieu; a third to Donington; and a fourth to Staunton Harold, &c. &c. It is two miles diſtant from Aſhby de la Zouch; twelve from Loughborough; and ſeventeen from Hinckley; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Akeley.

Four ploughlands in Ovretone[3], which in the time of king Edward had employed ſix ploughs, and were valued at twelve pence, were worth four ſhillings at the general ſurvey, when they were held by Warin under Robert de Buci. One plough was then in the demeſne; and two villans, with one bordar, had another. There was a wood two furlongs long, and one broad[4].

On the aid granted to king Henry III. in 1235, towards the marrying of his ſiſter with the emperor of the Romans, we find "De quartâ parte unius militis, & de dimidiâ quarte partis de Adâ de Quatremars 10s̄. de feodo Marmiun." Alſo, "De dim' feod' quod Ada de Quatremars tenet in Gouteby 2 marcas."

In the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about 1240, Houton Quatremars is deſcribed as conſiſting of one ploughland, and Houton Sauce another ploughland.

"In Ov̄ton Sauce & Swannĩton 8ta ꝑs feodi, quã heres Rob̄ti de la Sauce tenet de Philippo de Stanton, & ĩp̄e de Will̄o de Picheford, & ĩp̄e de comite de Ferrariis.

"In Overton Quatermars 8 ꝑs unius feodi, quam Galfridus Maurewart tenet de Rad̄o Baſſet de Drayton, & ĩp̄e de Radulpho de Weledon[5]."

In the Itinerary of 1280, Overton Sauſe, Overton Quatremers, Aſhby de la Zouch, Blackfordby, and Alton, anſwered collectively as one vill.

OVERTON SAUCEY, OR SALCEY,

(for ſo it is written in an old deed) was the antient inheritance of Henry de Ferrariis, who enfeoffed James de Berneville therein; from whom deſcended Ralph de Berneville; who, by deed without date, paſſed it to Simon de Salcey (whence the additional name); which was alſo confirmed to him by William earl de Ferrariis, chief lord of the fee.

Robert earl de Ferrariis, ſon of Robert, gave to the abbey of Merevale, which he had founded, the whole of his property in Wytenton, with the manors of Weſton, Overton Saucey, &c.

In 1280, it was found that Roger de Quincy earl of Winton died ſeiſed of four knights' fees in Eſſeby, Blackfordby, Culverdby, Overton, Glenn, Carleton, and Rolleſton, co. Leiceſter (value £20. each), which Alexander Zouch held; Eleanor de Vaux, relict of the ſaid Roger earl of Winton, held the ſaid four knights' fees in dower; and Roger la Zouch, ſon and heir of Helena, one of the daughters and coheirs of Roger Quincy, held the ſame under her and the heirs of the ſaid earl[6]; and in 1313, Nicholas de Cranford held the twelfth part of one knight's fee in Overton Saucey of Alan la Zouch, deceaſed[7].

In 1328, ſir Robert de Holand died ſeiſed, as of the right and inheritance of Maud his wife, one of the daughters and coheirs of Alan la Zouch of Aſhby, of the twelfth part of one knight's fee, with the appurtenances, in Overton Sauſe (value 60*s*.) which Nicholas de Cranford held[8].

Maud relict of Robert de Holland gave to the abbot and convent of Garendon all her lands and tenements at Overton Sauce. They had alſo one virgate of land in that vill, the gift of Robert Loveyn; and an annual rent of 8*d*. the gift of Henry le Gru, ſon of Geoffrey le Gru; a bovate and ſeven ſelions from Simon de la Sauceye, with paſture for eight cows and a bull, 100 ſheep, and 20 hogs.

This village came afterwards to John le Archer[9]; to whom in 1335 the king granted the liberty of free-warren in all his demeſne lands here and at Tamworth; and who in 1346 (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 10*s*. for a quarter of one knight's fee in Overton Sauſe and Swannington, parcel of the honour of Lancaſter[10]; and in this family it long continued.

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Overton Sauce was rated at £1. 9*s*.; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 14*s*.; Overton Quatremere at £1. 5*s*. and 5*s*. 4*d*. abated.

In 1463, Thomas Walſhe. of Onlep, eſq. at his death was ſeiſed of one meſſuage, 24 acres of land, and 12 acres of meadow, in Overton Saucey[11].

Sir Humphrey Foſter held lands in Overton Saucey of the abbot of Merevale[12].

In the reign of king Henry VIII. Richard Archer ſold this lordſhip to Ralph Sheldon, of Beoley, co. Worceſter; in whoſe poſterity it remained in 1641.

OVERTON QUATERMARSH.

In 1218, Willielmus de Quatremaris debet 20 marcas, pro habendâ gratiâ regis[13]; and in 1220 this William occurs as owner of the lordſhip of Overton, and patron of the rectory.

Sir Adam de Quatremarſh, knight, the laſt of the name, did homage, as brother and heir of William, in 1235[14]. He left iſſue an only daughter Ada, who brought this lordſhip in marriage to Geoffrey Malreward, or Maureward; whoſe pedigree has been already given under Godeby[15].

In 1303, William Maureward held a grant of free-warren in Overton Quatermers[16].

In 1328, John Clarel held certain lands in Overton Catermars[17]; and William ſon of ſir William Maureward, knt. granted his manor of Overton Quatermars to his ſon John, to hold to him and his heirs[18].

In 1343, Ralph Baſſet of Drayton died ſeiſed of a third part of one knight's fee in Overton Quatermers, which John Maureward held[19].

In 1346, John Maureward died ſeiſed of the manor of Overton Quatermars, held of Joan relict of Ralph Baſſet of Drayton the elder, by the ſervice of a third part of one knight's fee, and paying 6*s*. a year for a warding of Rockingham caſtle; and William Maureward was his ſon and heir[20]; who in the ſame year (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 20*s*. for half a knight's fee in Overton Quatermars, parcel of the fee of Cheſter[21].

In 1426, the manor of Overton Quatermars was brought in marriage, by Philippa daughter and heir of Thomas Maureward, to ſir Thomas Beaumont, knight, lord of Baſqueville in Normandy, ſecond ſon to John lord Beaumont, knight of the Garter, and uncle to John the firſt viſcount; of whom we have already treated[1].

In an act of reſumption paſſed in 1450, proviſion is made that it ſhould not prejudice John viſcount Beaumont, which wedded Elizabeth, daughter and heir unto William lord Bardolf and Jane his wife; and a ſimilar proviſo occurs in 1455[2]. This viſcount John, adhering to the fortune of king Henry VI. was ſlain at the battle of Northampton, July 9, 1490[3].

His couſin, ſir Thomas Beaumont, of Cole Orton and Godeby, was warden of the Cinque Ports and governor of Dover Caſtle; and was ſlain, manfully fighting, in 1457, when the French recovered Paris from the Engliſh. He left two ſons; ſir John Beaumont, of Cole-Orton, of whom hereafter; and Thomas.

Thomas Beaumont, eſq. (the ſecond ſon) was ſeated at Thringſton, near Cole Orton, where he was living in 1495; and, having married Anne, daughter to ſir Robert Moton, of Peckleton, in that county, left iſſue his ſon and heir, Thomas Beaumont, eſq. who, about 1530, granted to John Beaumont, eſq. of Cole Orton, and William Curburg, and their heirs for ever, meſſuages, lands, &c. in Cotes, Hodington, Broughton, Preſtwould, Wimeſwould, and Loughborough, for the payment of a certain yearly rent. He married Anne, daughter of —— Harcourt; and had iſſue two daughters; Mary, married to Richard Storey of Braunſton; and Dorothy, to John Rigmaiden; alſo two ſons, John and Edward, progenitor to the Beaumonts of Haulſton and Barrow on Trent. John, the eldeſt ſon, ſucceeded his father at Thringſton; and, having obtained from the crown the ſite of the late diſſolved monaſtery of Gracedieu, fixed that place for the capital manſion of his deſcendants; where an account of that branch of the family has been given[4].

Sir John Beaumont, the eldeſt ſon of the above-mentioned ſir Thomas, was ſlain in the battle of Towtonfield[5], on Palm Sunday, March 29, 1461 (as was alſo Henry Beaumont, of Godeby, gentleman); fighting on the part of king Henry VI; and, at an inquiſition taken in that year, it was found that he died ſeiſed, jointly with Joan his wife, daughter of John lord Darcy of the North, of the manor of Overton Quatermars; and that John Beaumont was his ſon and heir[6].

In an act of attainder paſſed in 1461, immediately after the acceſſion of Edward IV, we find the names of William viſcount Beaumont, John Beaumont, late of Goodby in the ſhire of Leyc', gentleman, Henry Beaumont, late of the ſame, gentleman, Thomas Everyngham, late of Newhall in the ſhire of Leyc', Everard Dykby, late of Stokedry, in the county of Rutland, eſq. and many others; who "on Sonday, called comynly Palme Sunday, the xxix day of Marche, the firſt yere of his reigne, in a feld bitwene the townes of Shirbourne in Elmett, and Tadcaſtr' in the ſhire of York, called Saxtonfeld and Towton feeld, in the ſhire of York, accompanyed with the Frenſhmen and Scotts, the kynges ennemyes, falſely and traiterouſly, ayenſt their feith and liegeaunce, there rered werre ayenſt the ſame kyng Edward, their rightwiſe, true, and naturall liege lord, purpoſyng there to have diſtroyed hym, and depoſed hym of his roiall eſtate, coroune, and dignite; and then and there, to that entent, falſely and traiterouſly moved bataille ayeinſt his ſeid eſtate, ſhedyng therin the blode of a grete nombre of his ſubgetts: in the which bataille it pleaſed Almyghty God to yeve unto hym, of the myſterie of his myght and grace, the victorie of his ennemyes and rebelles, and to ſubdue and avoyde th'effect of their fals and traiterous purpoſe[7]."

May 16, 1462, king Edward IV. granted the manor of Overton Quatermars, with divers lands in Overton Saucey (late parcel of the poſſeſſions of John Beaumont) to Richard Haſtings, eſq. and his heirs male. The patent is remarkable, and runs thus; "Rex omnibus ad quos, &c. ſalutem. Memoriâ reducentes diutina & laudabilia ſervicia necnon probitatem actûs dilecti ſervitoris noſtri Ricardi Haſtinges, armigeri, qualiter idem Ricardus ad ſui grandia cuſtus & onera, perſoneque ſue pericula multimoda in ſervicio noſtro, in conflictibus & preliis erga inimicos rebelles & proditores noſtros contra nos hoſtiliter guerram levantes, & in aliis agendis, noſtris viriliterque & prudenter ſe expoſuit, ac pronâ ſolicitudine deſervire non deſiſtit circa perſonam noſtram aſſiſtendo, &c.; conceſſimus, &c."[8]

In the Rolls of 1464, occurs the following record:

"To oure truſty and right welbeloved counſeillours maiſter John Moreton, clerc of oure rolles in oure chauncerye, and maiſter John Gunthorp, clerc of oure parliament, and to either of them.

"By the King.

A proviſo nearly ſimilar occurs in the Rolls of Parliament 1467-8, as far as relates to all the places above ſpecified, excepting that "the ſaid acte, as ayenſt the ſaid Richard and every of his heires, take effect, to and for the manor of Cotes, with th' appurtenaunce, beſide Lugburgh, in the ſhire of Leyc'."[2]

On an inquiſition taken in November 1464, it was found that John Beaumont, eſq. attainted of high-treaſon, Nov. 4, 1464, had been ſeiſed of the manor and demeſne of Overton Quatermars, with the advowſon of the church there; and alſo of one meſſuage and two virgates of land, with the appurtenances, in Overton Saucey[3]; and on the 8th of that month king Edward IV. re-granted the manor and demeſne of Overton Quatremars, with the advowſon (late parcel of the forfeited poſſeſſions of John Beaumont) to Richard Haſtings, eſq. and his heirs[4].

In 1485, the following petition was preſented:

"To the king oure liege lord; humbly beſecheth your noble grace, your true ſubjett and leigeman, John Beaumont, eldeſt ſon of Henry Beaumont, late of Goodeby in the ſhire of Leyceſtre, gentilman, whiche in the ſervice of the moſte bleſſed and Criſten prynce Henry the VIth, late king of England, upon Palme Sunday, in the felde called Saxton felde, in battail was ſlayn; and after, for that cauſe, was by an acte of atteyndre, made in the parliament of Edward the IVth, late king of England, holden at Weſtm' the iiiith day of Novemb', in the firſt yere of his raigne, atteynt of high treaſon; and, by the ſame acte, forfeited to the ſame late king all his inheritaunce; as in the ſame acte is expreſſed more at large;" praying a reverſal of the attainder[5].

At the ſame time the following petition was preſented:

"To the right wyſe and diſcrete Comynes in this preſent Parliament aſſembled; in moſte humble wyſe ſheweth unto your greate wyſdomes, John Beaumont, eldeſt ſon of John Beaumont, late of Goodby in the ſhire of Leic', gentilman, ſlayn at Caxton feld. That where the ſaid John de fadre, by an acte of parliament, made in the parliament of Edward the IVth late king of England, holden atte Weſtm' the iiiith day of Novemb', the firſt yere of his raigne, for the true and faithfull allegeaunce and ſervice whiche the ſaid John Beaumont the fadre owed and did to the moſte famous and bleſſed prynce king Henry the VIth, it was ordeyned, eſtabliſhed, and enacted, that the ſaid John Beaumont the fader, by the name of John Beaumont late of Goodby in the ſhire of Leic', among other, ſhuld ſtande and be convicted and atteynted of high treaſon, and forfeite to the ſaid Edward late king, and to his heires, all caſtelles, mannors, landes, lordſhipps, tennements, rentes, ſervices, fees, advowſons, hereditaments, and poſſeſſions, with their appurtenaunces, which he had of eſtate of enheritaunce, or eny other to his uſe hadde, the iiiith day of Marche then laſt paſte, or into the whiche the ſaid John the fadre, or eny other perſone or perſones, feoffes to his uſe or behoofe, hadde the ſame iiiith daie of March lawfull cauſe of entre, within England, Ireland, Wales, or Caleis, or in the Marches therof; as in the ſame acte more pleynly appeareth;" praying alſo a reverſal of the attainder[6].

The prayer of both theſe petitions were complied with; and the attainders accordingly reverſed.

It does not appear, by any of the Baronetages or Viſitations, who the Henry Beaumont of Godeby was, that was killed in the battle of 1461; and what became of his ſon John; who in 1485 procured the reverſal of his father's attainder.

John Beaumont, eſq. the ſon of ſir John Beaumont, was reſtored to his paternal inheritance at Cole Orton and Godeby; and was made a knight of the Bath in 1490, at the creation of Arthur prince of Wales. He married Alice, daughter of ſir William Fielding, of Newnham Padox, anceſtors to the earls of Denbigh; and, dying without iſſue, Aug. 11, 1531, in his 86th year, left his eſtates to his great nephew Richard Beaumont, eſq. grandſon of his brother George who died in 1530, and ſon of William who died in 1529.

A younger ſon of the ſaid George Beaumont was George Beaumont, of Kent, who married Elizabeth Leigh, widow of Robert Luſher; and whoſe ſon Henry Beaumont, after taking the degree of B. A. at Cambridge, was incorporated at Oxford Feb. 1, 1571-2; having been elected about the beginning of November preceding fellow of All Souls college, as founder's kinſman by his mother's ſide. He was deputy proctor in 1531; and was preſented to the rectory of Long Ditton, co. Surrey; became D. D. Nov. 7, 1616, being a compounder, and at that time a canon of Windſor; was inſtalled dean of Peterborough, March 20, 1616-17; dean of Windſor May 18, 1622; and regiſter of the order of the Garter, with an annual ſtipend of 50*l.* Aug. 24, 1622[7]. He died June 30, 1627; and was buried in St. George's church at Windſor, near the door of the chapter-houſe[8].

On the marriage of the above-named Richard Beaumont with Collet, daughter of Richard Clerke, of Buckingham, eſq. the manor of Cole-Orton was ſettled by his grand-father George to divers uſes; reverſion to his ſon William and his heirs[9]. It appears that he was taken priſoner in the wars in the ſervice of king Henry VIII.; and that he regained his liberty by the ſale of a part of his eſtates[10]. He died Oct. 18, 1537, ſeiſed of the manor of Godeby, with divers lands there; a meſeplace in Oſgathorpe, and 152 acres in Oſgathorpe and Hothorpe; the manor of Overton Quatremars, worth £20. held of the king, as of the fee of Cheſter, by the fourth part of a knight's fee; and the manor of Congeſton, held of the lord Grey of Barwell, by the 20th part of a knight's fee and 1*d.* rent; lands and tenements in Cotes, Preſtwould, Hoton, Harborough, and Burton, held of the king as of the 40th part of a knight's fee and a rent of 20*d.* as of the honour of Leiceſter; the manor of Overton Saucey, worth 20*ſ.* held of the king, by the fourth part of a knight's fee, as of the dutchy of Lancaſter; and lands and tenements in Whitwick, held of the king, as of the honour of Winton, by the half of one fifth part of a knight's fee[11]. His widow was re-married to William Villiers, eſq. of Brokeſby; who by her was anceſtor to the earls of Jerſey. She was alſo grandmother of the duke of Buckingham, &c. Her father was elder brother to that ſir John Clerke who took the duke of Longueville priſoner 5 Henry VIII.

Of Nicholas Beaumont, his ſon and heir, and ſucceſſor in the manor of Overton, who was 11 years old on the 25th of November after his brother's death, an account has already been given, with his epitaph at Welford[12]. His Funeral Certificate ſhall here be added:

"The worſhipfull Mr. Nicholas Beaumont, of Cole-overton, in the countie of Leyceſter, eſquier, departed thys lyfe at Lambethe, nere London, the 11th daye of July, anno 1584, and was brought to be buryed, from his howſe in Bowe church-yard, to the churche of the late Gray Fryers, called Chriſt's Churche, in London, on Thurſday the 22th of the ſame monethe. The ſaid Nicholas Beaumont married Anne, daughter of William Saunders, of Wilsford, in the county of Northampton, gent. and by her had iſſue Henry Beaumont eldiſt ſone, Francis ſecond ſonne, Thomas and Huntingdon Beaumont, third and forthe ſonnes; his doughters were, Dorothe, maried to William Rande, and Katherin, maried to Anthony Byron, eldeſt ſonne to ſir John Byron, knight. His executor was the foreſaid Henry Beaumont, who maried Elizabeth, doughter of John Loveis, of London, gent. and by her hathe iſſue Thomas Beaumont. Thomas Beaumont, the third ſonne, maried Katherin, daughter and heire to Thomas Farneham, of Staughton in Leceſterſhire, gent. and by her hathe iſſue Henry, Elizabeth, Frances, and Anne. The chiefe mornors were the forſaide Mr. Henry Beaumont, Francis, and Thomas; and the ſaide Huntingdon Beaumont bare the pennon of his father's armes. Mr. Clarencieulx Kinge of armes and Yorke Heralde ordered the ſame funerals. And touchinge the armes of the ſaid Mr. Beaumont (deſcended of honourable anteceſſors), becauſe it was doubtfull for the difference of a ſecond brother heretofore uſed in the ſame, and becauſe it was ſignified unto us officers of armes, that the heires male of thoſe Beaumonts in the county of Suffolk were extinct certeyn yers paſt [1]; in conſideration whereof the ſaid ſecond diffrence was aboliſhed and taken out of the ſaid armes untill further proffe may be made apparant to the contrarye. In witneſſe whereof the ſaid Henry Beaumont, executor, hathe heerunto ſubſcribed for remembrance in the Office of Armes, the 23d daye of July 1585. HENRY BEAUMONT [2]."

Francis Beaumont, eſq. the ſecond ſon of Nicholas, was educated at Cambridge, where he obtained the degree of M. A. and afterwards reſided at Leiceſter; from which place, in 1597, he addreſſed to "his very loving friend, Mr. Thomas Speght," a judicious apology for the ſuppoſed levities of Chaucer [3], prefixed to the edition of that great poet's works in 1598, and which has uſually been attributed to Mr. Francis Beaumont the Dramatic Writer. In 1617, Mr. Beaumont was appointed maſter of the Charter-houſe "by the eſpecial appointment of the king [4];" an office of high honour and truſt; it being an injunction of the founder, that the maſter ſhall not accept any place of preferment or benefit, either in church or commonwealth, whereby he may be drawn from his reſidence, care, and charge of the hoſpital; yet we are ſorry to find it recorded, that, during his maſterſhip, and whilſt Mr. Heywood was regiſter, the foundation ſuſtained a loſs of nearly £8000. [5] In 1622, he obtained a grant of lands from king James I. in the ſeveral counties of Leiceſter, Warwick, and Cambridge, and in the city of Coventry [6]; and, dying June 28, 1624, was buried in the chapel of the Charter-houſe; where, at the Eaſt end of the North aile, not far from the altar, a neat monument, on which is his effigies kneeling at a deſk (and engraved in Plate CXVI. p. 843.) thus completes his hiſtory:

"IN THE VAULT UNDER THE FOWNDER'S TOMBE LIETH BURYED THE BODYE OF FRANCIS BEAUMONT, MASTER OF ARTES, ESQUIER, LATE MASTER OF THIS Yᵉ KINGES HOSPITALL. HE WAS SECONDE
SONNE OF NICHOLAS BEAUMOUNT, OF COLOVERTON, IN THE COUNTY OF LECESʳ, ESQʳ. HE DYED THE 18TH OF JUNE, Aᵒ 1624.
THIS MONUMENT WAS ERECTED BY ELIZABETH LADY RICHARDSON, BARONESS OF CRAMOND IN SCOTLAMD, HIS NECE AND EXECUTRIS, DAUGHʳ TO SIʳ THOMAS BEAUMOUNT, OF STAUTON, IN THE CO. AFFORSAID, AND BROTHER TO Yᵉ SAID FRANCIS."

Sir Thomas Beaumont, third born but ſecond ſurviving ſon of Nicholas, became poſſeſſed, by marriage with Catharine daughter and heir of Thomas Farnham, of the lordſhip of Stoughton; where an account and pedigree of that branch of the family has been given. To this ſir Thomas Beaumont, Henry Beaumont, eſq. of Giltiſham, co. Devon, having no iſſue, paſſed over his eſtate at Giltiſham.

Collaterally related to this family was Joſeph Beaumont, fellow of Peter-houſe, from which he was ejected, April 8, 1644, by the earl of Mancheſter. In 1643, if ſir Henry Chauncy doth not miſtake, he was admitted to the rectory of Kelſhall, Herts; but this Mr. Walker queries, and whether he loſt that living? He was inſtalled by the biſhop of Ely to Elme rectory cum Emneth in the Iſle, April 11, 1646; collated to the firſt ſtall of Ely, Feb. 24, 1647; to the rectory of Granſden Parva, June 3, 1650; to the ſeventh ſtall of Ely in 1651. July 28, 1660, his name was included in the king's letters mandatory to the univerſity of Cambridge, to create doctors, which took place Sept. 5. He was elected maſter of Jeſus college, Cambridge, April 17, 1662; collated to the rectory of Conington in Cambridgeſhire Jan. 23, 1662-3; elected maſter of Peter-houſe April 21, 1663; collated to the rectory of Teverſham, Jan. 18, 1663-4; to that of Bramley, Herts, Jan. 22, 1664; and was appointed Regius Profeſſor of Divinity, March [3] "I am ſorry," ſays Mr. Beaumont, "that neither the worthineſs of Chaucer's own praiſe, nor the importunate prayers of divers your loving friends, can yet move you to put into print thoſe good obſervations and collections you have written of him. For, as for the objections that in our private talk you are wont to ſay are commonly alledged againſt him; as, firſt, that many of his words (as it were with over-long lying) are grown too hard and unpleaſant; and next that he is ſomewhat too broad in ſome of his ſpeeches, and that the work therefore ſhould be the leſs gracious: theſe are no cauſes, or no ſufficient cauſes, to withhold from Chaucer ſuch deſert of glory, as at your pleaſure you may beſtow on him. I cannot forget to remember unto you thoſe antient learned men of our time in Cambridge, whoſe diligence in reading of his works themſelves, and commending them to others of the younger ſort, did firſt bring you and me in love with him; and one of them at that time was, and now is (as you know) one of the rareſt ſcholars in the world. The ſame may be ſaid of that worthy man for learning, your good friend in Oxford, who, with many others of like excellent judgement, have ever held Chaucer in moſt high reputation. Now, Mr. Speght, tell me, ſeeing not only all Greek and Latin Poets have had their interpreters, and the moſt of them tranſlated into our tongue, but the French and Italian, as Guillaume de Saluſte ſeigneur du Bartas, that moſt divine French Poet, Petrarke, and Arioſto, of whom the laſt, inſtructed by lord Harrington, doth now ſpeak as good Engliſh as he did Italian before, and is withall increaſed with many good notes; ſhall only Chaucer our Poet, no leſs worthy than the beſt of them amongſt all the Poets of the world, lie always neglected, and never be ſo well underſtood of his own countrymen as ſtrangers are! Well, ſet your heart at reſt; for, ſeeing I was one of them who firſt ſet you in hand with this work, and ſince you have given me of your copies to uſe privately for mine own pleaſure; if you will not put them abroad yourſelf, they ſhall abroad whether you will or no. Yet, leſt many inconveniences might happen by this attempt of mine, and divers things be ſet forth contrary unto your own liking, let me once again entreat you (as I have done often heretofore) to yield to my juſt and reaſonable ſuit. Wherein you ſhall not only ſatisfy that conceit which I have many years carried of your unfained love towards me; but pleaſure many, who daily expect your pains herein, and perform unto Chaucer great part of that honour that he moſt worthily deſerveth. So with my thrice-hearty commendations, I bid you heartily farewell. From Leiceſter, the laſt of June, anno 1597. Your aſſured and ever-loving friend,

FRANCIS BEAUMONT.

[4] The ſucceſſion of the early maſters of this Hoſpital was rapid. John Hutton, M. A. who had been nominated by the founder Mr. Sutton, was the firſt maſter on the opening of the hoſpital in October 1614; on which, he reſigned his vicarage of Littlebury in Eſſex; and in a few weeks gave up the maſterſhip, on being preſented to the rectory of Duneſby in Lincolnſhire. See Malcolm's Londinium Redevivum, vol. I. p. 416.—Andrew Perne, M. A. of Peter-houſe, Cambridge, the ſecond maſter, was elected Dec. 3, 1614 (ſee vol. II. p. 359). He reſigned in 1615, on being elected proctor of the univerſity of Cambridge; and Feb. 24, 1615-16, was inſtituted to the vicarage of South Minſter in Eſſex. Peter Hooker, B. D. elected 1615, the third maſter, died Dec. 22, 1617; and was buried in the founder's vault, Sept. 14. Mr. Beaumont, the fourth maſter, was buried in 1624.

"This learned perſon," ſays Mr. Jacob, "has given the publick an invaluable work, intituled, 'Pſyche, or Love's Myſtery, in XXIV Cantos; diſplaying the Intercourſe betwixt Chriſt and the Soul;" folio[2].

Charles Beaumont, D. D. fellow of Peter-houſe, (who was buried there March 17, 1726, æt. 66) and ſon of the maſter, was a conſiderable benefactor to that college. He gave his houſe, oppoſite to the college, for a maſter's lodge; a large ſum to purchaſe advowſons; and many valuable MSS. to the library.

A Dr. George Beaumont was inſtalled prebendary at Wincheſter, Sept. 29, 1666.

The ſucceſſor to Nicholas Beaumont at Cole-Orton was Henry the eldeſt ſon; who, not liking Devonſhire, ſold his lands there to one Piott[3]. He was knight of the ſhire for the county of Leiceſter in 1589; high-ſheriff in 1594; and, meeting king James I. at Workſop, in Nottinghamſhire, when he came firſt into England, received from him the honour of knighthood April 20, 1603. He preſented a petition to king James, to be reſtored to the viſcounty, which had been forfeited by the attainder of John lord viſcount Beaumont; but we do not find any further regard was paid to this claim, than creating his ſon Thomas (perhaps in conſideration of it) an Iriſh viſcount, ſeveral years after ſir Henry's death.

The petition and caſe of ſir Henry Beaumont, to be reſtored to be lord viſcount Beaumont, being the male iſſue of that family[4].

"To the King's moſt excellent Majeſty.

"May it pleaſe your Majeſty to underſtand the humble petition of your loyal ſubject, ſir Henry Beaumont, knight; who being deſcended from the antient family of the viſcount Beaumont, and next heir male of the ſaid lyne, as appeareth in this paper within written more plainly; yet, notwithſtanding anie claime which he could juſtly make unto the foreſaid title and honor, humbly referreth himſelf wholly to your gratious favour; deſiring that your Majeſty will vouchſafe to commit this his ſuite unto the right honourable the lords of the counſaile, commiſſioners in that behalf; that your Majeſty may receive by them true information of your ſaid ſubject's humble petition."

"To the King's moſt excellent Majeſtie.

"May it pleaſe your Majeſtie to underſtand the humble petition of your loyal and obedient ſubject, ſir Henry Beaumont, knt. that whereas his anceſtors, time out of mind, as peeres and barons of this realme, in ſundrie kings raignes, have been ſummoned to divers parliaments, and, as viſcounts of this kingdom, in like manner have taken their places; which dignitie and honor did belong to their heires males, and hath continued in their blood, by ſucceſſion, till of late yeares; the laſt viſcount having only iſſue two daughters, the patrimonie being divided, and the dignity diſcontinued, by the nonage of ſome of your petitioner's anceſtors. And foraſmuch as your ſaid ſuppliant is now next heir male of that family; and nothing doubting of your Majeſties princely diſpoſition and inclination to re-edifice the ruines of your declyned nobility; doth moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſties moſt gratious favour, for reſtauration of your ſaid ſuppliant to his ancient right and dignitie; whoſe prayers ſhall be continued for your Majeſties happy preſervation and long reign over us.

"The original of the houſe being firſt highly derived, as appeareth by authentique pedigrees.

"The antiquity and long continuance of them, in the ſtate of peers of the realme, as by the records is manifeſt.

[1] Some elegant Latin letters of his to Dr. Matthew Wren, biſhop of Ely, are preſerved in Harl. MSS. 7049. 9.

[2] The occaſion and deſign of this celebrated piece, the author thus recites in his Preface: "The turbulence of theſe times [the grand rebellion] having deprived me of my wonted accommodations of ſtudy, I deliberated, for the avoiding of mere idleneſs, what taſk I might ſafelieſt preſume upon, without the ſociety of books; and concluded upon compoſing this Poem. In which I endeavour to repreſent a ſoul led by Divine grace, and her guardian angel (in fervent devotion) through the difficult temptations and aſſaults of Luſt, of Pride, of Hereſy, of Perſecution, and of Spiritual Dereliction, to a holy and happy departure from temporal life, to heavenly felicity: Diſplaying by the way, the Magnalia Chriſti, his Incarnation and Nativity, his Flight into Ægypt, his Faſting and Temptation, his chief Miracles, his being ſold and betrayed, his Inſtitution of the Holy Euchariſt, his Paſſion, his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion; which were his mighty teſtimonies of his love to the ſoul. My deſire is, that this book may prompt better wits to believe, that a Divine theme is as capable and happy a ſubject of poetical ornament, as any Pagan or human device whatſoever. Which if I can obtain, and (into the bargain) charm my readers into any true degree of devotion, I ſhall be bold to hope that I have partly reached my propoſed mark, and not continued merely idle." A ſecond edition of this Poem, carefully corrected throughout by the author, with the addition of four new Cantos never before printed, was publiſhed at Cambridge, in the year 1702, by his ſon Charles Beaumont, M. A. fellow of St. Peter's college; to which ſociety, he informs us, "his father left by will all his Latin works, both critical and polemical; which not having ſufficient leiſure, nor health of body, to reviſe and examine, according to his wonted modeſty, he ſtrictly forbad the printing any of them." To this edition, the Rev. Dr. Samuel Woodford prefixed a long and ingenious Copy of Verſes made in Memory of the deceaſed author.—Dr. Beaumont alſo wrote "Obſervations upon the Apology of Dr. Henry More, Cambridge, 1685," 4to. A conſiderable number of his poems, &c. were publiſhed in quarto, by ſubſcription, in 1749, with the life of the author prefixed.

"Their honourable matches, both with the bloud royal, and with the ancienteſt houſes of the nobility;

"As, with the heir of Alexander Comyn, earl of Boghan and high-conſtable of Scotland, whoſe mother was one of the coheires of Roger de Quincy earl of Wincheſter; with the daughter of Henry earl of Lancaſter; with a daughter of the earl of Oxford; with a daughter of the lord Mowbray that was earl Marſhall; with a daughter of the lord Wells; with the only daughter and heir of the lord Bardolph; with a daughter of the duke of Buckingham; and with many other houſes of great honor; beſides the beſtowing of their own female offspring upon the greateſt houſes of the nobility of this realme: as, Elizabeth, daughter to Henry lord Beaumont, was married to Henry duke of Lancaſter, whoſe daughter, Blanch, was wife to John of Gaunt, and mother to Henry IV. Another daughter of the lord Beaumont's was married to the earl of Artholl, whoſe ſon married the daughter of the lord Ferrers; another was married to the lord Lacey; another to the lord Audleigh. All which ancient and noble families are by reaſon thereof mixt in bloud with the ſaid Henry Beaumont. The truth of all which is evident, out of inquiſitions and other good matters of record.

"The great honors, favours, and preheminences, they have been heretofore endowed withall, by the King's progenitors, for the great eſtimation they had them in for their faith and ſervice, having been always reputed by them neare in bloud and lynnage.

"John lord Beaumont was created viſcount Beaumont; whereas his anceſtors, long time before, had been barons. And great revenues and titles of honor granted to the ſaid viſcount Beaumont in Fraunce; the king of England then having a great part of Fraunce; and giving him precedency, in place of honor, next to earles. Great priviledges and franchiſes granted to them in all their lands and manors by Henry VI. The grant of the caſtle of Folkingham and other lands by Edward I.; and many grants of that nature, in all kings' times, to them and their heires males.

"They have been imployed very honourably, in ſervices both of warre and peace, as appeareth plainly by our Chronicles.

"John viſcount Beaumont was high-conſtable and great chamberlain.

"The lord Beaumont was captain of Carlile 12 R. II.

"They have ſuffered great diminutions of eſtate, hazards, and damages, for their faith and ſervice to their prince.

"John lord Beaumont was ſlaine in the ſervice of his country, at Striveling, in the time of Edward III; and John viſcount Beaumont was ſlaine at Northampton, 38 Henry VI. in defence of the moſt Chriſtian prince Henry VI.

"Richard Beaumont, grandfather to ſir Henry Beaumont, your majeſty's now ſuppliant, was taken priſoner in the king's ſervice, in the time of Henry VIII. and was enforced to redeem his liberty by ſale of part of his inheritance.

"That ſir Henry Beaumont is next heire male in bloud to the family: that is to ſay, ſonne and heire of Nicholas, ſonne and heire of Richard, ſonne and heire of William, ſonne and heire of George, ſonne and heire of John, ſonne and heire of Thomas lord Baſqueville, younger ſonne to the lord Beaumont. The laſt of the males of which family was the lord William, who, being viſcount Beaumont and lord Bardolf, dyed without iſſue in the time of Henry VI. Which derivation of bloud, as alſo that the ſaid ſir Henry Beaumont is the next in bloud, is apparent, both by records and by approved pedigrees, &c.

"For the competency of his meanes and ability, for doinge this honourable ſervice, and for the upholding of the eſtate of a peere, he humbly referreth himſelf to that which your Highneſs ſhall be informed upon enquiry thereof.

"Notwithſtandinge, your Majeſties ſaid ſuppliant referreth himſelf and all his titles unto your Majeſties grace; and ſhall think himſelf highly honoured to be a creature of your own handy worke, to be diſpoſed of as by your princely favour ſhall be thought fit."

In 1606, he had a grant from king James I. of divers lands in the counties of Leiceſter and Derby[1]; and, dying in 1607, was buried in Cole Orton church.

Sir Thomas Beaumont junior, knight, in the life-time of his father, was one of the knights for Leiceſterſhire in the firſt parliament called by king James I. and was high-ſheriff of the county in 1606. In 1608, he held the manor of Cole-Orton of the king as of the fee of Cheſter; and the manor of Overton Saucey as of the honour of Winton[2]. He was favoured with a new grant of free-warren, in the counties of Leiceſter and Derby, in 1617[3]; created a baronet, Sept. 17, 1619; again elected member for the county of Leiceſter in 1620, but diſplaced on the petition of ſir George Haſtings[4]; and was promoted April 22, 1622, by the following patent, to the dignity of a viſcount of Ireland:

> "To our right truſty and right welbeloved lord viſcount Grandiſon, our deputy of our realm of Ireland, and to our chancellor there now being, and to our deputy chief governor, lords juſtices or chief governors, chancellor or keeper of the great ſeal of that our kingdom which hereafter for the time ſhall be, and to all other our officers and miniſters whom it ſhall concern, &c.

"JAMES Rex. Right truſty and right wellbeloved, we greet you well. The many faithful, good, and worthy ſervices our truſty and welbeloved ſir Thomas Beaumont, of Cole-Overton, knight and baronet, and his anceſtors, being an honourable family, have performed both to us and our Crown, have found ſuch gracious acceptance at our hands, as we are pleaſed not only to take notice of him in his own perſon with much favour and reſpect; but, as a further mark of our gracious care of his poſterity, we are pleaſed to advance him to the honour of a viſcount of this our realm. Theſe are therefore to require and authorize you, immediately upon receipt hereof, to cauſe our letters patent to be paſſed under the great ſeal of that our kingdom, with the advice of ſome of our learned there, in due form of law, to create the ſaid ſir Thomas Beaumont lord viſcount Beaumont of Swords in the county of Dublin in that our realm of Ireland; to have and to hold the ſaid name, ſtyle, title, honour, and dignity of lord viſcount Beaumont of Swords in our ſaid county of Dublin, to him and the heirs male of his body begotten and to be begotten, with all rights, priviledges, preheminences, prerogatives, allowances, and immunities of a viſcount of that kingdom, in as large, ample, and beneficiall manner as any other viſcount of that realm doth or ought to hold or enjoy the ſame. And theſe our letters ſhall be as well to you our deputy and chancellor there now being, as to any other deputy, chief governor or governors, chancellor or keeper of the great ſeal of that our kingdom which hereafter for the time ſhall be, and to all other our officers and miniſters whom it ſhall concern, and to every of them, ſufficient warrant and diſcharge in that behalf. Given under our ſignett, at our palace of Weſtminſter, the 23d day of April, in the 20th year of our reign of England, France, and Ireland, and of Scotland the 55th.

> "Memorand', quod decimo-quarto die Maii, anno Dñi 1622, Henricus Fiſher, gent. venit in canc' Hibernie; & petiit has literas proximè ſuprascriptas irrotulari; ad cujus requiſitionem, irrotulantur de verbo in verbum prout ſuperius[5]."

"Sir Thomas Beaumont, knight and baronet, lord viſcount Swords in the kingdom of Ireland (now living 1622) is lord of this manor, and hath here a fair houſe, "and a park[6]." He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Henry Sapcote[7], of Elton[8], in the county of Huntingdon, eſq.; by whom he had five ſons; Sapcote, born May 10, 1614; Henry, born in 1616, who died unmarried; Thomas, ſlain 1642, ſ. p.; Robert, and Thomas, who died unmarried. He had alſo ſix daughters. The exact date of his death does not appear; but it was early in 1625; for, on the 22d of May that year, a commiſſion was directed to John Beaumont, eſq. Thomas Babington, eſq. William Purefoy, eſq. William Bent, gent. to the feodary of the county of Leiceſter, and to the eſcheator of that county, or any three of them, to make enquiry after the lands and poſſeſſions of Thomas viſcount Beaumont, deceaſed[1].

It ſhould ſeem, by his laſt will, which is ſhort and undated, that he was involved in ſome affair of honour; for, after mentioning that he was ſound in mind, and in good health, he adds, "yet enforced at this inſtant to uphold and maintain mine honour, being called in queſtion, with my ſword." He ſpecifies no particulars of his property; nor is any one mentioned but his wife, whom he makes ſole executrix; and by whom the will was proved, May 31, 1625.

In a ſubſidy of 1627, is this entry: "Overton Quatermarſh & Overton Saucey, dame Elizabeth Beaumont, in terris, 6*l*."

This lady Beaumont Mr. Peſtell thus addreſſed:

"Madame, or ſure your ſoule is maſculine,
Or elſe we muſt their hereſie decline,
That tell us of an incapacitie
In any ſoule for virtue that's a ſhee:
For all that do converſe with yours do find
All virtues there that can be in a mind:
And for that reaſon well you cannot looke
To have me count them; for then I miſtooke
In ſaying you have all; ſince thoſe alone
Love and expect ſuch reckonings as have none.
Yet I confeſſe there is a dew diſtills
(As bees make balme of flowers) from learned quills, Uſefull and apt for every noble dame
That ſtrives to make that beſt conſerve of Fame:
The peoples voice is a thinne broth of breath,
A food too faint to nouriſh after death.
But Jove's immortall nectar is for thoſe
Whom verſe exalts beyond the reach of proſe;
And pardon me if I contend to raiſe
To ſuch a ſeemly height your virtue's praiſe:
For yet my Muſe a bare intention hath,
Becauſe my knowledge is implicite faith;
And make men know them, which tho' now they doe,
Yet then ſhall know that ſo I doe know them too."

Sapcote Beaumont, who ſucceeded to the title of viſcount in 1625, was eminently loyal to king Charles I. during the great delinquency of his ſubjects; engaged in his ſervice, and kept his manor-houſe of Cole-Orton as a garriſon; which, being taken by the rebels, was made by Cromwell the head-quarters of the parliament army; and became one of their principal garriſons in that part of the aſſociated counties; whence continual ſallies were made on the Royaliſts at Aſhby de la Zouch; who in their turn as often attacked Cole-Orton, which was finally burnt to the ground[2].

Dec. 10, 1643, William ſon of Sapcote lord Beaumont and lady Anne his wife was baptized at Whitwick; and on the 24th of the ſame month Henry, ſon of Henry Beaumont, eſq. was baptized there[3].

In February, 1643-4, The King's Mills in this neighbourhood, ſituated on the river Trent, near Donington Park and Wilney Ferry, were ſurrounded by ſir John Gell[4] and a party from this garriſon; as thus ſtated in a letter from ſir John Gell to the earl of Eſſex:

"My Lord, I judge it my duty to remonſtrate unto your Excellency our proceedings in theſe parts. Upon Tueſday the 6th of this inſtant February our forces beſieged a ſtrong garriſon, though but of ſmall compaſs, of the lord of Loughborough's, called The King's Mills, a place exceeding troubleſome and burthenſome to thoſe parts of our county, though it ſtands in Leiceſterſhire. Our ordnance, being but ſmall, did not much execution; the ſituation of it made it ſeem almoſt impregnable, the river Trent running on the North ſide, being beſides fortified with very good works; and on the South ſide a ſteep hill, ſtrong works being made there, and the river filling the trenches; all which our captains of horſe, who were on the South ſide of it, conſidering, reſolved to draw ſome few out of every troop, and to aſſault it violently, which was anſwerably done: that party, gliding down a ſteep hill, violently and bravely aſſaulted the place with good ſucceſs, though we had one man ſlain and ſix wounded in the approach. It is thought to be as deſperate a piece of ſervice as any ſuch a petty buſineſs hath been in the North. Our men beat down the windows, and ſtormed in, and ſo forced them to cry quarter. We took one captain, one lieutenant, and 52 ſoldiers: we had 20 ſoldiers wounded, and five ſlain. We are peſtered with petty garriſons, and are ſlenderly aſſiſted by our neighbours, as any aid from them would much advantage us to unkennel that fox, who hath taken many holds, for this main end, that he may ſpoil and plunder; and beſides him we have five colonels of the marquis of Newcaſtle's creating left in our county with your regiments; ſo that neceſſity makes me ſupplicate your Excellency to order that the bordering forces for the Parliament may aſſiſt us, and then we hope we ſhall clear our country of thoſe ſpoiling robbers, and be able to aſſiſt others. By this means your Excellency ſhall do more for this county than all the reſt of the kingdom; and myſelf further obliged to be, Your, &c."[5]

In 1644, one of the numerous branches of this family (moſt probably Thomas Beaumont[6], eſq. of Stoughton) is thus diſtinguiſhed:

"There was a brave gentleman, who this laſt week preſented a petition to the houſe of commons from Leiceſterſhire; and with it delivered an excellent ſpeech. His name was Thomas Beaumont, an eſquire[7]."

Under the article of garriſons in this county, Mr. Simmonds mentions, as in the poſſeſſion of the rebels, "Cole Orton, a town of lord Beaumont, one mile from Aſhby; Temple governor; 50 men."

"May 28, 1645, his Majeſty marched with his army into Cole Orton, a garriſon of the enemy's; then by the abbey of Gracedieu, where ſir Thomas Beaumont lives[8]."

About this time the following letter was addreſſed to one of the Parliamentary officers:

"Noble Sir, Be pleaſed to afford the bowells of a tender father a little vent, to bewaile that violence donne by a mercileſſe hand upon his ſon (your late priſoner), in above an 100 ſuch blowes with a ſkeane upon the back and armes (beſide a thruſt, which, piercing his cloths, only God's goodnes there ſtaied the point); that the contuſion, dilated in diſcoloured black and blewe and yeallow, is become a ſpectacle too ruthfull for a Scithian to behold without relenting. I am ſorie yourſelf and ſir John Gell ſaw it not, and wiſh you yet might ſee it. My reaſon is not that it might then have moved your compaſſion ſooner to remitt him (for, I humblie thank you both, that noble favour was quicker then my expectance), or now to exaſperate ſir John againſt that bloodie ſoldier, but only for the raritie; I proteſting before God that no mann's deſcription coud have rendered it in a ſhape half ſo formidable to mine eares as it was preſente to my weeping eyes, and through them to my bleeding heart. A precedent, I dare ſaie, unparalelled ſince the warrs beganne. A miniſter, not in armes, nor offring the leaſt reſiſtance, to be rifled of his monie, gloves, girdle, handkercheif, and other things, hoiſted upon a poore jade with an halter, which, becauſe it coud not keep pace, his bodie muſt be made the anvile of furie in ſo barbarous a manner as the infamie of this fact will never die; one remarkable circumſtance being, that the actor was an Aſhbie man, borne when I was vicar, and at whoſe dore this ſonne of mine hath often releived that felowe (then a child) who hath made him this retribution. 'God laie not this ſinn to his chardge!' My onelie intent in laying this before your eies as my penn is able, is to move both your compaſſions yet further, both to my ſonne and mee. Alas, I knowe nothing can make that valiant and vigilant cheife (which vurtues are to be prized and praiſd even in enemies) an enemie to me or mine, or can alien your affection and experienced goodneſſe to me, but my opinion differing from yours; and yet I fullie beleive we all alike diſtaſt all Separatiſts and Anabaptiſts, and deteſt and reject to hell all Popiſh ſuperſtition. But for the bearing armes, and taking the Scotch Covenant, it is fitt I deale ſincerelie, and confeſſe freelie that my conſcience is ſatisfied in neither. Am I therefore left utterlie deſtitute of anie refreſhing hope to have my petition granted? No. The ingenuitie of this confeſſion, I doubt not, will rather be of prevalence with ſuch minds as I know yourſelf, and verilie conceive that noble Baronett poſſeſſes. Note, the ſupplication I make is that of a worme, coud it ſpeak; namely, to intreat we may no more be troden on; but that my poore ſonne at Cole-Orton (if it pleaſe God he outlive this miſerie) and myſelf at Packington, a miniſter, aged 60 years, who have been near 30 of them chaplain to my lord of Eſſex (and to whom I dare ſaie my ſuit woud not be unacceptable), now growen ſicklie, and having long ſince reſigned my means at Packington to my eldeſt ſonne, and having been robbd and plundered of goods (almoſt all) five ſeveral times, beſide cattell, may fitt doune under the ſhadowe of your protection; beſeeching you alſo that the protection you will pleaſe to give, may preſerve us from the garriſons under the governours at Coventrie, I being aſſured by a ſpeciall freind there that ſir John Gell's three lines to that purpoſe will eaſilie effect it. To boaſt what I have done, and do, and will endeavour, for priſoners here (inſomuch as they ſay in Aſhbie garriſon, ſome blades, to my reproach, that if the divell were a priſoner, I would mediate for him; which was ſpoken in the caſe of delivering one Wightman) is not available. But, for the favour which I humblie begg, I make offer, upon advertiſement, if you pleaſe to name anie miniſter deſirous of the like freedom from hence, only for a perſonall libertie, that I will to my utmoſt contend for it, either reſpectively to Darby or Warwickſhire, and I doubt not but I may doe it. However, if God incline your hearts to grant this tedious writer his heart's deſier, I ſhall bleſſe God, and be everlaſtingly obliged to ſpread the ſweet odour of your fames. And ſo, praying for a happie uniting of the king and kingdoms, I remain your poore votarie, [4] Sir John Gell's ſtation is thus deſcribed in an unpubliſhed MS.: "On the road which leads from Derby to Duffield was a mount, called Shepherd's Knoll, taken away of late to make the turnpike-road. On this mount ſir John Gell, of Hopton, planted three ſmall cannon, or drakes, as they called them, when Derby was on the ſide of the rebels in the time of king Charles I. Though the king had given him the honour of baronettage ſome time before, he made himſelf governor of Derby in oppoſition to him. Thoſe very pieces of ordnance are, I believe, ſtill in being, and have frequently been diſcharged on public rejoicing-days for victories in the reign of queen Anne. It may not be improper to obſerve, that Derby had the good fortune, in thoſe times of confuſion, never to be plundered. When the commanding officer at King's mill garriſon near Donington Park had reſolved to bring his forces againſt Gell at Derby; the father of my mother, with two other chief men of the town, and Royaliſts, were thought the fitteſt to treat with the officer. They accordingly waited upon him at the garriſon on the river Trent, at King's Mill made him an acceptable preſent of a purſe of gold, and prevailed with him to lay aſide his reſolution. Thus both the faithful Loyaliſts and rebels of the town were preſerved from plunder and the ſad conſequences of it. My grandfather lived to a great age; and I have often heard him mention this matter, with much ſatisfaction, that he had been the happy inſtrument of preſerving not only the effects, but perhaps the lives of many, and eſteemed, ever after, during his life, by all parties." Rev. H. Cantrell, M. A. vicar of St. Peter's, Derby, to the Rev. Samuel Pegge, Feb. 14, 1760.—In 1712 this Mr. Cantrell, having procured the perpetual curacy of Alkmund to be created into a vicarage, was preſented to it; and continued vicar there in 1760.

THOMAS PESTELL.

"To the hands of the honourable knight and baronet, ſir Geo. Greſley, preſent."

Mr. William Peſtell, on whoſe behalf an aged father addreſſed the above letter, had been preſented to the rectory of Cole-orton about 1640; and, after the parliament forces obtained poſſeſſion of that garriſon[1], being much harraſſed previous to his ſequeſtration, was forced to abſcond. Once in particular, having carried him away on a bare-ridged horſe, not contenting themſelves with uſing him in that manner, they alſo miſerably beat and abuſed him. His wife was big with child, and near her time, when ſhe was turned out of doors with her children, who were afterwards ſupported by charity. It appears, however, that he long ſurvived the troubles[2], was reſtored to his rectory, and preſented by king Charles II. to the rectory of Ravenſton.

March 25, 1648, a petition of the lady Beaumont was ſent to the Houſe of Commons from the Lords; which their Lordſhips conceived reaſonable, but referred to the conſideration of that Houſe[3]. It is not aſcertained by the entry of this petition in the Journals of either Houſe of Parliament who this lady was; but, by a ſubſequent entry, it appears to have been dame Mary Beaumont, widow of ſir Jeremiah Beaumont, knight; who was reduced to ſuch humiliating diſtreſs, that, Sept. 13, 1649, the weekly ſum of 20s. was voted for her preſent maintenance[4].

Sapcote lord viſcount Beaumont had an ample ſhare in the ſufferings of the loyaliſts during the reign of king Charles I; his eſtate being wholly ſequeſtered by the uſurping powers; and, May 4, 1650, a warrant was iſſued from the council of ſtate, to ſeize, inventory, and ſecure, all the eſtates, real and perſonal reſpectively, of the lord Beaumont, ſir Richard Halford, George Halford, Andrew Halford, gent. Matthew Halford, George Faunt, eſq. captain Roe, and ſir Robert Shirley, bart.; all of whom were accuſed of high delinquency.

The noble lord was twice married. By his firſt wife, Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Thomas Mounſon, knt. of South Carlton, co. Lincoln (anceſtor to the lords Monſon) he had two ſons, Thomas his ſucceſſor, and John; and one daughter Elizabeth, who was married to ſir John Hotham, bart.

By the ſecond wife, Anne, daughter of ſir William Villiers, of Brokeſby, knight, he had one ſon William, born in 1645, who died unmarried; and concerning whom a curious caſe occurs among the Law Reports, Nov. 12, 1682, Villers verſus Beaumont & al.; in which it was determined, "that a voluntary ſettlement without power of revocation ſhall bind the party, and ſhall not be defeated by a ſubſequent will." The caſe on the pleadings appeared to be thus: The lady Anne Beaumont took a leaſe from an Hoſpital at Leiceſter for three lives in truſtees names, in truſt for her and her heirs. She dies; and this leaſe comes to a Mr. William Beaumont [her only ſon], who, a little before his death, by a little ſcrap of paper at an alehouſe, but under hand and ſeal, ſettles this term (in which he had then only a truſt) upon the plaintiffs his couſins, to the intent to pay his debts, and gave the ſurplus to them. After this, he being diſſatisfied with this ſettlement, which he had delivered out of his hands to a creditor, makes his will in writing, and thereby deviſes this term, ſubject alſo to the payment of his debts, to his half brother Thomas lord viſcount Beaumont, in whoſe family the leaſe had for a long time been. The queſtion was, whether the deed or the will ſhould prevail; and the deed was accordingly confirmed; the lord chancellor obſerving, that, "if a man will improvidently bind himſelf up by a voluntary deed, and not reſerve a power of revocation, the Court will not looſe the fetters he hath put upon himſelf, but he muſt lie down under his own folly[5]."

Thomas ſucceeded his father as viſcount Beaumont in 1658; and in 1659 a volume of "Sermons and Devotions, old and new," was dedicated to Thomas lord Beaumont of Cole Orton, by Thomas Peſtell, the meaneſt among his late Majeſty's chaplains in ordinary."

In 1662, we find this noble lord particularly active as a magiſtrate, in proſecuting the Quakers and other

Nonconformiſts. On the 2d of September that year, "the lord Behmen, alias Swords, having received information of an intended meeting at Swanington, came thither with armed men before the meeting was begun; and cauſed nine perſons (George Fox, William Smith, Margaret Bayley, Suſanna Frith, Joane Brockeſby, Henry Walker, Edward Muggleſton, Thomas Fowkes, and Joane Rowe) there to be apprehended, and ſecured that night, and next day ſent them to gaol[1]."

After the demolition of the houſe at Cole Orton, it appears that Thomas lord Beaumont reſided at Whitwick; from which place I have a letter now before me[2], to his friend William Herrick, eſq. of Beaumanor, from whom he had juſt before purchaſed ſome timber trees, dated June 19, 1683.

On the Viſitation of the Heralds at Cole Orton in 1683, we find this letter from the reſtored rector:

"To his worthily eſteemed friend Mr. John Gery, rector of Swepſton, theſe humbly preſent.

"Dear Brother, Cole-Orton, July 28, 1683.

"Knowing your power and prevalency with thoſe Officers which without cauſe moleſt me; I fly to you for redreſs, and doubt not your aſſiſtance therein; nor can I fear the iſſue, when ſo proſperous a perſon hath the management of it, who always came off with a Plaudite. Sir, I have ſent you incloſed the warrant for my appearance at Leiceſter. I think you told me, when they were at Aſhby about the ſame buſineſs, you had ſatisfied them concerning me. For my part, I have no pedigree nor coat of arms, nor ever had; nor do I preſume to any, nor am I ambitious to be blazoned for any thing but honeſty and loyalty. I am a Maſter of Arts; and that makes me a gentleman, and that a worſhipful one: and I care not to go higher. I intreat you to procure me a diſcharge from my friend Mr. May, or ſome other; and I ſhall remain your moſt obliged brother, and very grateful ſervant, William Pestell."

The affection of the lord Beaumont and his brother to the royal family did not hinder them, when they ſaw their country's religion and liberties endangered by king James II. from exerting themſelves in defence of thoſe valuable bleſſings. The viſcount raiſed a troop for the prince of Orange; and his brother John (who, when young, had attended king Charles II. in his exile, and, after the Reſtoration, had, under that prince and his brother king James II. divers honourable employments at court; and, beſides his civil preferments, had under king James a commiſſion of lieutenant-colonel of the regiment of which the duke of Berwick was colonel) being commanded to take ſome Iriſh papiſts into the regiment, then at Portſmouth, ſtoutly oppoſed the king in it, and, in ſpite of all invitations and menaces, perſiſted in the refuſal, for which he and ſome other officers that adhered to him were impriſoned. The king, when he had reſolved to introduce Popery, thought it expedient to be in a military poſture; and that the army ſhould be augmented with men of that religion. Sept. 10, 1688, lieutenant-colonel John Beaumont and five other captains[3] of the duke of Berwick's regiment were caſhiered by a council of war held at Windſor, for refuſing to admit Iriſhmen into their companies. As the king by this gave great diſcontent to his ſubjects, ſo it furniſhed the prince of Orange, at his landing, with matter for his Declaration.

The two brothers (with their couſin ſir Thomas Beaumont, of Stoughton, bart.) went, with their followers, to the prince of Orange on his firſt landing, and after his coronation were preferred by him.

John Beaumont was M. P. for the town of Nottingham 1685; for the port of Haſtings in 1688 and 1690; and was made governor of Dover Caſtle, and colonel of that regiment whereof he had been lieutenant-colonel, and ſerved his majeſty abroad many years; but died before his elder brother, on July 3, 1701; having married two wives, Felicia, daughter of Mr. Hatton Fermor, of Eaſton Neſton (anceſtor of the earls of Pomfret) and widow of ſir Charles Compton; and ſecondly, Phillipe, the daughter of ſir Nicholas Carew, of Bedington, co. Surrey, knt.; but by neither of them had iſſue.

Thomas viſcount Beaumont, the elder brother, having likewiſe no children by Mary his wife, daughter to ſir Eraſmus de la Fountaine, of Kirkby Beler, knt. began, in his life-time (purſuant to a charitable inclination that was ever natural to him) the foundation of an hoſpital for ſix widows, and of a free-ſchool, at Cole-Orton; to which he left good endowments, and appointed for truſtees his heir, the rector of the pariſh, and two others; and, dying without iſſue, June 11, 1702, the title of viſcount and his other dignities expired. He was the laſt of the family who reſided at Cole-Orton; where he was honourably interred, but without any monument, in the vault of his anceſtors, by his couſin (and the heir male of his family) ſir George Beaumont, bart. great grandſon of the firſt baronet of Stoughton Grange, who was M. P. in ſeveral parliaments for Leiceſter, and died ſ. p. unmarried April 9, 1737.

Sir Lewis Beaumont, knt. the next brother and ſucceſſor, died alſo ſ. p. Dec. 23, 1738; when the title of baronet devolved on his couſin,

George Beaumont, eldeſt ſon of William Beaumont, of Dunmow; who inherited alſo the Cole-Orton eſtate by virtue of an entail made by Thomas the laſt viſcount Beaumont. He was high-ſheriff of Leiceſterſhire in 1761; and, dying Feb. 4, 1762, was buried at Dunmow. He married Rachel, daughter of Michael Howland, of Stone-hall, Dunmow, eſq. by whom he had three ſons; Charles and William, who died infants[4] in 1757 and 1758; and his ſucceſſor,

The preſent ſir George-Howland Beaumont, of Dunmow and Cole-Orton, bart. only ſurviving ſon and heir; who married, by ſpecial licence, May 6, 1778, Margaret, daughter of John Willes, of Aſtrop, eſq. eldeſt ſon of ſir John Willes, bart. ſome time lord chief juſtice of the common pleas; and is now the owner of this lordſhip; but at preſent has no iſſue.

Cole-Orton park, which was omitted by Mr. Burton in his printed book (though noticed in his MS.) was firſt imparked, if not by ſir William Maureward, knt. in the time of Edward I. yet by William his ſon, who, we find, had a park there in 1303; which was enlarged, and ſtored anew with game, by ſir Henry Beaumont, in 1606. This park is now quite gone; the trees having given place to coal-mines. "Theſe coal-mines in the beginning of the reign of king Henry VIII. (as I have heard reported) did burn for many years together, and could not be quenched until that ſulphurous and brimſtony matter (whereupon it wrought) was utterly exhauſted and conſumed[5]."

Of which hill, Dion Caſſius hath written a ſmall treatiſe; as alſo Ætna in Sicily, now called Mont Gibello, which for many hundred years hath burnt, and yet continueth: the reaſon whereof is delivered by Juſtin in his fourth book; for that the ground being hollow and full of ſulpur, brimſtone, and bitumen, the wind getting into thoſe hollow pipes and caves, and ſtriving to have paſſage, kindleth fire. But Leandro Alberto *, that excellent Italian Chorographer, in his deſcription of Sicily, delivereth another reaſon; for that the ground being ſoft, ſpongy, and hollow, and continually beaten with the ſalt-waters and waves of the ſea, doth engender a groſs humour, dry and ſalt, of which that bituminous and ſulphurous matter is made, which miniſtreth matter for the fire. Of this hill have written beſides Petro Bembo †, Antonio Philotteo di Homodio. But moſt ſtrange is that place in Campania in Italy near

Puteoli,

There is ſtill remaining a ſtone turret of the old building at the Eaſt corner of the preſent houſe, which gives no ideas of former magnificence; but the reſt, though ſtrong and of ſtone, is more plain and modern. Mr. Joſeph Boultbee, formerly a ſteward to the family, inhabited this houſe in Auguſt 1789, being then in his 89th year, very well-looking, and in perfect enjoyment of his faculties. He died in the following month, Sept. 25.

About an hundred yards from the church ſtand the hoſpital and ſchool, (Plate CI) forming together a good brick building with a large front; in the middle of which, facing the ſtreet, on a large ſlate, with the Beaumont arms, but no date:

"This Hoſpital and School was founded and endowed by the right honourable and truly charitable Thomas lord viſcount Beaumont, of this place."

The ſchool is conſiderable, and in good reputation; It runs all the length over the hoſpital; and is a free-ſchool for reading and writing; with a good houſe for the maſter and his family, parlour, and two chambers, two garrets, and two gardens.

The hoſpital contains ſix widows belonging to the pariſh, each having a ſeparate houſe and garden; and the following advantages, as ſtated in a table of benefactions in the church, and paid out of the great tithes of Swanington.

For ſix widows, each £9. per annum,	£54	0	0

The Moor and townſhips are very extenſive, meaſuring at leaſt two miles each way. The upper part of the Moor is an undivided eſtate; one half belonging to two Miſs Medcalfs, of London, of whom it was rented by the late Mr. Boultbee; the other to William Burſlem, eſq. There are ſeveral breaks into it, from Worthington, Thringſton, and Swanington.

Near the upper town, by the Loughborough turnpike ſide, Mr. Burſlem has built an exceeding good new engine on a fine conſtruction, which throws upwards of 760 gallons of water in one minute; and there is a fine coal-mine there.

On the North ſide, by the Hinckley turnpike ſide, croſſing the turnpike leading from Aſhby de la Zouch to Loughborough, is another engine, with a great coal-mine, which was rented by the late Mr. Boultbee under ſir George Beaumont, but for the laſt two or three years has not been worked.

The inhabitants, who are very numerous, are chiefly employed in getting coals. Moſt of them have a decent houſe, built either by their parents or themſelves; with a garden to each, from an acre to an acre and a half, taken out of the common; paying 20*s.* an acre for the land, and a ſmall acknowledgement for the houſe, to the lords of the ſoil.

There are ſix farmers who keep waggons in Cole Orton town; three maſter hat-makers; and three hoſiers, who comb their wool, and convert it into ſtockings.

The honourable Richard Auguſtus Butler-Danvers, of Swithland, is lord of the manor in both lordſhips; which elect their ſeparate headboroughs. Two parts pay ſuit and ſervice to Moody Buſh court, belonging to Mr. Danvers; the other part to Francis earl of Moira at Aſhby court.

Sir George Beaumont is the lord of the ſite of nearly the whole pariſh; and has a conſiderable eſtate at Whitwick.

The proſpects from this lordſhip are equally extenſive and delightful. The Foreſt hills, Bredon, and Caſtle Donington, in particular, are here ſeen to great advantage.

In 1564, there were 62 families in Cole-Orton.

In the liſt of freeholders 1630, no name is entered.

In 1655, there was collected in Cole-Orton, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of 13*s.* 3*d.*

In 1722, eight freeholders polled from Cole Orton; but in the liſt of 1775, not a ſingle name appears.

In 1776, there were 30 perſons in the work-houſe.

The return made to the houſe of commons in 1786, in anſwer to an enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in Cole-Orton, may be ſeen in vol. I. p. 62.

Near the middle of the Moor, and adjoining the turnpike-road, is a place of worſhip, inſcribed, "Sion chapel, 1795."

Three open fields on the South ſide of Overton Saucey, excellent corn land, were incloſed in 1799.

In the return to Parliament, 1801, Cole Orton is ſtated to contain 227 inhabited houſes (and 10 uninhabited); 240 families; 504 males, 545 females; total 1069; of whom 88 are chiefly employed in agriculture; and 190 in trade, manufactures, or handicraft.

BENEFACTIONS.

The Rev. William Hunt, rector of this place from 1700 to 1727, gave £20.

Mr. Francis Whirledge of this place gave £20.

The CHURCH (ſee Plate CI.)

dedicated to St. Mary, ſtands at the Weſt end of the Nether Town; and conſiſts of an embattled tower; a ſpire-ſteeple of ſtone, in which are three bells; a nave, chancel, and two ailes.

The taper ſpire emerging from trees (for a few trees do remain in the village, though they are gone from the park) is a beautiful object to the circumjacent country.

Round the church-yard alſo is a fine grove of trees, leading up to the manſion-houſe.

The church is handſome without, but mean and ſhabby within. At the Weſt end of the nave is a ſinging-loft; and under the loft is an old round font.

The corner of the baſe of the buttreſſes at the Weſt end of the tower has ſome groteſque heads; one with a book and harp.

Puteoli, now called La Solſataria, antiently called Vulcani Forum, and Campus Phlegræus, being a ſmall plot of ground compaſſed round with high hills, in length 1500 feet, in breadth 1000, which continually ſendeth up great vapours and ſmokes like a furnace, with great noiſes; which, as the ſaid Leandro Alberto reporteth, "Sopra cui commando (eſſendo cavernoſa) rimbomba di ogni lato, ſi come rimbombano le coſé vacue eſſendo toccate:" upon which if one walks, the ground being hollow, doth ſound of every ſide, as things which be empty and ſtroken do yield a noiſe and ſound: the plot of which is excellently done by that famous artizan and proſpective maker George Hoefnagle, an Antwerpian, and printed in G. Brune's Theatre of Cities, tome 4. The like is reported by Olaus Magnus of Mount Heklia and Mons Crucis, an iſland continually burning, where are ſeen many ſpirits and ghoſts wandering thereabouts, which is there held to be purgatory. And thoſe Southern countries, undiſcovered as yet, near to the Magellan ſtreights, which of the flames and gleams which have been viewed by paſſengers had the name given to them by the Caſtelians, firſt obſervers thereof, Tierra del fuego, is our latter Geographer's report." 7. Quarterly, 1 and 4. Beaumont; 2. and 3. Argent, three mullets Gules.

Mr. Mackay, who publiſhed a Tour through England in the reign of king George I. ſays, "By the coats of arms in the windows of moſt of the churches in this county, and ſome old monuments, I perceived that great and antient noble families had their reſidence here; and was particularly pleaſed at Loughborough and Charley, to ſee the arms of Comin earl of Buchan in Scotland; to whom Edward I. gave the lordſhip of Charley, with a foreſt of twenty miles circumference, for his aſſiſtance to his deſigns in Scotland; and married to one of the coheireſſes of Roger de Quincy, earl of Wincheſter; but that family being entirely rooted out of Scotland by the Bruces, for their treachery to their native country, the ſon of the great Cumin retired to his eſtate at Charley; and having an only daughter, married her to lord Beaumont, a great family in thoſe days; who afterwards took the name and arms of Cumin, and in the reign of Edward III. ſat in parliament at London as earl of Buchan[2]; and we find the affection of the crown of England continued to that family, by the title of earl of Buchan, to Henry the Seventh's days. The family incloſed a park in Charley Foreſt, called Beaumont Park to this day. This family were alſo pretty even with the Bruces for extirpating them in Scotland; for, as Robert de Bruce was earl of Huntingdon before he was king of Scotland, and that country joining to this, the Cumins plagued the Bruces ſo, that they were forced to change their names to Cotton: who, however, ſtill carry the Bruces' arms, and are a very conſiderable family ſtill in that country[3]. At Cole Orton is a very fine monument of another branch of the Comins earls of Galloway; as alſo the arms of the family well preſerved; and in many churches alſo the Bruces[4]."

In the Matriculus of 1220, Cole-Orton is deſcribed to be in the patronage of William de Quatermars; the rector Robert de Landâ, preſented by Hugh the then biſhop of Lincoln[5].

In 1344, the procurations were, 7*s*. 6¾*d*.; the rectory was taxed at 16 marks, and paid 1*s*. for Peter-pence. The then patron was John de Maureward.

In 1534-5, the procurations and ſynodals were 10*s*. 7*d*.; and the value of the rectory £10. 10*s*; and ſir Edward Ethwell, chantry prieſt, had a penſion of £4. 13*s*. 4*d*.

In 1650, the rectory was returned worth £20.; and the incumbent as "ſufficient."

The rectory is valued in the king's books at £10. 6*s*. 0½*d*. The epiſcopal procurations are, 2*s*. 11*d*.; the archidiaconal 10*s*.; certified value £70.

The nett value returned in 1726 was £73. 2*s*. 4*d*; but it is now ſuppoſed to be worth about £300. a year.

[3] This is not correct. In the time of Henry V. William Ridware, co. The Bruces are ſtill a great family in Scotland, and a rich one in Huntingdonſhire; but for the other, except ſir Alexander Cumin, one of the members for North Britain, there is hardly any of the name left. I have often diſcourſed with ſir Robert Cotton, who was poſt-maſter-general, on this ſubject, who allowed that Robert de Bruce came originally from the houſe of Clackmanan in Scotland; but that none of the Scots Bruces were deſcended from him; for he left only two daughters, who were married, one to the great Steward of Scotland, by which that family came to the throne, and took their ſurname from the office; and the other to the earl of Sutherland: but that the Bruce-Cottons were deſcended directly from that family when earls of Huntingdon. He therefore blamed the earls of Ayleſbury for taking to their motto Fuimus, or we were kings; ſince none of them were deſcended from him that was king." Mackay.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

" At Cole-Orton, where a branch of the family of Comin earls of Galloway were antiently ſettled, is a very fine monument of that family, as well as the coat of the family well preſerved in the painted glaſs of the church windows; ſufficient evidence of their being antiently poſſeſſed of ſome lands here [1]."

On an eſcocheon in the South aile are the arms of Beaumont; impaling, Gules, a bend Or, in chief a cinquefoil Argent, fig. 8.

In the South aile, under a Grecian arch, is erected " a very fair and beautiful tomb, with proportions cut out, coloured, painted, and gilt, for ſir Henry Beaumont, knight, and lady Elizabeth his wife;" whoſe recumbent figures are ſhewn in fig. 9.

The tomb is thus inſcribed:

" HERE LIETH THE BODIES OF SIR HENRY BEAUMONT, KNIGHT, AND LADIE ELIZABETH HIS WIFE; WHICH SIR HENRY WAS SON TO NICHOLAS
BEAUMONT, ESQ. AND ELIZABETH WAS DAUGHTER AND HEIR OF JOHN LOVIS, ESQ.
BY WHOM HE HAD ONE ONLY SON, VIZ.
SIR THOMAS BEAUMONT, KNIGHT, WHO MARRIED
THE DAUGHTER AND HEIRE OF HENRY SAPCOTE, ESQ.
WHICH SIR HENRY DIED THE 31ST OF MARCH, ANNO D'NI 1607; AND THE SAID LADY ELIZABETH
DIED THE 26TH OF MARCH, ANNO 1608."

On the front of the tomb is the figure of Thomas their eldeſt ſon, in armour, kneeling at a deſk; and

1. Beaumont; impaling, Sable, three dovecotes Argent, Sapcote. 2. Beaumont; impaling, Or, a chevron engrailed Gules, between three ſhovelers proper, Lovis.

At top: Quarterſy; 1. Beaumont; 2. Argent, three garbs Or, banded Gules, Comin earl of Buchan; 3. Gules, ſeven maſcles conjoined and voided Or, Quincy; 4. Gules, a cinquefoil Ermine, Bellomont earl of Leiceſter; 5. Gules, a pale Or, Grenteſmainell; 6. Azure, a lion rampant crowned Argent, Fergus earl of Galloway; 7. Argent, an eſcutcheon within a double treſſure Gules; 8. Comin; 9. Azure, a wolf's head eraſed Argent, Lupus earl of Cheſter; 10. Gules, a lion rampant, Vaire, Everingham; 11. Maureward; 12. Argent, on a bend Gules, between three pellets, three ſwans Argent, Clerke. Creſt, on a chapeau Azure, turned up Ermine, ſemé of fleur de lis Or, a lion ſtatant Or; motto, ERECTUS, NON ELATUS; fig. 10:

In the ſame plate are engraved, fig. 11, eighteen quarterings of the family, from the monument in St. Botolph's, Alderſgate, already noticed under Stoughton [2].

On a mural ſlate on the North ſide of the chancel:

" Near this place lies interred the body of Gervaſe Yarwood (born at Sheepſhed in this county;)
who departed this life April the 6th,
in the year of our Lord 1759,
aged upwards of 89 years, who was ſervant to the family of the Beaumonts here and at Staughton upwards of 57 years."

On a ſmall mural monument on the North ſide:

" Spera in Deo.
In a ſmall vault, under theſe ſteps, lie the remains of JOSEPH BOULTBEE, eſq.
many years reſident of this place;
who died upon the 25th day of September, 1789,
in the 89th year of his age.
And of Elizabeth his wife, who died in Auguſt 1771,
in the 75th year of her age.
This monument was erected in the year 1794, by their ſon JOSEPH BOULTBEE, in remembrance of parents eminently diſtinguiſhed by their Chriſtian lives and converſation; and by him moſt affectionately beloved and eſteemed."

On a flat ſtone in the chancel:

" In memory of the Rev. THOMAS BEAUMONT, rector of this place, who died January 28, 1761, aged 32."

On a mural tablet in the North aile, partly covered:

" Beneath lieth the body of Francis Whirledge, of Cole-Orton, who departed this life Dec. 15, 1741, aged 61.
Mary his wife died March . . . . . 1759."

In the church-yard, near to the church-door:

" In memory of Catharine,
the affectionate wife of John Stacey, and daughter of Richard Alleyne, rector of Stanford in Nottinghamſhire, and Penelope his wife.
She died the 22d of May, 1794, aged 59."

" James Newton, late of Aſhby de la Zouch, hoſier, died July 8, 1770, aged 70."

[1] This Thomas had four sons; Glidd Beaumont, fellow of All Souls College 1602; Henry, John, and Thomas; and three daughters; Elizabeth, married to Matthew Wren, dean of Windsor; Grace, and Dorothy. Stemm. Chichl. N° 104. 209.

[2] Fourth son of sir Henry Hastings, of Braunston, and great grandson of Francis earl of Huntingdon.

DISEWORTH,

antiently called Divvort, Dideworth, Dicheſworth, and Dyxworth, a ſmall village about ſix miles North-weſt from Loughborough, is placed on a little brook that runneth thence to Long Whatton; and, with little variation, is a ſtrong clay ſoil, though in ſome few parts a kind of free-ſtone, but well watered. It is bounded on the North-eaſt by Kegworth; on the South-eaſt and South by Long Whatton; on the North-weſt by Iſley Walton and Caſtle Donington; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Akeley.

Three ploughlands in Divvort, which in the time of king Edward had been valued at ten ſhillings, were worth thirty ſhillings at the general ſurvey, when they were held of the king by William Loveth. The land was equal to three ploughs. One was employed in the demeſne; and ſix villans, with ſix bordars, had two ploughs[1].

"Villa de Diſeworth dividitur in tria feoda; viz. una pars de feodo Ceſtrie, unde abbas de Leiceſter percipit decimam pro eccleſiâ ſuâ de Lokington; alia pars de feodo de Ferrers, unde prior de Bredon percepit decimam; tertia pars eſt de feodo comitis Arundell, unde priориſſa de Langley percipit decimam pro eccleſiâ ſuâ de Diſeworth. Dominia verò dictorum trium feodorum devenerunt in manus domini de Segrave[2]."

In 1066, William Loveth held that part of the lordſhip which was properly called Diſeworth; and which came not long after to a family that, reſiding here, aſſumed the name of the place; Helias de Diſeworth being lord thereof about the beginning of king Henry II. To him ſucceeded Benedict de Diſeworth, who gave this church to the nunnery of Langley, and had iſſue Hugh; who had iſſue Benedict, who was a knight 1262, and the laſt of his name that we have met with that had any property here.

Robert de Ferrariis earl of Nottingham was poſſeſſed of that part which belonged to Bredon; and about the time of king Stephen gave a meſſuage in Diſeworth and the tithes of ſix carucates of land to the canons of Bredon. The reſt of his lands here (which amounted to half a knight's fee) to Stephen Curzun, of Falde, co. Stafford (pro homagio & fidelitate ſuâ); from whom they deſcended to Thomas his ſon.

In 1205-6, John Gerain de Curzun paid the king a fine of half a mark, to bring on before his juſtices, at the next aſſize, the trial between him and Benedict de Dideſworth, touching the right to four virgates and five acres of land in Dideſworth, which he claims againſt the ſaid Benedict by a writ of right[3].

The third part, which was of the fee of Cheſter, and lay in the pariſh of Lockington, belonged antiently to the earls of Leiceſter[4].

In the time of king Henry III. the greater part of the whole lordſhip was added to the inheritance of the Segraves; and in the Chartulary of the Honour of Segrave, Dytheſworth forms a very prominent feature; the following ſeveral deeds being therein recorded.

1. A quit-claim from Hugo de Dytheſworth to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of all that meadow which lay between Eaſt meadow and the ditch of Geoffry the Miller, abutting on the pool of the nuns of Gracedieu.

2. A grant of Hugh de Dytheſworth to Gilbert Segrave of three virgates of land, together with three villans, Reginald de Dauby, Walter Grys, and Walter ſon of Agnes, cum omnibus eorum catallis & ſequelis; a cultura of land in Litilhulbreche, and a holme of meadow near Watton-bridge.

3. Another grant of the ſaid Hugh to the ſaid Gilbert of a virgate of land, and the ſite of his vivary, for a toft and croft, with two ſelions of land on the South ſide of the vivary, and the homage of Robert le Graunger, with his ſervice for one virgate of land, for which he had uſed to pay 5*s.* a year; to be held by homage and ſervice, and the payment annually of a pair of white gloves, or one penny, at Eaſter.

4. A grant from Hugh ſon of Benedict de Ditheſworth of a virgate which Walter the ſon of Agnes held, and of five ſelions in Hamberlandes, by the ſervice of a pair of white gloves.

5. A quit-claim, from the ſaid Hugh, to Nicholas Segrave and his heirs, of a capital meſſuage, and all his demeſne lands and tenements, with a garden, dove-cote, and out-buildings, and all that he held in Diſeworth.

6. A grant of Robert de Curſon to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of all his land in Diſeworth, to be held of Stephen de Curſon, brother to the ſaid Robert, and his heirs, together with his land at Segrave, by the ſervice of 6*s.* a year.

7. A confirmation of the laſt grant by Stephen de Curſon.

8. A quit-claim of Hugh, ſon of Benedict de Diſeworth, to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of a virgate of land, of the fee of Stephen de Curſon, in the tenure of John, the ſon of Robert; and which the ſaid Hugh held of the ſaid Stephen de Segrave, cum totâ ſequelâ ſuâ.

9. A quit-claim from Iſolda Verdun, to the ſaid Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of all right to a virgate of land in Dytheſworth, held under Robert de Curſon her brother.

10. A grant of Thomas, ſon of Thomas de Auld, to Gilbert de Segrave and his heirs, of four ſelions of land on the Haſelys, held of the ſame Gilbert of the fee of Curſon.

11. A grant of the ſame Thomas, to Gilbert, of four ſelions in Depedale, near the land of the ſaid Gilbert at Radehall in Ditheſworth, with the herbage and paſture thereto belonging.

12. A grant to the ſaid Gilbert of half an acre in the South meadow of Ditheſworth, near the meadow of the ſaid Gilbert.

13. A grant from Thomas de Overton, to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of two ploughlands in Ditheſworth, in the tenure of Ralph Gryon, to be held by homage and the ſervice of 2*s.* a year.

14. A fine between the ſaid Stephen querent, and the ſaid Thomas and Iſabella his wife, concerning the ſaid two ploughlands.

15. A confirmation by Reginald de Carvil, to the ſaid Stephen, of the above land, by the name of eight virgates of land.

16. A grant of William, ſon of Bertram of Ditheſworth, to Elias of Belton and his heirs, of a virgate of land, with a toft and croft, to be held by homage and the ſervice of 12*d.* a year.

17. A grant of the ſaid Elias to Robert Baſſet and his heirs of the ſaid virgate.

18. A grant from Reginald Baſſet of Wolvey, to the ſaid Robert his nephew, of a virgate of land in Ditheſworth, lately the laſt-mentioned William's.

19. A grant from the ſaid Reginald to Peter de Dene, his nephew, of a virgate of land which Robert Baſſet de Dene held in Diſeworth.

20. A grant of the ſaid William ſon of Bertram, to Robert Baſſet, ſon of Simon de Dene, of two acres of land in Evenweyſlonds in Ditheſworth, to be held freely of the ſaid William, with a ſaving of the ſervice due to the king.

21. A grant of Reginald ſon of Robert Baſſet, made to Robert Baſſet ſon of Simon of Dene, and his heirs, of one virgate in Ditheſworth, which Thomas de Perſon lately held at 3*s.* a year, and quit-claimed to the ſaid Reginald; under whom Robert was to hold it by homage and the ſervice of a pound of cumin annually.

22. A quit-claim from Yvo ſon of Simon of Dene, to his brother Peter and his heirs, of all the land which Robert Baſſet held in Dyſeworth.

23. A grant from Peter de Dene ſon of Simon, to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of three virgates of land, and of all the tenements which his brother Robert held in Ditheſworth; to be held of the ſaid Peter, by homage, and the ſervice of a pound of pepper and 12*d.* annually.

24. A confirmation made by Ivo de Dene to Stephen de Segrave of the laſt-mentioned lands, &c.

25. A quit-claim of Richard ſon of Richard Baſſet, to the aforeſaid Reginald and his heirs, of two virgates of land in Ditheſworth; and a grant from the ſaid Richard, empowering Stephen de Segrave to hold the ſame land as of the gift of Reginald; and ſtating that it was part of the fee of the earl of Cheſter.

26. A grant of the ſaid land from Reginald Baſſet to Stephen de Segrave.

27. Another grant from Reginald to the ſaid Stephen of four virgates of land in Ditheſworth, two of which were of the fee of Cheſter.

28. Another grant of Reginald to Stephen, of four ploughlands in Diſeworth, of the fee of Winton, and half a ploughland of the fee of Cheſter; which Richard Baſſet lately held, and of all that Reginald poſſeſſed in that village; to be held by homage; and the four ploughlands to be held by ſuch foreign ſervice as was due in caſes where ſeven ploughlands made one knight's fee; and the half ploughland by the ſervice of half a pound of pepper, or 6*d.* annually.

29. A fine, between the ſaid Stephen petent', and the ſaid Reginald tenent', of three ploughlands in Diſeworth, with the appurtenances, granted to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, to be held of the ſaid Reginald and his heirs, together with a ploughland which he before held of Reginald, of the fee of Margaret counteſs of Winton.

30. A confirmation from Robert de Leyceſter to the ſaid Stephen, of all the land in Diſeworth, late belonging to Reginald Baſſet his uncle.

31. A confirmation from Yvo de Dene to the ſaid Stephen of all the aforeſaid lands.

32. A quit-claim from Ranulph earl of Cheſter to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, and to their homagers dwelling on two ploughlands in Ditheſworth, within the fee of Cheſter, of the incloſure of his park at Querndon.

33. A quit-claim from the abbot and convent of Combe, to Gilbert de Segrave and his heirs, of all the land which he held in Diſeworth of the gift of Reginald Baſſet and Yvo de Dene.

34. A confirmation, from the ſaid abbot and convent, to Nicholas de Segrave and his heirs, of 14 virgates of land, with the appurtenances, in Diſeworth, which he held of the ſaid Reginald and Yvo, to be held of the ſaid abbot and convent by homage, ward, and relief, and ſuch ſcutage as belonged to the land.

35. A quit-claim from the prior and convent of Norton in Cheſhire, to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of all his land; namely, four virgates of land, with two tofts, and their appurtenances, in Ditheſworth, to be held by the ſervice of two marks and a half, to be annually paid at the manor of Wavertoft (near Caſtle Donington) till ſuch time as the ſaid Stephen ſhould provide for them, in tuto & competenti loco, de receptu 28*s.* in free, pure, and perpetual alms.

36. A grant by king Edward to Nicholas de Segrave and his heirs, of free-warren in all their demeſne lands at Ditheſworth, 1292.

37. A grant from Ralph de Bredon, to Walter ſon of Geoffrey de Herteſhorne, of a toft and croft in Diſeworth, which belonged to the church of Bredon de liberâ eleemoſinâ; reſerving to the church ſufficient ſpace to build a grange; to be held of the ſaid Ralph and his heirs by homage, and the ſervice of 3*s.* a year[1].

The Chartulary alſo ſtates that by an inquiſition taken 19 Edward III (1326) Hathern and Kegworth were found to be members of Diſeworth.

On the aid granted to king Henry III. in 1235, towards the marrying of his ſiſter with the emperor of the Romans, two marks were paid, "de uno feodo quod Hugo de Dycheſworth tenet in Dycheſwurth;" and in the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about the year 1240, three parts of a knight's fee are noticed, which Gilbert de Segrave then held under William de Ferrariis earl of Derby.

In the Itinerary of 1280, Diſeworth, Caſtle Donington, Hemington, and Lockington, anſwered collectively as one vill.

July 14, 1292, king Edward I. granted to Nicholas Segrave ſenior, and his heirs, liberty of free-warren in all their demeſne lands at Diſeworth[2]. This Nicholas at his death, in 1296, held the manor of Diſeworth, with ſix carucates of land, and the appurtenances there, of the heir of Henry earl of Cheſter, by ſcutage; and John de Segrave, his ſon and heir, was then aged 30[3].

In 1325, it was found that John de Segrave, deceaſed, and Chriſtiana his wife, held the manor of Diſeworth of the earl of Cheſter and Stephen de . . . .; but by what ſervice was not known; and that John de Segrave (ſon and heir of Stephen de Segrave, couſin of the aforeſaid John de Segrave ſenior) was his next heir[4].

In 1346, John de Segrave (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 18*s.* for a quarter and a fifth part of one knight's fee in Diſeworth, and the prioreſs of Langley 2*s.* for a twentieth part of one knight's fee in Diſeworth, both parcel of the honour of Cheſter and Huntingdon. On the ſame occaſion, the prioreſs of Gracedieu was aſſeſſed 10*s.* for a quarter of one knight's fee in Belton, Whatton, and Diſeworth, parcel of the honour of Leiceſter[5].

From the Segraves this lordſhip paſſed, with the reſt of their lands, by marriage (as is elſewhere ſhewn) to John lord Mowbray, father to Thomas duke of Norfolk, who died ſeiſed thereof in 1398[6].

In 1410, it was found that Blanch late lady Poyninges (who was the wife of Thomas Poyninges) was ſeiſed of the manor of Diſeworth, with its members, parcels, and appurtenances; and that John Mowbray, then earl Mareſcal, was her couſin and next heir[7].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Diſeworth was rated at £3.; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 7*s.*

In 1432, John duke of Norfolk died ſeiſed of the manor of Diſeworth, in the tenure of John Lancaſter, eſq.; and it was then held of the king[8].

In 1461, it was found that John Mowbray duke of Norfolk died ſeiſed of the manor of Diſeworth, held of the king in capite by knight's ſervice; and that he gave and granted the ſame, by deed, to Henry Bradfield[9].

In an act of parliament paſſed in 1489, for reſtoring to Eton college certain lordſhips, manors, lands, &c. which had been granted to them by king Henry VI. a proviſo is added, that it ſhall not extend in any wiſe to the manor of Diſeworth, by whatſoever name or names the ſaid manor is called[10].

The nunnery of Gracedieu had poſſeſſions in Diſeworth; among which one oxgang there was leaſed to Richard Melborne, at the annual rent of 10*s*; and the nunnery of Langley had rents here, to the yearly amount of £4. 9*s.* 10*d.*[11]

"This town (except ſome few freeholds) belongeth to Chriſt's College in Cambridge, of the grant of that moſt noble and virtuous lady the lady Margaret counteſs of Richmond and Derby, who in 1506 granted unto the maſter and ſcholars of this college (which was of her foundation) this manor of Diſeworth, and lands in Kegworth, Hathern, Hemington, and Donington; and the advowſon of the church of Sutton Bonington, co. Nottingham[12]." This noble benefactreſs died June 29, 1509.

In 1564, there were 33 families in Diſeworth.

In a ſubſidy of 1627 is this entry, "Dyſworth, Rowland Lebbie, in terris £3."

The freeholders here in 1630 were, George Marſhall, George Sowter, and Robert Lilly.

In 1655, there was collected in Diſeworth, for the relief of the Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of 9*s*.

There was in 1720 a ſchool for ſix girls, who are taught reading and ſewing by a miſtreſs, for an allowance of £3.

In 1722, 25 freeholders polled from this pariſh; and in 1775, we find 16 names.

In an act paſſed in 1794, for dividing and incloſing the open fields, meadows, paſtures, and common grounds, within the lordſhip or liberty of Diſeworth, the maſter, fellows, and ſcholars of Chriſt's college, in the Univerſity of Cambridge, are deſcribed as lords of the manor; the maſter and wardens of the fraternity of the art or myſtery of Haberdaſhers in the city of London, entitled to a certain portion of the great and ſmall tithes; Leonard Foſbrooke, eſq. to the great and ſmall tithes of certain other lands and grounds; William Herrick, eſq. the Rev. Thomas Clare, and Joſeph Paget, gent. (as truſtees for John-William-Robert Boyer and Lucinda Boyer), and Thomas Turner, gent. connectedly entitled to the great tithes ariſing from the reſidue of the lands and grounds; the Rev. Philip Story, vicar of Lockington, to the ſmall tithes of certain other lands and homeſteads, and old incloſures; the Rev. William Sparrow, as vicar of Diſeworth, entitled to all the other ſmall tithes, and to certain glebe land and common right; the ſaid maſter, fellows, and ſcholars, of Chriſt's college, entitled to certain lands within the lordſhip of Whatton; and the ſaid William Herrick, Thomas Fiſher, eſq. and John Stokes, gent. as truſtees under the will of Richard Cheſlyn, eſq. for the benefit of the preſent Richard Cheſlyn, eſq. are leſſees; and the ſaid Leonard Foſbrooke, William Pochin, eſq. and the Rev. Thomas Beer, truſtees under the will of Edward Dawſon, eſq. deceaſed, Robert Sowter, William Hall, George Sowter, Thomas Mee, Samuel Deverill, Samuel Harris, and others, ſubleſſees of the ſame lands; and Thomas Cheſlyn, eſq. Robert Sutton, Robert Sowter, Jonathan Boſworth, Robert Boſworth, the ſaid William Hall, and others, owners of the reſidue of the land. By this act two acres are firſt allotted for the repairs of the highways; then to the vicar of Diſeworth an equivalent for his glebe land and common right; to the ſeveral proprietors of the great tithes, as much of the reſidue as ſhould be equal in value to one ſeventh (except the meadows, containing about 86 acres, 2 roods, and 36 perches, of which one eighth only to be ſo allotted.) In lieu of the vicarial tithes, land to be allotted of the clear yearly value of £30. beſides land-tax and other out-goings; ſuch land to be divided into three parts; one third to the vicar of Diſeworth for the time being; one third to Mr. Foſbrooke, his heirs and aſſigns; the other third to the vicar of Lockington for the time being. Theſe ſeveral allotments to be a full compoſition for all great and ſmall tithes and dues ariſing out of the lands intended to be incloſed, mortuaries, Eaſter-offerings, and ſurplice-fees only excepted; and nothing contained in this act to exonerate the perſons who have hitherto repaired the chancel from continuing ſo to do in future. Twenty acres of the land to be allotted to the vicarage are directed to be laid as near as conveniently may be to the vicarage-houſe; and Mr. Boyer's lands to be as near the average value as may be. Four acres to be allotted to the maſter and ſcholars of Chriſt's college, as lords of the manor; the expences of incloſing to be defrayed by their tenants; and the other lands of the college to be fenced in at the expence of the under tenants. The reſidue to be divided in equal proportions among the ſeveral proprietors. Sheep not to be depaſtured by any perſon on the new allotments, but under ſpecial care to guard and fence the neighbouring quickſets, under a penalty of five pounds; and proprietors of old incloſures, not having lands ſufficient in the open fields, to pay their proportion in money towards the expences of obtaining and executing this act, for the tithes. Several cottages or tenements, uſually occupied by the paupers of the pariſh, together with a brick-houſe ſtanding on the common grounds, uſed by ſuch paupers, are veſted in the churchwardens for the time being, in truſt, for the poor for ever.

The lordſhip contains about 1100 acres; about five ſixths of which belong to Chriſt's College; and in 1788 had in it 124 families, and 552 inhabitants.

The return made to the houſe of commons in 1786, in anſwer to an enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in this pariſh, may be ſeen in vol. I. p. 63.

The following hiſtorical particulars are taken from "William Lilly's Hiſtory of his Life and Times, from the year 1602 to 1681; written by himſelf, in the 66th year of his age, to his worthy friend Elias Aſhmole[1], eſq." and publiſhed in 12mo, 1715.

"I was born in the county of Leiceſter, in an obſcure town, in the North-weſt borders thereof, called Diſeworth, ſeven miles South of the town of Derby, one mile from Caſtle Donington; a town of great rudeneſs, wherein it is not remembered that any of the farmers thereof did ever educate any of their ſons to learning; only my grandfather ſent his younger ſon to Cambridge, whoſe name was Robert Lilly, and died vicar of Campden in Glouceſterſhire[2].

"The town of Diſeworth did formerly belong unto the lord Segrave; for there is one record in the hands of my couſin Melborn Williamſon, which mentions one acre of land abutting North upon the gates of the lord Segrave; and there is one cloſe, called Hall cloſe, wherein the ruins of ſome antient buildings appear, and particularly where the dove-houſe ſtood; and there are alſo the ruins of decayed fiſh-ponds and other out-houſes. This town came at length to be the inheritance of Margaret counteſs of Richmond, mother of Henry VII; which Margaret gave this town and lordſhip of Diſeworth unto Chriſt's College in Cambridge, the maſter and fellows whereof have ever ſince, and at preſent enjoy and poſſeſs it.

"In the church of this town there is but one monument; and that is a white marble ſtone, now almoſt broken to pieces, which was placed there by Robert Lilly, my grandfather, in memory of Jane his wife, the daughter of Mr. Poole of Old Dalby in the ſame county, a family now quite extinguiſhed. My grandmother's brother was Mr. Henry Poole, one of the knights of Rhodes, or Templars[3], who, being a ſoldier at Rhodes at the taking thereof by Solyman the Magnificent, in 1566, and eſcaping with his life, came afterwards to England, and married the lady Parron, or Perham, of Oxfordſhire; and was called, during his life, ſir Henry Poole. William Poole, the aſtrologer, knew him very well; and remembers him to have been a very tall perſon, and reputed of great ſtrength in his younger years.

"The impropriation of this town of Diſeworth was formerly the inheritance of three ſiſters, whereof two became votaries[1]; one in the nunnery of Langley near Diſeworth[2], valued at the ſuppreſſion, I mean the whole nunnery, at £32. per annum; and this ſiſter's part is yet enjoyed by the family of the Grays, who now, and for ſome years paſt, have the enjoyment and poſſeſſion of all the lands formerly belonging to the nunnery in the pariſh of Diſeworth, and are at preſent of the yearly value of £350. per annum. One of the ſiſters gave her part of the great tithes unto a religious houſe in Bredon on the Hill; and, as the inhabitants report, became a religious perſon afterwards. The third ſiſter married; and her part of the tithes in ſucceeding ages became the earl of Huntingdon's, who not many years ſince ſold it to one of his ſervants.

[1] The notes, and the continuation to the time of Lilly's death, are by Mr. Aſhmole.

[2] He died Oct. 21, 1636. See his epitaph, p. 754.

[3] Lilly is here a little inaccurate. His maternal relative was probably a Knight Hoſpitaller of St. John of Jeruſalem, to which houſe Old Dalby (p. 245) was a preceptory.—After the diſſolution, Richard Poole, a member of that houſe (ſee p. 248.) had the large penſion of £133. 6*s*. 8*d*.

"The donation of the vicarage is in the gift of the Grays of Langley, unto whom they pay yearly (I mean unto the vicar), as I am informed, £6. per annum. Very lately ſome charitable citizens have purchaſed one third portion of the tithes[3], and given it for a maintenance of a preaching miniſter; and it is now of the value of about £50. per annum.

"There have been two hermitages in this pariſh[4]; the laſt hermit was well remembered by one Thomas Cooke, a very antient inhabitant, who in my younger years acquainted me therewith.

"This town of Diſeworth is divided into three pariſhes; one part belongs unto Lockington, in which part ſtandeth my father's houſe, over-againſt the Weſt end of the ſteeple, in which I was born. Some other farms are in the pariſh of Bredon; the reſt in the pariſh of Diſeworth.

"In this town, but in the pariſh of Lockington, was I born, the firſt day of May, 1602. My father's name was William Lilly, ſon of Robert, the ſon of Rowland, &c. My mother was Alice, the daughter of Edward Barham, of Fiſkerton Mills in Nottinghamſhire, two miles from Newark upon Trent; this Edward Barham was born in Norwich, and well remembered the rebellion of Kett the Tanner, in the days of Edward VI. Our family have continued many ages in this town as yeomen. Beſides the farm my father and his anceſtors lived in, both my father and grandfather had much free land, and many houſes in the town, not belonging to the college, as the farm wherein they were all born doth, and is now at this preſent of the value of £40. per annum, and in poſſeſſion of my brother's ſon; but the freehold land and houſes, formerly purchaſed by my anceſtors, were all ſold by my grandfather and father; ſo that now our family depend wholly upon a college leaſe. Of my infancy I can ſpeak little; only I do remember, that in the fourth year of my age I had the meaſles.

"I was, during my minority, put to learn at ſuch ſchools, and of ſuch maſters, as the rudeneſs of the place and country afforded; my mother intending I ſhould be a ſcholar from my infancy, ſeeing my father's backſlidings in the world, and no hopes by plain huſbandry to recruit a decayed eſtate; therefore, upon Trinity Tueſday 1613, my father had me to Aſhby de la Zouch, to be inſtructed by one Mr. John Brinſley; one, in thoſe times, of great abilities for inſtruction of youth in the Latin and Greek tongues. He was very ſevere in his life and converſation, and did breed up many ſcholars for the Univerſities. In religion he was a ſtrict Puritan, not conformable wholly to the Church of England. In this town of Aſhby de la Zouch, for many years together, Mr. Arthur Hilderſham exerciſed his miniſtry at my being there; and all the while I continued at Aſhby, he [Mr. Brinſley] was ſilenced. This is that famous Hilderſham[5], who left behind him a Commentary on the 51ſt Pſalm; as alſo many ſermons upon the 4th of John; both which are printed. He was an excellent textuary, of exemplary life, pleaſant in diſcourſe, a ſtrong enemy to the Browniſts, and diſſented not from the Church of England in any Article of Faith, but only about wearing the ſurplice, baptizing with the croſs, and kneeling at the Sacrament. Moſt of the people of the town were directed by his judgement, and ſo continued, and yet do continue, Preſbyterianly affected; for, when the lord of Loughborough, in 1642, 1643, 1644, and 1645, had his garriſon in that town, if by chance at any time any troops of horſe had lodged within the town, though they came late at night to their quarters, yet would one or other of the town preſently give ſir John Gell of Derby notice, ſo that ere next morning moſt of his Majeſty's troops were ſeized in their lodgings; which moved the lord of Loughborough merrily to ſay, "there was not a fart let in Aſhby, but it was preſently carried to Derby." The ſeveral authors I there learned were theſe; viz. "Sententiæ Pueriles," "Cato," "Corderius," "Æſop's Fables," "Tully's Offices," "Ovid de Triſtibus;" laſtly, "Virgil," then "Horace;" as alſo "Camden's Greek Grammar," "Theognis," and "Homer's Iliads:" I was only entered into "Uvedale's Hebrew Grammar." He never taught logick; but often would ſay it was fit to be learned in the Univerſities.

In the 14th year of my age, by a fellow-ſcholar of ſwarth, black complexion, I had like to have my right eye beaten out as we were at play. The ſame year, about Michaelmas, I got a ſurfeit, and thereupon a fever, by eating beech-nuts. In the 16th year of my age I was exceedingly troubled in my dreams concerning my ſalvation and damnation, and alſo concerning the ſafety and deſtruction of the ſouls of my father and mother: in the nights I frequently wept, prayed and mourned, for fear my ſins might offend God. In the 17th year of my age my mother died. In the 18th year of my age my maſter Brinſley was enforced from keeping ſchool. Being perſecuted by the biſhop's officers, he came to London, and then lectured in London, where he afterwards died. In this year, by reaſon of my father's poverty, I was alſo enforced to leave ſchool, and ſo came to my father's houſe, where I lived in much penury for one year, and taught ſchool one quarter of a year, until God's providence provided better for me.

"For the two laſt years of my being at ſchool I was of the higheſt form of the ſchool, and chiefeſt of that form: I could then ſpeak Latin as well as Engliſh; could make extempore verſes upon any theme; all kinds of verſes, hexameter, pentameter, phaluciacks, iambicks, ſapphicks, &c.; ſo that if any ſcholars from remote ſchools came to diſpute, I was ringleader to diſpute with them; I could cap verſes, &c. If any miniſter came to examine us, I was brought forth againſt him; nor would I argue with him unleſs in the Latin tongue; which I found few of them could well ſpeak without breaking Priſcian's head; which if once they did, I would complain to my maſter, "Non benè intelligit linguam Latinam, nec prorſus loquitur." In the derivation of words, I found moſt of them defective; nor indeed were any of them good grammarians. All and every of thoſe ſcholars who were of my form and ſtanding went to Cambridge, and proved excellent Divines: only poor I, William Lilly, was not ſo happy; Fortune then frowning upon my father's preſent condition, he not being in any capacity to maintain me at the Univerſity.

"My father had one Samuel Smatty for his attorney, unto whom I went ſundry times with letters; who perceiving I was a ſcholar, and that I lived miſerably in the country, loſing my time, nor any way likely to do better, if I continued there; pitying my condition, he ſent word for me to come and ſpeak with him, and told me that he had lately been at London, where there was a gentleman wanted a youth, to attend him and his wife, who could write, &c. I acquainted my father with it, who was very willing to be rid of me, for I could not work, drive the plough, or endure any country labour; my father oft would ſay, I was good for nothing. I had only 20*s.* and no more, to buy me a new ſuit, hoſe, doublet, &c. My doublet was fuſtian: I repaired to Mr. Smatty, when I was accoutred, for a letter to my maſter, which he gave me.

[1] This traditionary tale of Lilly is preſerved; as, though the circumſtance of the three votaries is unfounded, the diviſion of the property is rightly ſtated.

[2] Lilly's words are, "the nunnery of Langley, in the pariſh of Diſeworth." But this is a miſtake. The nunnery has been aſcertained not to be within that pariſh, though in 1540 they poſſeſſed ſome lands there. R. C.

[5] Of whom ſee ſome memoirs, and a portrait, p. 6[illegible]6.

"Upon Monday, April 3, 1620, I departed from Diſeworth, and came to Leiceſter; but, before I came away, I viſited my friends, amongſt whom I had given me about 10*s.* which was a great comfort unto me. On the 4th, I took leave of my father, then in Leiceſter gaol for debt, and came along with Bradſhaw the carrier, the ſame perſon with whom many of the duke of Buckingham's kindred had come up. It was a very ſtormy week, cold, and uncomfortable. I footed it all along. We could not reach London until Palm Sunday, April 9, about half an hour after three in the afternoon, at which time we entered Smithfield. When I had gratified the carrier and his ſervants, I had 7*s.* 6*d.* left, and no more; one ſuit of cloaths upon my back, two ſhirts, three bands, one pair of ſhoes, and as many ſtockings. On the delivery of my letter, my maſter entertained me, and next day bought me a new cloak, of which you may imagine (good Eſquire) whether I was not proud; beſides, I ſaw and eat good white bread, contrary to our diet in Leiceſterſhire. My maſter's name was Gilbert Wright, born at Market Boſworth in Leiceſterſhire; my miſtreſs was born at Aſhby de la Zouch, in the ſame county, and in the town where I had gone to ſchool. This Gilbert Wright could neither write nor read; he lived upon his annual rents, was of no calling or profeſſion; he had for many years been ſervant to the lady Pawlet in Hertfordſhire; and when ſerjeant Puckering was made lord-keeper, he made him keeper of his lodgings at Whitehall. When ſir Thomas Egerton was made lord chancellor, he entertained him in the ſame place; and when he married a widow in Newgate-market, the lord chancellor recommended him to the Company of Salters, London, to admit him into their company, and ſo they did; and my maſter in 1624 was maſter of that company. He was a man of excellent natural parts, and would ſpeak publicly upon any occaſion very rationally and to the purpoſe. I write this, that the world may know he was no taylor, or myſelf of that or any other calling or profeſſion. My work was to go before my maſter to church; to attend my maſter when he went abroad; to make clean his ſhoes; ſweep the ſtreet; help to drive bucks when we waſhed; fetch water in a tub from the Thames: I have helped to carry 18 tubs of water in one morning; weed the garden; all manner of drudgeries I willingly performed; ſcrape trenchers, &c. If I had any profeſſion, it was of this nature. I ſhould never have denied my being a taylor, had I been one; for there is no calling ſo baſe, which by God's mercy may not afford a livelihood; and had not my maſter entertained me, I would have been of a very mean profeſſion ere I would have returned into the country again; ſo here ends the actions of 18 years of my life.

"My maſter married his ſecond wife for her eſtate; ſhe was competently rich. They lived very uncomfortably: ſhe was about 70 years of age; he 66 or more; yet never was any woman more jealous of a huſband than ſhe; inſomuch that, whenſoever he went into London, ſhe was confident of his going to women. By thoſe means my life was the more uncomfortable, it being very difficult to pleaſe two ſuch oppoſite natures. However, as to the things of this world, I had enough, and endured their diſcontents with much ſereneneſs. My miſtreſs was very curious to know of ſuch as were then called cunning or wiſe men, whether ſhe ſhould bury her huſband? She frequently viſited ſuch perſons; and this occaſion begot in me a little deſire to learn ſomething that way; but, wanting money to buy books, I laid aſide thoſe motions, and endeavoured to pleaſe both maſter and miſtreſs."

Thus far the hiſtory of this famous aſtrologer is given in his own words; but ſome farther account of him may be requiſite. His miſtreſs died in 1624; after which, his maſter having great affection for him, he lived comfortably; and in June 1625, during the great plague, his maſter, having a great charge of money and plate, ſome of his own, ſome other men's, returned into Leiceſterſhire, leaving Lilly and a fellow ſervant in charge of the houſe. Having no buſineſs to employ him, he became a player on the baſs viol, but ſpent moſt of his time at the Bowling Alley in Lincoln's Inn Fields. In the February following his maſter married a ſecond wife; whom in May 1627 he left a widow; and who, from real affection, ſoon after beſtowed her hand on Lilly, with a fortune of £1000. As this match made him his own maſter, he gave way to his favourite amuſement of angling; and became a conſtant attender on ſermons and lectures among the Puritans. In 1632, he turned his mind to the baſe part of aſtrology; and applied to John Evans[1], a debauched Welſh parſon, who, after practiſing that craft many years in Staffordſhire, where he had a cure of ſouls, came to London, and at this time reſided in Gunpowder Alley. Here Lilly became his pupil, and made ſuch a quick progreſs, that he underſtood how "to ſet a figure" perfectly in ſeven or eight weeks. He intimates, that there was ſomething ſupernatural in the progreſs he made in this art; as he tells us, that "he prayed for ſeveral weeks to thoſe angels who were thought and believed by wiſe men to teach and inſtruct in all the ſeveral liberal ſciences[2]." Afterwards, by great induſtry, temperance, and obſervation, and eſpecially by the purchaſe of ſome choice books of aſtrology, out of the library of Mr. William Bedwell, vicar of Tottenham[3] (who had been many years chaplain to ſir Henry Wotton at Venice), he grew to be very eminent; and was accounted by many, during the time of the Uſurpation, the beſt aſtrologer then in England. Continuing his application with the utmoſt aſſiduity, he gave the publick in 1633 a ſpecimen of his attainments and ſkill therein, in an intimation that the king had choſen an unlucky horoſcope for the coronation in Scotland. In 1634, having got into his hands a manuſcript, with ſome alterations of the "Ars Notoria" of Cornelius Agrippa, he drank the doctrine of the magical circle, and the invocation of ſpirits, with unquenchable greedineſs; and became ſo much intoxicated thereby, as not only to make uſe of a form of prayer preſcribed therein to the angel Salmonæus, and to fancy himſelf a favourite of great power and intereſt with that uncreated phantom, but even to claim a knowledge of and a familiar acquaintance with the particular guardian angels of England, by name Salmael and Malchidael[4]. After which, he treated the myſtery of recovering ſtolen goods, &c. with great contempt, claiming a ſupernatural ſight, and the gift of prophetical predictions; all which he knew well how to turn to good advantage.

Wood records a converſation which paſſed between him and the celebrated Dugdale; in which the latter relating that at his birth there was a ſwarm of bees in his father's garden, which ſome thought a happy preſage; Lilly readily told him, "that ſwarm of bees did foretell that the infant ſhould in time prove a prodigy of induſtry, &c.[5]" He was preſently grown into ſo much fame, that, when one Ramſay, the king's clock-maker, being informed that there was a great treaſure buried in the cloyſter of Weſtminſter-abbey, obtained the dean's (Dr. Williams, biſhop of Lincoln) leave to ſearch for it with the divining or Moſaical rods, he applied to Lilly for his aſſiſtance. Lilly, with one Scot, who pretended to the uſe of the ſaid rods, attended by Ramſay and above thirty perſons more, went into the cloyſter by night, and, obſerving the rods to tumble over one another on the Weſt ſide of the cloyſter, concluded the treaſure lay hid under that ſpot: but, the ground being dug to the depth of ſix feet, and nothing found but a coffin, which they found not heavy enough for their purpoſe, they proceeded, without opening it, into the Abbey. Here they were alarmed by a ſtorm, which ſuddenly roſe, and increaſed to ſuch a height, that they were afraid the Weſt end of the church would have been blown upon them. The rods would not move at all; the candles and torches, all but one, were extinguiſhed, or burned very dimly. Scot was amazed, looked pale, and knew not what to think or do; until Lilly gave directions to diſmiſs the dæmons; which when done, all was quiet again, and each man returned home. However, that method of divination was never after made uſe of by our conjurer; though he was cunning enough to aſcribe the miſcarriage, not to any defect in the art itſelf, but to the number of people who were preſent at the operation, and derided it; ſhrewdly laying it down for a rule, that ſecrecy and intelligent operators, with a ſtrong confidence and knowledge of what they are doing, are neceſſary requiſites to ſucceed in this work.

[5] Wood's Faſti, vol. II. p. 8.

In 1634 he taught aſtrology to ſir George Peckham, knight, who next year unfortunately died at St. Winifred's well in Wales.

Meanwhile (in October 1633) he had buried his firſt wife, purchaſed a moiety of thirteen houſes in the Strand, and (in November 1634) married a ſecond wife, who (with a fortune of £500.) joining to an extravagant temper a termagant ſpirit, which he could not lay, made him unhappy, and greatly reduced his circumſtances. With this comfortable yokemate he removed in 1636 to Herſham in Surrey, where he continued (but not without interruption of law-ſuits in 1637 and 1638, both in the Chancery and Exchequer) till September 1641; when, having recovered his health, and inſtructed John Humphreys in the art of aſtrology, and ſeeing a proſpect of fiſhing in troubled waters, he returned to London. Here having purchaſed ſeveral curious books in this art, which were found on pulling down the houſe of another aſtrologer, he peruſed them with inceſſant diligence, finding out ſecrets contained in them, which were written in an imperfect Greek character; and, in April 1644, publiſhed his "Merlinus Anglicus junior[1];" which was followed by his "Supernatural Sight and Apparition;" "The White King's Prophecy" (of which 1800 were ſold in three days); and the "Prophetical Merlin." He had become familiarly acquainted, in the preceding year, with Bulſtrode Whitelocke, eſq. whom he had medically aſſiſted, and who was afterwards his friend and patron. In 1645 he publiſhed his "Starry Meſſenger, with an interpretation of three ſuns ſeen in London 29 May 1644, being Charles the Second's Birth-day;" and in June 1645 he gave an unlucky judgement, which the battle of Naſeby too fatally verified[2]. For this publication he was apprehended, and brought before the Committee of Examinations; but diſcharged without expence, it being noticed that "literary men paid no fees." Within a week after, however, he was complained of in the Houſe of Commons by ſir Arthur Heſilrige, for having made too free in his Preface with the Committee of Leiceſterſhire[3]; but, by the friendſhip of baron Rigby, eſcaped without farther notice. From that time he devoted himſelf entirely to the intereſts of the parliament, though he had before rather inclined to the king's party. In 1646 he printed a "Collection of Prophecies," with the explanation and verification of Aquila, in "The White King's Prophecy;" as alſo the "Nativity of biſhop Laud and Thomas earl of Strafford." In 1647 he finiſhed the third book of "Nativities;" during the compoſing whereof, for ſeven whole weeks, he was ſhut up of the plague, burying in that time two maid-ſervants thereof; yet, towards November that year, he finiſhed his book called "Chriſtian Aſtrology[4];" but has not any where ſignified that the angels lent him their aſſiſtance in that work; nor does it appear that there is any thing in it more than the author himſelf was well able to perform. It is very certain that he regarded judicial aſtrology[5] as a ſcience; and it is no leſs certain that he proſtituted his pen to the political purpoſes of the parliament and of Cromwell[6]. Aſtrological predictions and prophecies were perfectly ſuited to the enthuſiaſm of theſe times; and Lilly well knew how to apply them to the hopes and fears of the populace. He was frequently ambiguous and oracular, and ſometimes amuſed the people with hieroglyphics; many of which, as we are told by Mr. Aubrey, he ſtole from an old monkiſh manuſcript[1].

[1] This volume is addreſſed, in a "maiden Dedication," to "the honourable and truly magnanimous ſir William Wittypoll, Knight," in thankful teſtimony of due reſpects for manifold favours, ſince by means of the virtuous Robert Tolmach, eſq. he had an acquaintance with him. In the Preface he ſays, "Sixteen years I happily lived under the government of Charles our King. I was in no particular in that ſpace of time oppreſſed. I felt no preſſures, either of ſhip-money, billeting of ſoldiers, or the like; no High Commiſſion had influence on me, no Star Chamber, no Court of Honour. Like an hermit, fourteen miles from London, I lived near Oatlands; but the heavens appearing cloudy, and foretelling me a ſtorm was coming, I left my country habitation 1640, and came to London, where now I am, and in which place I daily hear the noiſe of war, and ſound of trumpet, neither of which affright me. Safety is in London. It will be. By God's bleſſing, from and in this City I had my ſubſiſtence in fortune; and with that City and its fortunes, and the moſt honourable citizens thereof, will I adventure purſe, perſon, and what may, if any thing can, be more dear; holding it more honour to be buried in the aſhes of the City's ruins, than to ſurvive a moment after ſuch a cataſtrophe.—The work had been more compleat, had I not been as much, during its writing, oppreſſed with taxes and weekly aſſeſſments, as ever Bellantinus was fearful of the approach of his enemies, while he wrote againſt Mirandula. Let us be equally pardoned. It is true, it hath coſt me more hours than at firſt I intended; yet I do not repent of it; my knowledge was thereby the more increaſed. Some things I have purpoſely omitted. I love Monarchy, and would not eaſily diſpleaſe my Sovereign. To none living, but himſelf, if ever, will I communicate my private reſerves."—He then enters largely into the characters of ſuch as were adepts in aſtrology. "Calvin was an enemy to it; but Melancthon, as grave a Divine, and more learned, as moſt hold, was a friend to and ſtudent in it. Perkins was peeviſh and bitter. One Chambers wrote againſt me; but had ſuch a leſſon returned by the learned ſir Chriſtopher Heydon, in anſwer of his folly, that very grief killed the old worm-eaten canon of Windſor. One Melton (qu. if Milton be here meant?) and Vicars have railed, but wrote nothing to the purpoſe. Henry earl of Northampton, of a noble family, writes againſt judiciary aſtrology and comets; the book was never yet thought worthy of an anſwer. I hold it an honour to be Magus, in the ſenſe king James took the word in "Demonologia." I have had much acquaintance and ſociety with ſcholars of other nations, reputed learned in aſtrology in their own country; but I affirm that none of them were comparable either to that grave, reverend, and profoundly learned Dr. Napier, or to his ſurviving kinſman ſir Richard Napier, knight, excellently judicious in aſtrology, phyſick, and philoſophy; or to Mr. Thomas Allen, of Glouceſter hall; or to Mr. Bredon, a rigid Ptolomeian; or to Mr. Nicholas Fiſke, curious in the art of divination, and exquiſite in all the parts of aſtrology. Let them ſhew me a man that hath given better proofs of his judgement in aſtrology, than my friend Mr. Booker, in his annual prognoſtications."

[2] "My Starry Meſſenger came abroad upon that memorable 14th of June, 1645; upon which day the right valiant and honourable ſir Thomas Fairfax and the ſober and ſucceſsful lieutenant-general Cromwell had a moſt abſolute victory over our enemies (Rege præſente) at Naſeby; ſince which day the Parliament and Kingdom's enemies never proſpered."

[3] "Unworthy men," he ſays, "have wearied my pen, diſheartened the gentry to our inevitable loſs, and impoveriſhment of thoſe towns committed to their charge. Let the town of Leiceſter be hereof an unlucky precedent, which hath been theſe three years fortifying, and now on the ſudden tranſmitted to his Majeſty's forces. What became of the vaſt ſums of money there raiſed? why the valiant gentlemen diſplaced, and men of inferior rank exalted? Who gives any reaſon, unleſs it was purpoſely done to betray the town to our enemies, or, by loſs of this, to prolong the wars another year? You ſhall ſee if his Majeſty's providence fortify not that town in leſs months than we in years? It muſt be diſcovered who or whom have played the plain knaves with us; or elſe we ſhall never be at quiet. Many complain the taxes of that county have exceeded the income of rent."

[6] "When Cromwell was in Scotland, a ſoldier ſtood with Lilly's (Merlinus) Anglicus in his hand, and ſaid, as the ſeveral troops paſſed him, 'Lo, hear what Lilly ſaith; you are promiſed victory; fight it out, brave boys;' and then read that month's prediction." Life, p. 83.

In 1647, upon the breaking out of the quarrel between the parliament and army, whoſe head-quarters were at Windſor, he was ſent for, together with Booker, another aſtrologer, by Fairfax, the general, who addreſſed them in theſe terms: "That God had bleſſed the army with many ſignal victories, and yet their work was not finiſhed; that he hoped God would go along with them, until this work was done; that they ſought not themſelves, but the welfare and tranquillity of the good people, and the whole nation, and, for that end, were reſolved to ſacrifice both their own lives and fortunes; that he hoped the art which they [Lilly and Booker] ſtudied, was lawful and agreeable to God's word; that he underſtood it not; but did not doubt they both feared God, and therefore had a good opinion of them." To this ſpeech Lilly returned the following anſwer: "My lord, I am glad to ſee you here at this time: certainly both the people of God, and all others of this nation, are very ſenſible of God's mercy, love, and favour unto them, in directing the parliament to nominate and elect you general of their armies; a perſon ſo religious, ſo valiant. The ſeveral unexpected victories, obtained under your excellency's conduct, will eternize the ſame unto all poſterity. We are confident of God's going along with you and your army, until the great work, for which he ordained you both, is fully perfected; which, we hope, will be the conquering and ſubverſion of yours and the parliament's enemies; and then a quiet ſettlement, and firm peace over all the nation, unto God's glory, and full ſatisfaction of tender conſciences. Sir, as for ourſelves, we truſt in God, and, as Chriſtians, believe in him: we do not ſtudy any art but what is lawful and conſonant to the Scriptures, fathers, and antiquity; which we humbly deſire you to believe." This audience, in November, ſeems to have been occaſioned by a ſuſpicion of his attachment to the royal party, which he had given ſome room for, by receiving an application from the king, then in cuſtody of the army at Hampton Court; for, in Auguſt preceding, when his majeſty had framed thoughts of eſcaping from the ſoldiery, and obſcuring himſelf ſomewhere near the city, he ſent, as Lilly tells us, Mrs. Whorwood, to know in what quarter of the nation he might be ſafely concealed, till he thought proper to diſcover himſelf. Lilly, having erected a figure, ſaid, the king might be ſafely concealed in ſome part of Eſſex about twenty miles from London, where the lady happened to have a houſe fit for his majeſty's reception; and went away next morning to acquaint him with it. But the king was gone away in the night Weſtward, and ſurrendered himſelf at length to Hammond in the Iſle of Wight; and thus the proſpect was rendered abortive[2]. However, he was again applied to by the ſame lady, in 1648, for the ſame purpoſe, while the king was at Cariſbrook caſtle; whence having laid a deſign to eſcape by ſawing the iron bars of his chamber window, lady Whorwood came to our author, and acquainted him with it. Lilly procured a proper ſaw, made by one Farmor, an ingenious lockſmith, in Bowlane, Cheapſide, and furniſhed her with aqua-fortis beſides; by which means his majeſty did the buſineſs, and was out with his body, till he came to his breaſt, when, his heart failing, he proceeded no farther. About September, the ſame lady came a third time to Lilly on the ſame errand. The parliament commiſſioners were now appointed to treat with his majeſty; upon which our aſtrologer, after peruſing his figure, told the lady the commiſſioners would be there ſuch a day; elected the day and hour when to receive them; and directed, as ſoon as the propoſitions were read, to ſign them, and make haſte with all ſpeed to come up with the commiſſioners to London; the army being then far diſtant from London; and the city enraged ſtoutly againſt them. The king promiſed he would do ſo, but was diverted from it by the lord Say.

During the ſiege of Colcheſter, in Auguſt 1648, Lilly and Booker were ſent for thither, to encourage the ſoldiers. This they did, by aſſuring them that the town would be ſoon taken; which proved true in the event[3].

All this while our aſtrologer continued firm to his own intereſt, by ſerving that of the parliament party; from whom he had received, in 1648, £50. in caſh, and an order from the council of ſtate for a penſion of £100. a year, which was granted to him for furniſhing them with a perfect knowledge of the chiefeſt concernments of France. This he obtained by means of a ſecular prieſt, with whom he had formerly been acquainted, and who now was confeſſor to one of the French ſecretaries: he received the penſion two years, when he threw it up, with the employment, in diſguſt on ſome account or other. Meanwhile, he read public lectures upon aſtrology; and ſtood ſo high in his profeſſion, as to become not unfrequently the ſubject of lampoons[4]; one of which ſhall be given.

"In Lilium, Bardum, Aſtrologum:
"Lilius eſt quidvis; eſt bardus, perditus, audax;
Eſt mendax, aſinus, Lilius, aſtrologus.
Demonſtrat nomen te, mendaciſſime Lili,
Nomine bis mendax dicere, teque magis.
Iſtis quid levius quibus eſt pro nomine nomen
Mendacis, magis eſt qui levitate levis.
Candida mi Lili, non ſunt tibi lilia nomen,
Vix inter vepres nomen habere potes[5]."

Whilſt the king was at Windſor caſtle, in December 1648, walking one day upon the leads there, he looked upon captain Wharton's Almanack. "My book," ſaith he, "ſpeaks well as to the weather." One William Allen ſtanding by; "What," ſaith he, "ſaith his antagoniſt, Mr. Lilly?" "I do not care for Lilly," ſaid his Majeſty, "he hath been always againſt me;" and became a little bitter in his expreſſions. "Sir," ſaid Allen, "the man is an honeſt man, and writes but what his art informs him." "I believe it," ſaid his Majeſty; "and that Lilly underſtands aſtrology as well as any man in Europe." On the firſt day of the king's trial, having been permitted by the guards to paſs, Lilly was preſent in the court; and ſays, "The King ſpoke excellently well and majeſtically, without impediment in the leaſt. I ſaw the ſilver top of his ſtaff unexpectedly fall to the ground, which was took up by Mr. Ruſhworth. But when I heard Bradſhaw, the judge, ſay to his Majeſty, 'Sir, inſtead of anſwering the Court, you interrogate their power; which becomes not one in your condition;' theſe words pierced my heart and ſoul, to hear a ſubject thus audaciouſly to reprehend his ſovereign, who ever and anon replied with great magnanimity and prudence."

"Three or four days before his Majeſty's beheading, one major Sydenham, who had command in Scotland, came to take his leave of me, and told me the King was to be put to death; which I was not willing to believe, and ſaid 'I could not be perſuaded the Parliament could find any Engliſhman ſo barbarous that would do that foul action.' 'Rather,' ſaith he, 'than they ſhould want ſuch a man, theſe arms of mine ſhould do it.' He went preſently after into Scotland; and upon the firſt engagement againſt them was ſlain, and his body miſerably cut and mangled."

Having, in 1650, written publicly that the parliament ſhould not continue, but a new government ariſe; agreeably thereto, in the Almanack for 1651, he aſſerted that the parliament ſtood upon a ticklish foundation, and that the commonalty and ſoldiery would join together againſt them. Hereupon he was now called before the committee of plundered miniſters; but, receiving notice thereof before the arrival of the meſſenger, he applied to ſpeaker Lenthall, always his friend, who pointed out the offenſive paſſages. He immediately altered them; attended the committee next morning with ſix copies printed, which ſix alone he acknowledged to be his; and, by that means, came off with only being detained thirteen days in cuſtody of the ſerjeant at arms. This year he was engaged in a diſpute with Mr. Thomas Gataker; and, before the expiration of the year, he loſt his ſecond wife, for which he ſhed no tears, but ſung "Gloria Patri," &c. and married a third in October following. Meanwhile he ſo well plied his buſineſs, that we find him, in 1651 and 1652, laying out near £2000. for lands and a houſe at Herſham.

[1] Moore has ſtolen ſeveral from him; and there is no doubt but ſome future almanack-maker will ſteal them from Moore.

[2] Whilſt the king was at Hampton Court, alderman Adams ſent him 1000 pieces of gold; 500 whereof he gave to Mrs. Whorwood; and 20 of which Lilly had for his ſhare.

[3] In his Aſtrological Predictions, dated Aug. 22, 1648, Lilly ſays, "God Almighty, who loves upright men, hath delivered Colcheſter to his excellency the lord Fairfax, ſubdued the treachered Scot, and their general Hamilton, and all the malignant commanders, unto his ſervant lieutenant-general Cromwell. Let England love theſe men, and take care of the army."

[4] "Lilly's Ape, by Philoſtorgus," dated Cambridge, Feb. 2, 1651-2, points out ſome groſs blunders in his Almanacks; and "Lilly's Lamentations, or England's feigned Prophet diſcovered, 1652," 4to, contains ſeveral pointed attacks againſt our Aſtrologer; and has a frontiſpiece of an Owl calculating Nativities.—"I may juſtly ſay, Utilius fuerat nobis neſcire futura; for, had my knowledge been leſs, Envy had never attended me ſo cloſe at the heels, or Slander or Calumny wounded me ſo ſore.—From ſome malevolent, churliſh, and envious Clergy, I muſt expect blows, which, I aſſure them, ſhall be well returned."

[5] King's Pamphlets, in the Britiſh Muſeum, 1649—52. N° 459. 3.

In 1655, he was indicted at Hickes's Hall, for giving judgement upon ſtolen goods, but was acquitted.

In 1659, he received from the king of Sweden a preſent of a gold chain and medal, worth above £50. on account of his having mentioned that monarch with great reſpect in his Almanacks of 1657 and 1658.

Having during the rebellion written notoriouſly in favour of the Long Parliament againſt the Royal Family, he was deſigned an object of reſentment at the Reſtoration of Charles II.; but was excuſed on the interceſſion of ſir George Wharton (to whom Lilly, after all the various altercations in their printed books, had been eminently ſerviceable in 1650[1].

After the Reſtoration, report being made to the Houſe of Commons, that William Lilly the aſtrologer had in print declared that he knew who was the king's executioner[2]; the Houſe thereupon ordered, that he be taken into cuſtody by the ſerjeant at arms, till he reveal who was the perſon who cut off the head of the late king. June 4, 1660, Mr. Lilly was brought in cuſtody by the ſerjeant at arms into the lobby; but, by reaſon of the great officers of the Houſe, he could not be examined. On the 6th of June, Mr. Prynne reported from the Committee which had been appointed to examine Mr. Lilly, that he had informed them that Robert Spavin, then ſecretary to Cromwell, dining with him ſoon after the fact, aſſured him that George Joyce, commonly known by the name of Cornet Joyce, was the perſon that performed that to-be-abhorred action[3]. This year, he ſued out his pardon under the broad-ſeal of England.

In 1664, he finiſhed a long and laborious ſuit in Chancery; in which, on the hearing before ſir Harbottle Grimſton, maſter of the Rolls, he had the victory, but no coſts.

At the ſame period he proſecuted a ſuit at law with captain Colborn, lord of the manor of Eſher, concerning the right of the pariſh of Walton (where he was then churchwarden). This he did ſucceſsfully, at his own charges, not one pariſhioner joining him; and was otherwiſe very active in "ſettling the affairs of that diſtracted pariſh."

Prefixed to Richard Edlin's "Præ-nuncius Syderum, 1664," dedicated "to the eminently learned, and no leſs honoured, Elias Aſhmole[4], of the Middle Temple, eſq. Windſor Herald at arms, and comptroller of the Exciſe to his Majeſty, a known Mæcenas to all ingenious arts," is the following teſtimonial: "I have read over this piece; and aver, it is excellently and judiciouſly penned; and know not what could have been ſaid more of this ſubject; W. Lilly, Feb. 15, 1663-4." Similar recommendations are alſo prefixed by G. Wharton and John Booker, and a licence of R. L'Eſtrange.

In 1665, on the breaking out of the plague in London, he retired to his eſtate at Herſham; and in October 1666 was ſummoned to attend the Committee of Parliament, "appointed to enquire into the cauſe of the late Fires;" becauſe, as he was told by the chairman, "he had hinted ſome ſuch thing in one of his Hieroglyphicks." Upon a long examination, he was diſmiſſed with great civility; after which, reſiding wholly in the country, he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of phyſic; having, by means of his friend Mr. Aſhmole, procured from archbiſhop Sheldon a licence to practiſe it; and, in October 1670, he exerciſed both the faculties of phyſic and aſtrology; and continued publiſhing his "Ephemeris," or "Aſtrological Judgements," to the day of his death.

By the profit ariſing from his great practice among the vulgar, in the profeſſion of conjurer, prophet, phyſician, &c. he acquired a ſum ſufficient to enable him to purchaſe a comfortable eſtate at Walton upon Thames; where he was ſeized with a dead palſy May 30; died June 9, 1681[5]; and was buried in the chancel of the church there, towards the North wall; and a black marble ſlab was placed over his remains by his friend Mr. Aſhmole, with this inſcription:

"Ne oblivione contereretur Urna Gulielmi Lillii, Aſtrologi peritiſſimi,
qui fatis ceſſit
V^{to} idus Junii, anno Chriſti Juliano
MDCLXXXI;
Hoc illi poſuit amoris monumentum
Elias Ashmole, armiger[6]."

At the requeſt of Mr. Aſhmole, Dr. Smalridge, biſhop of Briſtol, then a ſcholar at Weſtminſter-ſchool, wrote a Latin and Engliſh elegy on his death; which are annexed to the hiſtory of our author's Life and Times, from which this memoir is extracted[7].

Lilly, though known to be an impoſtor[8], had a penſion conferred on him by the council of ſtate. The Royaliſts treated him with ridicule and contempt. He is the Sidrophel of Butler; and ſir John Birkenhead, in his "Paul's Church Yard[9]," ſatirizes his Almanack, where he mentions "Merlinus Anglicus, the Art of diſcovering all that never was, and all that never ſhall be." Gataker, who well knew the futility of his art, calls him "blind buzzard[10]." He ſeems to have been checked by no ſcruples in promoting the rebellion; and indeed tells us himſelf, that he "engaged body and ſoul in the cauſe of the parliament[11]."

A little before his death, he adopted one William Coley, a taylor of Oxford, for his ſon, by the name of Merlin Junior; and made him a preſent of the impreſſion of his Almanack, which had been printed ſix and thirty years ſucceſſively: but he bequeathed his eſtate at Herſham to one of the ſons of his friend and patron Bulſtrode Whitelock; and his magical utenſils came all into the hands of Dr. Cauſin, his ſucceſſor, of famous memory. His Almanack, which maintained its reputation for a long courſe of years, ſeems to have been one of thoſe books which are thought neceſſary

[1] Mr. Aſhmole, in his Diary, ſays, "Captain Wharton having been carried to the Gatehouſe, I acquainted Mr. Lilly therewith, who profeſſed himſelf very ſorry, becauſe he knew Bradſhaw intended to hang him; and conſequently (forgetting the quarrel that had been between the Captain and him) promiſed me to uſe his intereſt with Mr. Bulſtrode Whitlock (his patron) to obtain his releaſe."—In Wharton's Almanack for 1651. his public acknowledgements are made of Mr. Lilly's aſſiſtance.

for all families. I can eaſily imagine that the author ſcarce ever went into the houſe of a mechanic where he did not ſee it on the ſame ſhelf with "The Practice of Piety," and "The Whole Duty of Man [1]."

The Life of Lilly, by himſelf, together with his Life of Charles I. and that of his friend Aſhmole, written by that author by way of diary, having become very ſcarce, were re-publiſhed by T. Davies in 1774.

In the Aſhmolean Muſeum is a portrait of Lilly, which he had given to Mr. Aſhmole in 1652 [2].

The liſt of his ſeveral publications is here given:

1. "Merlinus Anglicus Junior: The Engliſh Merlin revived; or, a mathematicall Prediction upon the Affairs of the Engliſh Commonwealth, and of all or moſt Kingdoms of Chriſtendom, this preſent year [3]. By W. Lilly, Student in Aſtrology June 12, 1644," 4to. [A ſecond edition, enlarged and cleared from many obſcure paſſages the former Impreſſion complained of, which he then unwillingly ſuffered, but hath now fully reſtored to the true original copy at firſt intended for the preſs, was publiſhed in the ſame year.]

2. "Supernatural Sights and Apparitions ſeen in London, June 30, 1644, interpreted. With a mathematicall Diſcourſe of the imminent Conjunction of Jupiter and Mars, 26 July, 1644; the effects which either here or in ſome near Counties, from thence may be expected;" dedicated "To the Nobles, Knights, and Burgeſſes, that have abſented themſelves from our Parliament at Weſtminſter, 1644," 4to.

3. "A Prophecy of the White King [4] and dreadfull Dead man [5] explained. To which is added, the Prophecy of Sibylla Tiburtina; and Prediction of John Kepler on the fiery Trygon, beginning 1603; all of eſpecial concernment for theſe times; 1644," 4to. To which is added, "A Prophecy found in a Wall in a Carthuſian houſe, in the county of Somerſet, anno Dom. 1548, by a Maſon; a copy whereof was taken by Richard Mogg, 1603;" printed in 1644, 4to. [6]

4. "England's Propheticall Merlin; foretelling to all Nations of Europe, untill 1663, the Actions depending upon the Influence of the Conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter, 1642-3; the Progreſſe and Motions of the Comet 1618, under whoſe Effects we in England and moſt Regions of Europe now ſuffer. What Kingdoms muſt yet partake of the Remainder of the Influence; viz. of War, Plague, Famine, &c. When the Engliſh Commonwealth may expect Peace, and the City of London better Times. The beginning and end of the watry Trigon. An Entrance of the fiery Triplicity, 1603. The Nativities of ſome Engliſh Kings; and ſome horary Queſtions inſerted. Performed by William Lilly, 1644," 4to; dated from the Three Flower de Luces near Somerſet-houſe; the Preface April 17, the Book Oct. 16, 1644.

5. "The Starry Meſſenger; or, an Interpretation what Accidents may enſue upon that ſtrange Apparition of Three Suns, ſeen in London the 19th of November 1644, being the Birth-day of King Charles; the Effects of the Eclipſe of the Sun, which will be viſible in England Aug. 1, 1645, &c. With an Anſwer to an Aſtrologicall Judgement, printed at Oxford, upon his Majeſty's march [7]; publiſhed June 14, 1645," 4to; dedicated "to his truly honoured friend, Maſter John Thompſon, of the City of London, Merchant."

6. "A Collection of antient and modern Prophecies concerning theſe preſent Times, with modeſt Obſervations thereon. The Nativities of Thomas earl of Strafford and William Laud late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, his Majeſty's great Favourites; Aſtrologicall Judgements upon their Scheames; and the Speech intended by the earl of Strafford to have been ſpoken at his Death; publiſhed Nov. 21, 1645;" 4to. and dedicated to the King; to whom he predicts "that his Majeſty will never obtain a conqueſt over his Parliament at Weſtminſter."

7. "Anglicus; or, Ephemeris for 1646; delivering mathematically the Succeſs of that Year's Actions between the King and Parliament of England; with Aſtrologicall Aphoriſms, expedient for Phyſicians, and otherwiſe uſeful for Students in this Science. To which is added the Nativity of Prince Rupert. Publiſhed Jan. 5, 1645-6," 8vo.

8. "Merlinus Anglicus; Ephemeris for 1647; delivering a probable Conjecture of ſuch Paſſages as are prefigured by the Influence of the Stars, &c. within the Kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland; with Mouthly Obſervations; alſo a modeſt Prediction upon the preſent Affairs of Germany, Spain, Italy, France, and the United Provinces; together with ſome Pieces of Ptolomy in the Engliſh Tongue. Publiſhed Oct. 16, 1646," 8vo.

9. "Chriſtian Aſtrology modeſtly treated of, in Three Books. The firſt, containing the Uſe of an Ephemeris, the erecting of a Scheme of Heaven; Nature of the Twelve Signs of the Zodiack; of the Planets; with a moſt eaſy Introduction to the whole Art of Aſtrology. The ſecond, by a moſt methodicall Way, inſtructeth the Student how to judge or reſolve all Manner of Queſtions contingent unto Man; viz. of Health, Sickneſs, Riches, Marriages, Preferments, Journeys, &c. Several Queſtions inſerted and judged. The third, contains an exact Method, whereby to judge upon Nativities; ſeveral Ways how to rectify them; how to judge the general Fate of the Native by the Twelve Houſes of Heaven, according to the natural Influences of the Stars; how his particular and annual Accidents, by the Art of Directions; and its exact Meaſure of Time, by Profections, Revolutions, Tranſits. A Nativity judged by the Method preceding; 1647," 4to, dedicated "To his moſt learned and courteous friend Bolſtrod Whitlocke, Eſq. Aug. 16, 1647." To the above is prefixed the Author's Portrait by Marſhall; and commendatory Verſes by John Booker; Will. Roe, in Med. Studens; A. W. and J. P. And at the End is a copious Catalogue of Aſtrological Authors, and of their Publications.—On this piece he read his lectures in 1648.

10. "The Third Book of Nativities," 1647.

11. "The World's Cataſtrophe; or the miraculous Changes and Alterations (probably to happen) in the ſeveral Kingdoms and Commonwealths of Europe, until the Year of our Lord God 1666, aſtrologically predicted. A Prophecie of Ambroſe Merlin, a Britaine, from the Tranſlation of Geffery of Monmouth; ænigmatically therein delivering the Fate and Period of the Engliſh Monarchy. John Trithemius, abbot of Spanheim, of the Heavenly Intelligencies, governing the Orbs under God, 1647." [The Cataſtrophe Mundi and Merlini Prophetiæ were tranſlated by Mr. Aſhmole; Trithemius by Lilly.] "An exact Type of the Three Suns ſeen in Cheſhire and Shropſhire, 3 April, 1647; their Signification and Portent; aſtrologically handled, by W. Lilly, Student in Aſtrologie,

[5] Written in Greek characters, and printed 1588 in Harvye's "Problematicall Diſcourſe."

[6] In the Preface to this tract he ſays, "In the latter part of 1635 I was afflicted with much ſickneſs, and enforced to betake myſelf into the country, to avoid the multiplicity of my acquaintance, more than the infirmity itſelf. In April 1636, I bad adieu to London; and in that year was firſt acquainted with the dream of William Laud, the now unfortunate archbiſhop of Canterbury. In 1638 I had frequent acceſs to London, by reaſon of a vexatious ſuit, of which, after much expence of time and money, the moſt honourable lord Coventry quitted me, for which I muſt ever owe to his memory all deſerved acknowledgement. In that year there was at a picture-maker's near Temple Bar, for ſome months, daily exhibited to public view three pictures, in full length; his Majeſty's now living, the great Welſh porter, and a yeoman of the guard; his Majeſty's caſually in the midſt.—In April, 1640, Mr. Lilly had in the country a moſt violent burning fever.—This Preface alſo contains a remarkable ſtory in 1615 of king James I. then at Hampton Court, ſending for a poor dumb woman (who could predict by ſigns) to a houſe in one of the Moulſeys, to give her opinion on the pictures of the then King and Queen, the Palſgrave and his lady, the duke of Richmond, marquis Hamilton, and others.

12. "An Aſtrologicall Prediction of the Occurrences in England, for the Years 1648, 1649, 1650; concerning theſe Particulars; viz. the Effects depending upon the late Conjunction of the two malevolent Planets Saturn and Mars; what Succeſs may be expected from the preſent intended Treaty between his Majeſty and the Parliament, the ſtanding or falling of this Parliament, and the Array under the Command of his Excellency the Lord Fairfax; our imminent Diſturbances generally handled; together with many Contingencies to the whole Kingdom, London eſpecially; the Product of the Scots' Army; with ſome Obſervations upon Duke Hamilton's Nativity; what may ſucceed the Apparition of three Suns in Lancaſhire, ſeen of many the 18th of February laſt;" dedicated "to the Right Honourable the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, of the Houſe of Commons in this Parliament; Aug. 22, 1648," 4to.

13. "A peculiar Prognoſtication, aſtrologically predicted according to Art; whether, or no, his Majeſty ſhall ſuffer Death this preſent Year 1649; the Poſſibility thereof diſcuſſed and divulged. Publiſhed for general ſatisfaction; Jan. 6, 1648-9," 4to.

14. Ephemeris for 1652; publiſhed Oct. 29, 1651; and dedicated "to the ſupream Authority of the Nation, the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England."

15. Monarchy or no Monarchy in England[2]: Paul Grebner his Prophecy[3] concerning Charles ſon of Charles, his Greatneſs, Victories, Conqueſts. The Northern Lyon, or Lyon of the North, and Chicken of the Eagle, diſcovered who they are, of what Nation. Engliſh, Latin, Saxon, Scottiſh, and Welſh. Prophecies concerning England in particular, and Europe in general. Several Obſervations upon the Life and Death of Charles late King of England[4]; dated July 23, 1651[5]. Ænigmaticall Types of the future State and Condition of England for many Years to come; 1651[6]," 4to.

16. "Annus Tenebroſus, or the Dark Year; or, an Aſtrologicall Diſcourſe concerning the Effects of two Lunar Eclipſes, and one admirable and formidable of the Sun, all viſible in England in the Year 1652," 4to; dated March 10, 1651-2[7].

[This produced "Black Monday turned White; or the Aſtrologers' Knavery epitomized; being an Anſwer to the great Prognoſticks and groſs Predictions of Mr. Lillie, Mr. Culpepper, and the reſt of the Societie of Aſtrologers, concerning the Eclipſe of the Sun on Monday laſt, which (according to their Calculation) ſhould have produced an Egyptian Darkneſs, and the greateſt that hath been ſeen in this latter Age. Alſo a Deſcription of the glorious Effects and happy Times that are to proceed from the two famous Luminaries of the Sun and Moon in the aforeſaid Eclipſe; prophetically deduced from the wonderful Diſpenſations of that Divine Power, who drew back the Clouds like a Curtain, and cauſed the Sun to ſhew its pleaſant Beams, to the memorable Confutations of theſe great Aſtrologers, printed in 1652," 4to.]

17. "An eaſy and familiar Method whereby to judge the Effects depending on Eclipſes either of the Sun or Moon, 1652[8], with Part of the ſecond Book of Ptolemy concerning Eclipſes," 4to.[9]

18. "Ephemeris for 1667;" in the Epiſtle to which he ſays, "his main deſign is, to diſcover from natural cauſes the ſucceſs betwixt his gracious Majeſty of England, and the ungrateful Dutch, the ungrateful Dane, and French, now all confederate againſt England[10]."

19. "The dangerous Condition of the United Provinces prognoſticated, and plainly demonſtrated, by William Lilly, in his Obſervations on the Comet which appeared in 1652, and publiſhed in his Annual Predictions for 1654;" printed in 1672, 4to.

20. "Animæ Aſtrologiæ, or a Guide for Aſtrologers; being the Conſiderations of the famous Guido Bonatus, faithfully rendered into Engliſh; as alſo the choiceſt Aphoriſms of Cardan's Seven Segments; tranſlated and methodically digeſted under their proper Heads. With a new Table of the fixed Stars, rectified for ſeveral Years to come; and divers other neceſſary Illuſtrations. A Work moſt requiſite and neceſſary for all Students, and recommended as ſuch to the Sons of Art, 1676," 8vo. In the Preface, dated from Walton upon Thames, Aug. 2, 1675, he ſays, "he had formerly ſome thoughts of reviſing his 'Introduction to Aſtrology,' then out of print, and to have corrected it for another edition, with the choiceſt aphoriſms; but, through ſome infirmities of body, and diſcouragement from ſome ungrateful perſons, he had for the preſent laid aſide theſe intentions. To this volume are prefixed three portraits; that of Lilly, between Guido Bonatus and Cardan; with theſe lines:

"Let Envy burſt—Urania's glad to ſee
Her Sons thus join'd in a Troplicity.
To Cardan and to Guido much is due:
But in one Lilly we behold them two."

21. "Ephemeris for 1680[11];" publiſhed in 1679.

On the North ſide of the North chapel of Campden[12] church in Glouceſterſhire, at the Eaſt end of a large altar-tomb, on a blue ſtone tablet fixed in the wall, is the following inſcription, now ſcarcely legible:

[1] "The ſenſeleſs ideot calls me whelp; and makes me ſometimes a taylor's boy, or a ſcrivener's man; when as it is known I was never of any profeſſion but what I now ſtudy. I have both my ears; but whether Wharton, being formerly a needy ſcrivener in Newcaſtle, have one, I know not."

[2] This was turned againſt him, under the title of "William Lilly, Student in Aſtrology, his firſt and preſent Opinion touching Monarchy in theſe Nations; and his Deciſion of the Controverſy between the Normans and the Long Parliament, 1660."

[3] "This pretty brat well fitted the humour of thoſe times, in 1648, when Hamilton, with his wretched army, was upon his march towards England."

[4] "A full Anſwer to a confuſed Mixture of falſe, traiterous, and contradictory Obſervations on the Life and Actions of the late King Charles, publiſhed by William Lilly in July 1651," is one of the "Hiſtorical Diſcourſes" of ſir Edward Walker, 1705, fol.

[5] Re-publiſhed in 1715, under the title of "Mr. William Lilly's true Hiſtory of King James the Firſt and King Charles the Firſt; with ſundry Obſervations, remarkable Paſſages, and many ſecret Tranſactions not till now divulged.

[6] "Reader, had the courteſy of the preſent times deſerved it at my hands, thou hadſt ſeen an explanation of the ſixteen pages following [of extremely neat and curious hieroglyphics]; which, in ænigmatical types, forms, figures, ſhapes, doth perfectly repreſent the future condition of the Engliſh Nation and Commonwealth for many hundred of years to come."

[7] This drew our author into the diſpute with Gataker, which was carried on in his Almanack for 1654.

[8] At the end of this tract is a ſhort addreſs, "To the Citizens of Briſtol, or as many of them as had the misfortune to hear Ralph Farmer prattle in the College Church, 5 November 1651."

[9] "I will endeavour, with captain Wharton and Maſter Harflet, to frame ſome tables, and print them in their next labours."

[10] This produced "Mr. Lillye's Prognoſtications of 1667; predicting the Proſperity, Satiſfaction, and Happineſs of the Engliſh, with their glorious Victories and Succeſſes by Land and Sea; eſpecially in June and July (the Chattam Months). With the miſerable and unheard-of Ruin and Deſolation attending Dutch, Dane, and French, in their Armies and Navies, and a l their Affairs. Predicted for public Satisfaction, and better Information into that horrible Cheat of Judicial Aſtrology, 1667," 4to.

[11] This is merely noticed as being the laſt he publiſhed. Nor are any of the intermediate ones from 1644 here mentioned, except one or two which furniſhed materials for obſervations.

In Charyte's "Rentale" of Leiceſter abbey, after noticing the Matriculus, the record thus proceeds:

"Notandum quod una pars iſtius ville pertinet ad prioriſſam & conventum de Langley, quantûm ad decimas, ratione patronatûs. Alia pars pertinet ad prioratum de Bredon, quantûm ad decimas. Tertia pars pertinet ad matricem eccleſiam de Lokyngton, & illa pars vocatur Baſſet fee. Barry nebulée of ſix, Argent and Sable; Brokeſby.

Argent, a bird Sable; on the ſiniſter point a cinquefoil Sable. See Plate CII.

In the Matriculus of 1220, Diſeworth is deſcribed to be under the patronage of the prioreſs of Langley, by the gift of Benedict de Diſeworth; and ſhe held it in proprios uſus, by the permiſſion of Hugh, then biſhop of Lincoln. Alexander was then the vicar[2].

The church was appropriated to the nunnery of Langley; and the endowment of the vicarage is in the Biſhop's Regiſter at Lincoln.

In 1344, the procurations were, 7*s*. 6¾*d*. The rectory was taxed at 8 marks, and paid 1*s*. for Peterpence.

In 1534-5, the value of the vicarage was £4.

In 1552 the commiſſioners reported that the church contained,

"In primis, a challice.

Itm, three belles, and one of them broken.

Itm, one veſtemente, tow croſſes, one albe cruete.

Itm, a cope."

In 1578, certain tithes in Diſeworth, of the annual rent of £3. 6*s*. 8*d*. were granted for 21 years to John Maye and Brian Jee[3].

In 1638, Mr. Thomas Grey, of Langley, was patron.

In 1650, Diſeworth was returned an impropriation; the rectory worth £66. 13*s*. 4*d*.; the vicarage £8.; and the incumbent as "no preacher."

In 1673, Mr. Thomas Proby held the tithes of Diſeworth on a fee-farm rent of £36. 6*s*. 8*d*.

In 1707 the vicar thus deſcribes the tithes:

"I had not the benefit of any writing that was Mr. Twitty's to inform me of the antient manner of paying ſmall tithes in my pariſh, but took my rule from the word of the pariſhioners themſelves; ſo that I may, and I fear I have wronged the vicarage in ſome particulars, and could not help it. The laſt account that was ſent to the Spiritual Court (for there have been ſeveral, and from my uncertainty or forgetfulneſs, perhaps with ſome variation from one another) was in the form here following:

"Small tithes due in kind, of wool and lamb, pigs, geeſe, bees, apples, and all orchard fruit, and pigeons; eggs of hens, ducks, and other yard-fowls, except geeſe; bees, every tenth ſwarm; of fleeces, lambs, pigs, one paid at ſeven; with this difference, pigs ſhort of ten to be allowed in the following litters; the other to have a diſcount of half-pence for as many as are above ſeven and under ten; the ſheep, old and young, of children under age and living with their parents, and not diſtinct; ſheep ſold or bought in from the markets before clipping-day, halfpence a piece; lambs bought or brought in before the firſt of May, halfpence a piece; ſheep took in from other towns to folding, pay according to the time of their ſtay, or four-pence a ſcore for a month; all lambs of the town pariſhioners yeaned in our lordſhip, to pay whole tithe to the vicar; thoſe yeaned in other lordſhips to be abated a third part of the value, provided there be no fraud in putting the ewes to yean there; ſheep dying after Candlemas, halfpence a piece for a fell; mortuaries have been cuſtomarily paid according to the ſtatute. The vicar has right of common in all commonable places for three cows and a horſe or mare. For marriage by licence 5*s*. is the vicar's due; and by banns, 2*s*. 6*d*. There is a yearly penſion to the vicar from the crown of £1. 17*s*. 8*d*. due every Michaelmas, which is uſually paid at ſome inn in Leiceſter by the receiver of the crown chief-rents ſoon after Michaelmas. The vicar at his firſt coming muſt enter his inſtrument of induction in the Office of Exchequer, which coſts 13*s*. 4*d*. before he is permitted to receive it. The rector of Long Whatton pays a chief-rent to the ſame receiver; whoſe receipts will always ſhew when and where the ſaid penſion may be received.

"Whereas Diſeworth is reputed to be in three pariſhes, every town-pariſhioner, whereſoever his land lies in the lordſhip, is to pay all his ſmall tithes and dues to the vicar. For a churching and chriſtening, 10*d*. is the vicar's due; a burial in the church-yard 1*s*.; in the church 1*s*. 6*d*."

At the incloſure there were allotted 108 acres, 3 roods, 18 perches, valued by the commiſſioners at £106. 7*s*.; but it is now let conſiderably higher.

The EASTER ROLL.

"Three-pence for every dwelling-houſe; communion oblations for man and wife 2½*d*.; every ſervant and ſingle perſon, 16 years of age, 2*d*. Servants one farthing farther at every ſhilling wages. Every yard-land in the pariſh (25 in all) to pay 3*d*. a piece. Cow renewed 1½*d*.; ſtrapper 1*d*.; a foal 1½*d*.

"The foregoing account of tithing, ſubſcribed by me (Iſaac Hoyland) and Robert Mee, and Henry Adkin, churchwardens, was delivered into the Eccleſiaſtical Court in the year 1707.

"There is due to the vicar 8*s*. per annum for tithe herbage of high wood cloſes, being a third part of the whole compoſition, conſtantly paid by the tenants, and due every Michaelmas."

[3] Leaſes in the Augmentation office.

The wages of the Pariſh Clerk of Diſeworth.

"Every ſmoke in the whole town, except the town almſhouſes, to pay 3*d.* every Eaſter; every huſbandry houſe to pay him at Chriſtmas a loaf of bread and a pye to the value of 10*d.*; the loaf 6*d.* and the pye 4*d.* At every Eaſter, a loaf and a cuſtard, to the value of 8*d.*; the loaf 6*d.* the cuſtard 2*d.* For a chriſtening 4*d.*; for a burial with coffin 10*d.*; for a burial without coffin 8*d.*; a burial in the church 1*s.* 4*d.*; for a marriage by licence 1*s.*; for a marriage by banns 6*d.*"

The living is a vicarage, valued at £70. per annum. The Haberdaſhers Company in London poſſeſs the great tithes; which are eſtimated at £120. per annum.

In the king's books it is entered as a diſcharged living; worth, "in pecuniâ numeratâ cum manſ' & aliis proficuis, communibus annis, £4.;" clear yearly value £41. 12*s.* 8*d.*

The epiſcopal procurations are, for the rectory 1*s.* 9*d.*; for the vicarage 10*d.*

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

The white marble ſtone for Jane Lilly, noticed by her grandſon, p. 747, is now entirely illegible; but an epitaph for her ſon has been given in p. 754.

On a monument at the Weſt end:

"Under this monument lie the bodies of Mr. Iſaac Hoyland, late vicar of Diſeworth, and Mary his wife, ſole daughter of Mr. Matthew Trigge, rector of Stretton le Field, by whom he had ſix ſons and two daughters;
but two only, Matthew and Mary, do ſurvive him.
This truly reverend perſon and eminent preacher, after he had faithfully ſerved God and his Church in a long courſe of excellent miniſtry, and given one of the beſt examples, both of paſtoral and private virtues, reſigned his ſoul to God, April 21, 1712, and of his age the 66th.
His wife, a woman of an exemplary prudence, conduct, and goodneſs, died before him Sept. 15, 1708.
To the memory of her parents their daughter Mary hath erected and devoted this ſepulchral monument."

On a mural tablet in the South aile:

"Beneath are depoſited the remains of Caleb Lowdham, A. M.

He was reſident vicar of this pariſh	52	years.
Rector of Stoney Stanton in this county,	42
And domeſtic chaplain to Theophilus and Francis, ſucceſſive earls of Huntingdon,	46

After a life uniformly employed in the exemplary diſcharge of every paſtoral, conjugal, and parental duty, he reſigned his ſoul into the hands of his Redeemer on the 25th day of March 1779, aged 76 years."

Alſo near this place lies interred
the body of Mary Lowdham, the faithful conſort and relict of the above-named Caleb Lowdham.
She died the 19th of December 1778, aged 87.
In teſtimony of their filial duty and affection,
Francis-Glen and Caleb, their two ſurviving and only children,
cauſed this monument to be erected.
Reader, prepare to meet thy God in judgement."

On a flat ſtone in the chancel:

"Mr. Iſaac Hoyland, Maſter of Arts, and phyſician, ſon of Mr. Iſaac Hoyland, miniſter of this town, and of Mrs. Mary Hoyland his wife, was here buried the 28th day of May 1705,
in the 28th year of his age.

In memoriam viri ornatiſſimi, filii chariſſimi.

Great was his worth; of all eſteem'd, belov'd;
Of all lamented when from hence remov'd.
Rich parts—bright virtues—did his active ſoul
Adorn his life, unſtain'd with aught that's foul.
Quick thought, clear judgement, fluency of ſpeech,
Rarely concur in one; he had of each
A happy ſhare; with temper mild and ſweet,
A graceful pers'nage, and deportment meet.
  Ah! Reader, ſpare a ſigh or tear
  For him that was ſo juſtly dear;
  His parents' joy; to 's native place
  An ornament. Such was our caſe,
  As all thought happy; now we pray
  For the more joyful riſing day.

Veni, Domine Jeſu, veni cito."

"Here lieth the body of Mr. John Trigge, younger ſon of Mr. Matthew Trigge, rector of Stretton le Field, and Mrs. Joane his wife.
He died April 22, 1706, in his 51ſt year."

On a ſtone in the South aile:

"Here lies interred the body of Mr. William Baker, who departed this life the 19th day of April 1742,
in the 77th year of his age."

Benefactions.

William Lane, of Long Whatton, left £5. yearly, to be given in bread, monthly, to ſuch poor people as belong to the town; and he alſo left £10. yearly, for teaching poor children of Diſeworth to read and write.

Extracts from the Regiſter, beginning 1656.

The Rev. Mr. Iſaac Hoyland, vicar of Diſeworth, was interred in the pariſh church of Diſeworth, on the 24th day of April, 1712.

John Swan, inducted June 13, 1712, by William Robinſon, Long Whatton.

Richard Cheſlyn, of Langley, eſq. departed this life April 1, in the 83d year of his age, and was interred in his vault at Diſeworth April 8, 1717.

June 18, 1725, William Parker, M. A. inducted to the vicarage of Diſeworth.

Oct. 8, 1726, Caleb Lowdham, A. B. inducted by George Metcalf, vicar of Lockington.

William Sparrow, M. A. inducted July 27, 1779, by T. Beer [3], clerk, who afterwards ſigns as curate.

[1] In 1321, he occurs as a witneſs to a confirmation of the prior of Bredon's grange at Diſeworth.

[2] Elected by the governors of Chriſt's Hoſpital, in July 1791, to the vicarage of Horley, co. Surrey; on which, by the will of the donor, who bequeathed this living to the Haberdaſhers Company, he was obliged to reſign Diſeworth, after having very conſiderably advanced its value. Mr. Sparrow is curate of Walthamſtow, where he keeps a ſchool.

[3] Now rector of Long Whatton.

DISHLEY,

antiently called Dixley and Diſhley Grange, is a ſmall village, about a mile and a half North-weſt from Loughborough, on the turnpike-road from London to Derby. In the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, it is within the deanry of Akeley.

This manor, conſiſting of one hide, in the reign of the Confeſſor, lay waſte; but the lands were held by queen Edid. At the general ſurvey they were farmed by Godvin of the king, under whom, however, they were held in fee; and were then worth forty ſhillings. Sixteen villans and ſixteen ſocmen, with one bordar, had eight ploughs. There were ten acres of meadow; a wood four furlongs ſquare; and two mills paid five ſhillings[1]. Three ploughlands alſo in Diſhley and Hathern, dependant on the manor of Loughborough, contained twenty acres of meadow, and a wood one furlong and a half long, and one broad[2].

Rabellus de Seignevilla was the owner of the principal part of this lordſhip in the reign of William the Second; and all his lands here were afterwards given to the abbey and convent of Garendon by Robert Boſſu their founder.

Ralph de Dixeleia, ſon of Roger, gave to the abbot and convent all his right in the lands at Diſhley; and, for the better ſecurity of the monks, "ſe reddidit ſolemniter T. abbati predicti loci, vovens ſe in habitu religionis in predictâ domo, pro ſalute anime ſue, fore permanſurum[3]."

This grant was alſo ratified by Roger the ſon of Ralph de Dixeleia[4].

The whole property of this lordſhip appears to have been veſted in the abbey of Garendon ſoon after its foundation; except the advowſon of the church (which they purchaſed in 1454); and certain tithes, which were the property of the abbot and convent of St. Mary de Pratis at Leiceſter; in the Rentale of which laſt-mentioned convent Diſhley is thus deſcribed:

" Eccleſie de Dyxley patronus abbas Leyc'; perſona Ricardus, inſtitutus per H. nunc Linc', ſolvens dicto abbati duos marc' ab antiquo. Et percipit eccleſia de Dyxley duas marcas de domo de Gereldon pro quibuſdam decimis ab antiquo. Nota taxationem decimarum per ſententias diffinitivas pro iſtâ pencionè, ſcil' dim' marcam.

Habemus advocationem eccleſie de Dyxley, ex dono fundatoris noſtri; tamen non habemus cartas fundatoris noſtri de eccleſiis de Dyxley, Hathurn, Schepiſheyd, Whatton, Lokyngton, Brakley, & Faringo, niſi ſub hiis terminis: ‘ Et quicquid Oſbertus capellanus de me tenuit in ſocâ de Schepiſhed, & in ſocâ de Halſo; omnes videlicet eccleſias de utrâque ſocâ, cum eccleſiâ de Syreſham, que de parochiâ de Brakley eſſe cognoſcitur, cum terris & decimis, & omnibus pertinentiis ſuis; & decimas denariorum meorum de utrâque ſocâ, & de pannagio.'

Mem', quod primo die Novembris, anno Domini MCCCCLIIII°, nos conceſſimus, & per cartam noſtram confirmavimus, abbati & conventui de Geraldon advocationem eccleſie de Dyxley, reddend' nobis annuatim xiiii s̄. nomine penſionis, ad duos anni terminos, ſcil' ad feſtum Annunciationis beate Marie vii s̄. & ad feſtum Michaelis vii s̄. Et ſi contingat predictam penſionem a retro fore non ſolutam, a parte vel in toto, per unam menſem, &c. tunc abbas de Garadon & conventus ejuſdem loci ſolvent nobis nomine pene iii s̄. iiii d̄.; & ſic totiens quotiens, cum omnibus arraragiis, &c. ut in carta in 11° libro de Chartwary.

Habemus xxvi s̄. viii d̄. per annum pro decimis bladi de totâ terrâ que ſunt Rabelli in villâ de Dyxley, ſicut patet inferius in Garadon[5]."

In the Itinerary of 1280, Diſhley, Thorpe Acre, and Loughborough, anſwered collectively as one vill, as do at preſent the two former.

Diſhley, as a grange to Garendon, had of courſe an abbot's barn. This ſtill remains, and is about 50 yards long, and 15 broad; the roof ſupported by maſſive timbers.

The abbot and convent of Garendon poſſeſſed this lordſhip at the time of their diſſolution; and it was granted by king Henry VIII. in 1540-41; to Thomas Manners earl of Rutland.

In 1564, there were 4 families in Diſhley, and 18 in Thorpe.

The grange of Diſhley, which had been ſeiſed by the queen, was reſtored to Edward earl of Rutland in 1573[6].

No freeholder is noticed here in 1630; but the lordſhip was then the property of George Villiers the ſecond duke of Buckingham.

In 1693, it was purchaſed, with Garendon, by ſir Ambroſe Phillipps; and is now the property of Thomas March-Phillipps, eſq. Diſhley contains about 457 acres, and Thorpe Acre 215 acres.

In 1722, 4 freeholders polled from this pariſh; but in 1775, we find no name mentioned.

The return made to the houſe of commons in 1786, in anſwer to an enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in this pariſh, may be ſeen in vol. I. p. 63.

Mr. Young's remarks on the modes of farming at Quenby and Tilton have been given under thoſe reſpective pariſhes[7]. "The country," he adds, "from Tilton to Leiceſter, and thence to Loughborough, is in general a rich grazing one; and lets on an average at 16*s*. an acre. About Diſhley, farms riſe from £20. to £400. a year; but in general about £80. to £120. The ſoil is various; ſome rich clays; ſome ſandy loams; and others quite ſand. Lets from 14*s*. to 18*s*. an acre. The courſe of crops is, 1. Turnips; 2. Barley; 3. Clover, two years; 4. Wheat: which is an excellent good one.

" Marl, it is apprehended, has been uſed in former times very much, for there are many immenſe pits in every pariſh: the remaining earth about them they now call marl, though it appears more of a red ſandy loam; has not the leaſt efferveſcence with vinegar; nor does it crack at all, or ſparkle in the fire. Some ſmall quantities of it have been uſed by way of experiment, and benefit accrued from it, but not enough to induce any farmer to uſe it in large. I cannot conceive the preſent earth on the ſides of the pits, to be the ſame as was dug out of them, if they were made for manuring; poſſibly real marl was found in theſe pits, and the veins exhauſted; or elſe the farmers carried it on to their land by way of freſh earth, without regarding the quality. Its being ſo very ſandy is a moſt unfavourable ſymptom[1]. The oldeſt man living throughout the neighbourhood never heard of the leaſt tradition of the time when theſe vaſt pits were made[2]; though they have ever been called marl pits, and a general idea current, that marl was dug out of them for manuring. They muſt be extremely antient; for there remains not the leaſt trace of ſuch huſbandry in any part of the country. They could not be dug for either chalk, gravel, clay, or lime-ſtone, as there are none in the pits. We muſt rank them among the pits of old time, which Fitzherbert, in Henry the Seventh's reign, ſpeaks of in his Book of Huſbandry. In what degree agriculture flouriſhed while the kingdom was the prey of a pack of rapacious plundering barons, we do not exactly know, but not probably to the perfection of marling: thoſe pits muſt therefore have been much more antient.

“ The plaſhing method of fencing is here common, but not done in the moſt perfect way. The new incloſures are all formed by quick, planted on the level ground, and a ditch by the ſide of it; the earth out of which is laid upon a ridge on the brow of it, and then a poſt and double rails are ſet on both ſides; the whole occupying from 11 to 13 feet of ground in width: the loſs of land in this method is not only great, but the expence is very high. I ſhould apprehend, by means of deep ditches both evils might be remedied; but certainly a cheaper fence might be made, and at a leſs expence of reparation.

“ The beſt graſs-land lets at 30*s.*: they mow moſt of it. The breed of cattle here is all the long-horned: a cow gives on an average 6 or 7 gallons of milk per day; and in annual product, about £5. 10*s.*; the winter food is here hay, ſome give it in the yard, others in the field. Calves for rearing do not ſuck at all. The value of an oxhide £2. on an average. Hogs fat to 20 ſcore.

“ In their tillage they reckon 10 horſes neceſſary to 100 acres of arable land; they uſe from 4 to 7 in a plough; and do on an average better than half an acre a day. This woeful ſyſtem on ſuch light land beats, I think, any management I have yet met with. Had I an eſtate here, I think I would make it an article in my leaſes, that every farmer ſhould plough with never leſs than all his teams in one plough, let the number be what it might. They do not ſtir above ſix inches deep: the price per acre 7*s.* 6*d.* They reckon the annual expence per horſe at £10. Their ſtubbles they break up in March after ſowing. Only ſwing-ploughs uſed here.

“ In the ſtocking farms they reckon that £550. is neceſſary to ſtock one of £150. a year.

“ Land ſells at 30 years purchaſe.

“ Poor rates in the villages up to 3*s.* in the pound; but 20 years ago not 1*s.* In market-towns they riſe to 7 and 8*s.* The employment is ſpinning worſted for the ſtocking weavers.—All drink tea; thoſe that are three fourths maintained by the pariſh, have it twice a day. “ Very few leaſes granted.

[1] Mr. Marſhall, in his account of the Midland Diſtrict, ſays, “ The red earth which has been ſet upon the lands of this diſtrict in great abundance, as marl, is much of it in a manner deſtitute of calcareous matter; and, of courſe, cannot with propriety be claſſed among marls. Nevertheleſs, a red foſſil is found in ſome parts of the diſtrict, which contains a proportion of calcareous matter. The marl of Croxall (in part, of a ſtonelike or ſlaty contexture, and of a light red colour) is the richeſt in calcareoſity; 100 grains of it affording 30 grains of calcareous matter, and 70 grains of fine impalpable redbark like powder. This marl is ſingularly tenacious of its calcareous matter, diſſolving remarkably ſlowly. A hundred grains, roughly pounded, was 24 hours in diſſolving; and another hundred, though pulveriſed to mere duſt, continued to efferveſce 12 hours, notwithſtanding it was firſt ſaturated with water, and afterwards ſhook repeatedly. The Bredon ſtone, roughly pounded, diſſolved in half the time, notwithſtanding its extreme hardneſs. And a marl of Elford (in colour and contexture various, but reſembling thoſe of the Croxall marl) affords near twenty grains. Yet the marl of Barton, on the oppoſite ſide of the Trent, though ſomewhat of a ſimilar contexture, but of a darker and more duſky colour, is in a manner deſtitute of calcareoſity; 100 grains of it yielding little more than one grain, not two grains, of calcareous matter. Nevertheleſs, the pit, from which I took the ſpecimen under analyſis, is an immenſe excavation, from which many loads have been taken. And the marls of this neighbourhood (which moſtly differ in appearance from thoſe deſcribed, having generally that of a blood-red clay, interlayered, and ſometimes intermingled, with a white gritty ſubſtance) are equally poor in calcareoſity. 100 grains of the marl of Statfold (which I believe may be taken as a fair ſpecimen of the red clays of this quarter of the diſtrict) afford little more than two grains of calcareous matter, lodged, not in the ſubſtance of the clay, but in its natural cracks or fiſſures. Yet this is ſaid to be famous marl; and, from the pits which now appear, has been laid on in great abundance. I do not mean to intimate, that theſe clays are altogether deſtitute of fertilizing properties, on their firſt application. It is not likely that the large pits, which abound in almoſt every part of the diſtrict, and which muſt have been formed at a very great expence, ſhould have been dug, without their contents being productive of ſome evidently, or at leaſt apparently, good effect on the lands on which they have been ſpread. I confeſs, however, that this is but conjecture; and it may be that, the good effect of the marls firſt deſcribed being experienced, the faſhion was ſet: and, the diſtinguiſhing quality being unknown, or not attended to, marls and clays were indiſcriminately uſed. The moſt intereſting fact that can be brought home reſpecting theſe clay-pits is, that they were made chiefly by the laſt generation; and that the preſent generation are experiencing, or believing that they experience, an evil effect ariſing from their produce; the fertilizing quality of which (if it ever exiſted) being now ſpent, the dead clay remains a clog to the native ſoil, rendering it tenacious, and difficult to work. This is at leaſt the opinion of intelligent profeſſional men, and the idea, I believe, is founded in fact. Lime is found to do away this evil effect; and this may account for the ſpirit of liming in the preſent generation.” Rural Oeconomy of the Midland Counties, vol. I. p. 292.

[2] “ Mr. Hill, of Hall End, wiſhing to improve a meadow, ſet on a variety of manures, and among the reſt ſome white earth which he found, by accident, in a large excavation on his farm; no doubt, in former times a marl-pit. The jam or bed of this pit riſes to within 18 inches of the ſurface; and Mr. Hill is following it 10 or 12 feet deep; and probably not at the bottom. A ſpecimen I took from the middle of the jam, as well as that which I took off the graſs, is ſtrongly calcareous. Extraordinary, that a bed of grey marl ſhould occur in a country in which nothing but red earths, in any degree calcareous, ſhould be found. It is obſervable, however, that North Warwickſhire is divided from this diſtrict by the valley, through which the Anker runs; and that they may, in the general rupture, have been brought from diſtant ſituations, or have been torn from different ſtrata. And it ſeems more extraordinary, that a mine of calcareous earth, which has evidently been known in ages paſt, ſhould have been ſo entirely neglected, and ſo effectually forgot, that, had it not been for the ſpirit of experimenting, it might have lain neglected for ages to come. There are evident veſtiges of a pit; an immenſe excavation (with buſhes and even trees growing in its bottom) containing half an acre or an acre of ground, which appears to have been all worked over, 10 or 12 feet deep; and on one ſide 15 or 20. It is highly probable, that, if proper ſearch were made, other beds of a ſimilar nature might be found in North Warwickſhire.” Marſhall, ibid. vol. II. p. 292.

"Mr. Bakewell, of Diſhley, one of the moſt conſiderable farmers in this country, has in ſo many inſtances improved on the huſbandry of his neighbours, that he merits particular notice.

"His breed of cattle is famous throughout the kingdom; and he has lately ſent many to Ireland. He has in this part of his buſineſs many ideas which I believe are perfectly new, or that have hitherto been totally neglected. The principal is to gain the beaſt, whether ſheep or cow, that will weigh moſt in the moſt valuable joints:—there is a great difference between an ox of 50 ſtone, carrying 30 in roaſting pieces, and 20 in coarſe boiling ones—and another carrying 30 in the latter, and 20 in the former. And at the ſame time that he gains the ſhape, that is of the greateſt value in the ſmalleſt compaſs; he aſſerts, from long experience, that he gains a breed much hardier and eaſier fed than any others. Theſe ideas he applies equally to ſheep and oxen.

"In the breed of the latter, the old notion was, that where you had much and large bones, there was plenty of room to lay fleſh on; and accordingly the graziers were eager to buy the largeſt boned cattle. This whole ſyſtem Mr. Bakewell has proved to be an utter miſtake. He aſſerts, the ſmaller the bones, the truer will be the make of the beaſt—the quicker ſhe will fat—and her weight, we may eaſily conceive, will have a larger proportion of valuable meat: fleſh, not bone, is the butcher's object. Mr. Bakewell admits that a large boned beaſt may be made a large fat beaſt, and that he may come to a great weight; but juſtly obſerves, that this is no part of the profitable enquiry; for ſtating ſuch a ſimple propoſition, without at the ſame time ſhewing the expence of covering thoſe bones with fleſh, is offering no ſatisfactory argument. The only object of real importance is the proportion of graſs to value. I have 20 acres. Which will pay me for thoſe acres beſt, large or ſmall boned cattle? The latter fat ſo much quicker, and more profitably in the joints of value, that the query is anſwered in their favour from long and attentive experience.

"Among other breeds of cattle the Lincolnſhire and the Holderneſs are very large, but their ſize lies in their bones: they may be fattened to great loſs to the grazier; nor can they ever return ſo much for a given quantity of graſs as the ſmall-boned long-horned kind. The breed which Mr. Bakewell has fixed on as the beſt in England is the Lancaſhire; and he thinks he has improved it much, in bringing the carcaſs of the beaſt into a truer mould, and particularly by making them broader over their backs. The ſhape which ſhould be the criterion of a cow, a bull, or an ox, and alſo of a ſheep, is that of an hogſhead or a firkin; truly circular, with ſmall and as ſhort legs as poſſible, upon the plain principle that the value lies in the barrel, not in the legs. All breeds, the backs of which riſe in the leaſt ridge, are bad. I meaſured two or three cows, two feet three inches flat acroſs their back from hip to hip, and their legs remarkably ſhort.

"Mr. Bakewell has now a bull of his own breed, which he calls Twopenny, which leaps cows at £5. 5*s*. a cow. This is carrying the breed of horned cattle to wonderful perfection. He is a very fine bull, moſt truly made, according to the principles laid down above. He has many others got by him, which he lets for the ſeaſon, but rarely ſells any. He would not take £200. for Twopenny. He has ſeveral cows which he keeps for breeding, that he would not ſell at 30 guineas apiece. Another particularity is the amazing gentleneſs in which he brings up theſe animals. All his bulls ſtand ſtill in the field to be examined. The way of driving them from one field to another, or home, is by a little ſwiſh: he or his men walk by their ſide, and guide them with the ſtick wherever they pleaſe; and they are accuſtomed to this method from being calves. A lad, with a ſtick three feet long and as big as his finger, will conduct a bull away from other bulls and his cows from one end of the farm to the other. All this gentleneſs is merely the effect of management; and the miſchief often done by bulls is undoubtedly owing to practices very contrary, or to a total neglect.

"The general order in which Mr. Bakewell keeps his cattle is pleaſing; all are fat as bears; and this is a circumſtance which he inſiſts is owing to the excellence of the breed. His land is no better than his neighbours, at the ſame time that it carries a far greater proportion of ſtock; as I ſhall ſhew by and by. The ſmall quantity, and the inferior quality, in food that will keep a beaſt, perfectly well made, of good order, is ſurprizing: ſuch an animal will grow fat in the ſame paſture that would ſtarve an ill-made, great-boned one.

"In the breed of his ſheep Mr. Bakewell is as curious, and I think, if any difference, with greater ſucceſs than in his horned cattle: for better made animals cannot be ſeen than his rams and ewes; their bodies are as true barrels as could be ſeen[*]; round, broad backs; and the legs not above ſix inches long: and a moſt unuſual proof of kindly fattening, is their feeling quite fat juſt within their fore legs on the ribs, a point in which ſheep are never examined in common, from common breeds never carrying any fat there. In his breed of ſheep he proceeds exactly on the ſame principle as with oxen; the fatting in the valuable parts of the body; and the living on much poorer food than other ſorts. He has found from various experience in many parts of the kingdom, as well as upon his own farm, that no land is too bad for a good breed of cattle, and particularly ſheep. It may not be proper for large ſtock, that is large-boned ſtock, but undoubtedly more proper for a valuable well-made ſheep than the uſual wretched ſorts found in moſt parts of England on poor ſoils—ſuch as the Moor-ſheep—the Welch ones—and the Norfolks. And he would hazard any moderate ſtake, that his own breed, each ſheep of which is worth ſeveral of thoſe poor ſorts, would do better on thoſe poor ſoils than the ſtock generally found on them: a good and true ſhape having been found the ſtrongeſt indication of hardineſs, and what the graziers call a kindly ſheep, one that has always an inclination to feed.

"He has an experiment to prove the hardineſs of his breed which deſerves notice. He has five or ſix ewes that have gone conſtantly in the highways ſince May-day, and have never been in the fields: the roads are narrow, and the food very bare; they are in excellent order, and nearly fat; which proves in the ſtrongeſt manner the excellence of the breed. And other circumſtance of a peculiar nature is his flock of ewes, that have reared two lambs, being quite fat in the firſt week of July; an inſtance hardly to be paralleled.

"The breed is originally Lincolnſhire; but Mr. Bakewell thinks, and very juſtly, that he has much improved it. The grand profit, as I before obſerved, is from the ſame food going ſo much farther in feeding theſe than any others; not, however, that Mr. Bakewell's breed is ſmall; on the contrary, it is as weighty as nine tenths of the kingdom; for he ſells fat wethers at three years and an half old at £2. a head. Other collateral circumſtances of importance are, the wool being equal to any other; and the ſheep ſtanding the fold better. He ſells no tups, but lets them at from five to 30 guineas for the ſeaſon.

"Relative to the rot in ſheep, Mr. Bakewell has

[*] The following is an account of two ſheep of Mr. Bakewell's, meaſured in the wool.

"I this day meaſured Mr. Bakewell's three years old ram, and found him as follows:

His girt, — —	5	10
His height, — —	2	5
His collar broad at ear tips, —	1	4
Broad over his ſhoulders, —	1	11½
Ditto over his ribs, —	1	10½
Ditto his hips, —	1	9½

"This day I meaſured a two year old barren ewe:

	Feet.	Inches.

I would have meaſured her breadth, but for a fall of ſnow.

attended more to it than moſt men in England; he is extremely clear, from long attention, that this diſorder is owing ſolely to floods—never to land being wet, only from rains which do not flow, nor from ſprings that riſe. He conjectures, that the young graſs which ſprings in conſequence of a flood, is of ſo flaſhy a nature, that it occaſions this common complaint. But whether this idea is juſt or not, ſtill he is clear in his facts, that floods (in whatever manner they act) are the cauſe. Perhaps the moſt curious experiment ever made on the rot in ſheep, is what he has frequently practiſed: when particular parcels of his beſt bred ſheep are paſt ſervice, he fats them for the butcher; and, to be ſure that they ſhall be killed, and not go into other hands, he rots them before he ſells; which, from long experience, he can do at pleaſure. It is only to flow a paſture or meadow in ſummer, and it inevitably rots all the ſheep that feed on it the following autumn. After the middle of May, water flowing over land is certain to cauſe it to rot, whatever be the ſoil. He has acted thus with ſeveral of his fields, which without that management would never affect a ſheep in the leaſt: the water may flow with impunity all winter, and even to the end of April, but after that the above effect is ſure to take place. Springs he aſſerts to be no cauſe of rotting, nor yet the graſs which riſes in conſequence, unleſs they flow: nor is it ever owing to the ground being very wet from heavy rains, unleſs the water flows. This theory of the rot upon the whole appears ſatisfactory; and that part of it which is the certain reſult of experience cannot be diſputed.

"In the breed of ſtallions for getting cart-horſes, Mr. Bakewell is alſo very attentive: he has thoſe at preſent that he lets at from 25 to 150 guineas the ſeaſon. He conceives the true make of a cart-horſe to be nearly that deſcribed above for an ox—thick and ſhort bodies, and very ſhort legs. He makes them all particularly gentle; and apprehends that bad drawing horſes can be owing to nothing but bad management. He has one ſtallion that leaps at five guineas a mare.

"Mr. Bakewell is remarkably attentive to the point of wintering his cattle; all his horned beaſts are tied up in open or other ſheds all winter through, from November till the end of March, feeding them, according to their kind, with ſtraw, turnips, or hay; all the lean beaſts have ſtraw alone: he never litters them, on account of making the ſtraw go as far as poſſible—that it may be eaten up perfectly clean. Young cattle, that require to be kept quite in a thriving ſtate, have turnips; and alſo fattening ones; and late in the ſpring, when turnips are gone, hay is wholly their ſubſtitute.

"The conveniencies for tying up beaſts, which Mr. Bakewell has built at his own expence, are a remarkable inſtance of ſpirited huſbandry; he has formed ſuch numbers of ſtalls for them, by building new ſheds, and converting old barns and other places into ſtandings for cows, that he has more than once wintered 170 beaſts of all ſorts, and all in the houſe.

"The floors on which the beaſts ſtand are paved, and 6 or 8 inches higher than the level of the yard: they are juſt broad enough for a beaſt to ſtand on with difficulty; the conſequence of which is, that his dung falls beyond his ſtanding, and on the lower pavement; and when he lays down, he draws himſelf up on the higher pavement, and is clear of it. By this means they are kept quite clean without litter; and the men, who are employed on purpoſe, keep the whole conſtantly ſwept down, and barrow the dung into the area of the yard, that is ſurrounded by the ſheds, and then pile up the dung in a ſquare clamp.

"By uſing no ſtraw in litter, he makes it go ſo far in wintering cattle, that he much reduces the expence of winter-feeding them; and this has occaſioned his adopting a new ſyſtem in the management of his horned cattle. He uſed to draw with teams of oxen; and found that he muſt keep double the number worked, to have, in the common manner, one ſet coming into work, and another going out; and then he had his cows bulled at two years old, conſequently they were wintered on hay when three years old. But now he has changed his ſyſtem; he draws all with cows; they live on ſtraw at three years old, when they are bulled, and work till four years old; hence one winter at hay is changed to two at ſtraw; which, from Mr. Bakewell's management, is a great ſaving, and the work all gained at the ſame time. And let me obſerve farther, that the calves bred from a cow riſing from three to four, muſt far exceed thoſe from cows riſing from two to three: the latter age is too early to breed, both for the calf and the dam. I ſaw the teams of cows at work, and they were to the full as handy as oxen; and Mr. Bakewell finds that they draw juſt as well as oxen of the ſame ſize. He would not have taken £120. for one of his teams of ſix cows.

"He has water in ciſterns in his farm-yards, and all the beaſts are let looſe to drink once a day, except thoſe on turnips, which do not want it.

"He prefers, in the raiſing of manure, the dung ariſing from cattle that eat a given quantity of ſtraw, to any manure to be gained from ſuch quantity of ſtraw by littering; inſomuch, that if he had more ſtraw than he could eat, he would not litter with it, but take in his neighbours' cattle to eat it for nothing; and would give them the ſame attendance as his own. This is a particular idea, which may very probably be juſt; but experiment alone can prove it.

"Mr. Bakewell very juſtly conſiders the raiſing dung as one of the moſt important objects of huſbandry; and for this purpoſe his vaſt ſtock of cattle is of noble aſſiſtance. The proportion of his ſtock to his land will ſhew, not only the excellence of his management, but alſo the hardineſs of his breed; for no tender cattle could be kept in ſuch quantities. His farm in all conſiſts of about 440 acres, 110 of which are arable, and the reſt graſs. He keeps 60 horſes, 400 large ſheep, and 150 beaſts of all ſorts; and yet he has generally about 15 acres of wheat, and 25 of ſpring corn; the turnips not more than 30 acres. If the degree of fatneſs, in which he keeps all theſe cattle, be conſidered, and that he buys neither ſtraw nor hay, it muſt at once appear that he keeps a larger ſtock on a given number of acres than moſt men in England: the ſtrongeſt proof of all others of the excellence of his huſbandry.

"He makes his turnips go as far as poſſible, by carting every one to his ſtalls; in which manner, one acre goes as far as three; his ſtraw, I before obſerved, he makes the very moſt of, by giving it all to his lean beaſts, not in litter—or as food in quantities at a time; but keeps the cattle hungry enough to make them eat clean, giving but a ſmall quantity at a time.

"Of his hay he is alſo very choice; and the means he has taken to command as large a quantity as poſſible, are perhaps to be reckoned amongſt the rareſt inſtances of ſpirited huſbandry ever met with among the common farmers of England. It is that of watering his meadows that lie along a ſmall brook which runs through one part of his farm. This improvement was begun by his father, now living, and carried on and finiſhed by himſelf.

"Theſe meadows, amounting from 60 to 80 acres, were all, like the reſt of the country, in ridge and furrow, over-run with ant-hills, and disfigured by various inequalities of ſurface. They were all ploughed up; kept clean of weeds for a crop or two; tilled in a very perfect manner, and laid down again to graſs perfectly level, with a view to improvement by water. This operation is a proof that unlevel paſtures may be ploughed down without any injury by burying good land and bringing up bad, contrary to the common vulgar notion. As ſoon as this work was done, he cleanſed the brook in a manner peculiar to himſelf; his deſign was to keep the banks always clean and neat, and the water every where of an equal depth: and this he did, and continued to do, when wanted, by throwing the ſand and earth, driven in heaps and ridges by the ſtream, into the holes formed by it; never throwing any on to the banks; by which method the water is always kept to a level, with half the expence of the common manner of throwing the earth out, which enlarges the holes, but fills up none. When this point was gained, the next buſineſs was to examine every where the courſes of the ditches. All in a proper direction were much deepened and enlarged, for conveying the water to the meadows that do not join the brook, and others done in the ſame manner for taking the water away after it had flowed over the land. Beſides theſe, ſeveral new cuts were found neceſſary to be made, near as large as the brook itſelf: and, ſtrange to tell, not a few to prevent the water running over the meadows of his neighbours. They totally diſapprove the plan; and have inſiſted on all proper precautions being taken, by making cuts and raiſing mounds for the water, that none of it may ruin them; which is the idea they have of it, notwithſtanding many years experience of its amazing efficacy in the fields of Mr. Bakewell.

"Beſides all theſe cuts and ditches, numerous ſluices are ſubſtantially erected, at his own expence, to ſtop the water, and make it overflow at pleaſure; and cloſe to each a ſmall brick houſe, for holding the doors, boards, bolts, &c. when not in uſe; the whole perfectly well executed.

"By means of all theſe works he floats, at pleaſure, from 60 to 80 acres of meadow, and finds the improvement of the moſt undoubted kind, fully anſwering an annual manuring of any other ſort. Fine level crops of hay are now the view, inſtead of ridges, furrows, hills, holes, thiſtles, and other trumpery. Upon the whole, this ſyſtem of watering is not only executed with ſpirit, but much exceeds any thing of the kind I have yet ſeen in the hands of landlords themſelves. Our farmer has expended large ſums in theſe uncommon undertakings—he richly merits the enjoyment of their profit.

"In another part of huſbandry Mr. Bakewell is extremely attentive; which is, the raiſing good fences. He has ſubdivided ſeveral of his fields, and always does it by planting regular rows of white thorn on one ſide of a ditch, the earth of which is laid up in the manner of the country on a narrow ridge on the oppoſite ſide; and then a poſt and double rail on each ſide the whole; which is certainly doing it moſt completely. But what he is more minute in than any farmer I ever ſaw, is the keeping his quicks clean: they all grow in the middle of a well-dug ſlip of land, with not a weed to be found in them. This conduct has ſo good an effect, that his thorns, at three or four years old, much exceed thoſe of the farmers in general at twice that age. In all his old fences he mends gaps and decayed places in the ſame manner, clearing away all rubbiſh, planting new quick, and ſecuring it with a ditch, and a double rail and poſt.

"As the principal object of Mr. Bakewell's attention was the keeping great ſtocks of cattle, he has found it neceſſary to lay down much arable land to graſs. I walked over ſeveral of the fields, and found the herbage of an excellent ſort, with a perfect carpeting of white clover. I enquired into his method of laying, and found it not common. He ſows two crops of turnips ſucceſſively, for the purpoſe of making the land as clean as poſſible from weeds; then, with the barley that follows, he ſows 10lb. common broad clover and half a buſhel ray-graſs for the future meadow. I was much ſtruck with this, which appeared to me extreme bad huſbandry, and enquired into the effect. The firſt year he has a very fine crop of clover in the common manner; the ſpring following he manures it richly with very rotten dung, and always finds that half the broad clover diſappears that year; the third year it is quite gone; and the paſture ever after is not to be known from the beſt common meadows; the herbage conſiſting of good graſſes, and a thick covering of wild white clover.

"Mr. Bakewell has compared this method with ſowing white clover and trefoile, inſtead of the broad ſort, and finds that the effect after the ſecond year is exactly the ſame; but the two firſt give him a much greater profit under the common clover than the white.

"I ſhall obſerve upon this ſyſtem, that the peculiarity conſiſts in the broad clover being immediately ſucceeded by white honey-ſuckle and natural graſſes of a good ſort. With the general management it is ſucceeded by couch, twitch, or other trumpery, in at leaſt as great plenty as by wild clover; and this, I apprehend, is owing to the preparation of the land. It certainly would be the ſame with Mr. Bakewell, if he did not previouſly make the land as clear as a garden. It is therefore a compendious eaſy way, which on certain ſoils and with excellent management anſwers well; but, in hands that will not give ſuch attention to it, I am perſuaded, it would be a moſt pernicious practice. I well remember it being the method in ſome parts between York and Beverley; and the graſs left are ſtraggling plants of clover, with great plenty of couch and weeds.

"Another part of rural œconomy, of very great importance to every farmer, is the number of horſes he uſes in a plough. Horſes are kept at ſuch an expence, that the uſing no more than neceſſary is one of the moſt material concerns of the farmer. The general practice of this neighbourhood is, to uſe from four to ſeven in a plough, and ſtir little more than half an acre a day; never more than three roods, and this on a ſandy loam: on the contrary, Mr. Bakewell never uſes more than two in a plough, and without any driver. He has nothing but Rotheram ploughs; they anſwer perfectly well; and do an acre a day with eaſe: this, at a very moderate computation, is doing four times the work of his neighbours, with the ſame ſtrength. But not one of them has yet followed him in this obvious improvement.

"Mr. Bakewell has generally a ſmall field of potatoes, which he plants after the plough, and keeps perfectly clean of weeds. He finds them to anſwer greatly. This year he has a crop of the great Scotch cabbage, for the firſt time, planted in June; they appear thriving and healthy, and will, I doubt not, anſwer perfectly well. He propoſes to extend the culture for ſaving hay, by which means he ſhall be able to keep larger ſtocks of cattle.

"For feeding colts, or any horſes that run out, he has a contrivance which merits notice. It is a ſmall houſe on four wheels for giving hay and oats.

"The wheels are 7½ inches diameter: the coſt complete £3. 10s. Four horſes eat hay and oats in it at once, for the four projections from the center are equal: it is moved every day, that they may not poach and tread the graſs, ever the effect of a fixed rack and manger, or houſe. In dry times it may be ſet on wet land, and in wet times on dry land. Another very great uſe is, when the teams go double journeys at plough, they are baited in the field very handily without bringing home.

"Mr. Bakewell is particularly curious in providing proper watering-places for his paſtures; and in this he has a contrivance which I do not remember to have ſeen practiſed by any body elſe. He has from experience obſerved many inconveniences to attend ponds in which the cattle are allowed to go in and lie down; for in hot weather they not only make the water muddy, but colts going in when quite hot and lying down are apt to catch very dangerous colds. To prevent this, he firſt railed off the ponds, leaving them only room to come with their heads at the water; but this he has lately changed to a better way, which is to let the watering contain no more water at a time than a ſmall trough would hold.

"I cannot conclude theſe obſervations on this very ſpirited farmer's undertakings, without expreſſing the ſatisfaction I felt at viewing them. No where have I ſeen works that do their author greater honour; they are not the effect of a rich landlord's determining to be a good farmer on his own land, but the honeſt and truly meritorious endeavours of a tenant performing great and expenſive works on the property of another. It is true, he is fortunate in a generous and conſiderate landlord; and much do I wiſh that ſuch excellent farmers may always meet with the ſame encouragement. A truly good farmer connot be too much favoured; a bad one cannot have his rent raiſed too high. Let me exhort the farmers of this kingdom in general, to take Mr. Bakewell as a pattern in many points of great importance; they will find their account in it, and the kingdom in general be benefited not a little.—From Diſhley to Nottingham the land is chiefly incloſed and good; and lets at about 16*s.* on an average[1]."

Mr. Marſhall, in his "Rural Oeconomy of the Midland Counties," has noticed this truly public-ſpirited farmer with peculiar marks of diſtinction.

"Mr. Bakewell of Diſhley ſtands firſt in this quarter of the kingdom, as an improver of graſs land by watering. Formerly, a ſuite of meadows, lying by the banks of the Soar, received conſiderable benefit from the water of the river being judiciouſly ſpread over them in the times of the floods. But now, not only theſe meadows, but near 100 acres, I believe, of higher land, lying entirely out of the way of natural floods, are watered on this modern principle. Mr. Bakewell, like a man of experience in buſineſs, before he ſet about this great work, ſtudied the art on the principal ſcene of practice, the Weſt of England; where he ſpent ſome days with the ingenious Mr. Boſwell, who ſome years ago publiſhed a treatiſe on the ſubject.

"The great ſtroke of management in this department of Mr. Bakewell's practice, which marks his genius in ſtrong characters, is that of diverting to his purpoſe a rivulet, or ſmall brook, whoſe natural channel ſkirts the fartheſt boundary of his farm; falling, with a conſiderable deſcent, down a narrow valley; in which its utility, as a ſource of improvement to land, was confined. This rivulet is therefore turned at the higheſt place that could be commanded, and carried, in the canal manner, round the point of a ſwell, which lies between its natural bed and the farmery; by the execution of this admirable thought, not only commanding the ſkirts of the hill as a ſite of improvement by watering; but ſupplying, by this artificial brook, the houſe and farm offices with water; filling from it a drinking pool for horſes and cattle; and converting it to a multitude of other purpoſes; one of which is too valuable to be paſſed without diſtinction. Mr. Bakewell, three years ago, was endeavouring to invent a flat-bottomed boat, or barge, to navigate his turneps from the field to the cattle-ſheds; but, finding this not eaſily practicable, his great mind ſtruck out, or rather caught, the beautifully ſimple idea of launching the turneps themſelves into the water, and letting them float down ſingly with the current! "We throw them in, and bid them meet us at the Barn End!" where he is now (October 1789) contriving a reſervoir or dry ditch for them to ſail into; with a grate at the bottom to let out the water, but retaining the turneps; which will there be laid up, clean waſhed, and freight free, as a ſupply in froſty weather! Mr. Bakewell's improvements, in this department of rural affairs, are not only extenſive, but high; and are rendered more ſtriking, by "proof pieces," (a good term for experimental patches) left in each ſite of improvement. Mr. Bakewell is, in truth, a maſter in the art; and Diſhley, at preſent a ſchool in which it might be ſtudied with ſingular advantage[2]."

On the ſubject of live ſtock, Mr. Marſhall ſays, "The breed of horſes in the midland diſtrict is allowed to be on the decline. Its breed of cattle are probably at its height; and its ſheep at preſent are ſo near perfection, that it is not probable they ſhould hereafter receive much improvement. Beſide, the grand luminary of the art has paſſed the meridian, and, though at preſent in full ſplendor, is verging towards the horizon[3]. It muſt not, however, be underſtood, by thoſe who are not locally acquainted with this diſtrict, that Mr. Bakewell, though he has been long, and moſt deſervedly, conſidered as the principal promoter of the art of breeding, and has for ſome time taken the lead, is the only man of diſtinguiſhed merit in this department of rural affairs in the diſtrict under ſurvey. It abounds, and has for many years abounded, with intelligent and ſpirited breeders. I could mention ſome fifteen or twenty men of repute, and moſt of them men of conſiderable property, who are in the ſame department, and ſeveral of them eminent for their breeds of ſtock. Nevertheleſs it muſt be and is acknowledged, that Mr. Bakewell is at the head of this department[4]."

In another place Mr. Marſhall obſerves, "The handſomeſt horſe I have ſeen of this breed (the Leiceſterſhire black cart-horſe), and perhaps the moſt picturable horſe of this kind ever bred in the iſland, was a ſtallion of Mr. Bakewell, named K. He was, in reality, the fancied war-horſe of the German painters; who, in the luxuriance of imagination, never perhaps excelled the natural grandeur of this horſe. A man of moderate ſize ſeemed to ſhrink under his fore-end, which roſe ſo perfectly upright, that his ears ſtood (as Mr. Bakewell ſays every horſe's ears ought to ſtand) perpendicularly over his fore-feet. It may be ſaid, with little latitude, that in grandeur and ſymmetry of form, viewed as a picturable object, he exceeded as far the horſe which this ſuperior breeder had the honour of ſhewing to his Majeſty, and which was afterwards ſhewn publicly ſome months in London, as that horſe does the meaneſt of the breed. Nor was his form deficient in utility. He died in 1785, at the age of 19 years[5]."

Mr. Marſhall pays Mr. Bakewell ſome merited encomiums as a breeder of horned cattle and ſheep; and enumerates the following reſpectable ram-breeders as leading men in the midland diſtrict, favourers of the new Leiceſterſhire or Diſhley breed: "Mr. Stubbins of Holm; Mr. Paget of Ibſtock; Mr. Breedon of Ruddington; Mr. Stone of Quorndon; Mr. Walker of Woolſthorp; Mr. Bettiſon of Holme; Mr. White of Hoton; Mr. Knowles of Naileſton; Mr. Deverel of Clapton; Mr. Princep of Croxall; Mr. Burgeſs of Hugglefcote; Mr. Green of Normanton; Mr. Robinſon near Welford; Mr. Moor of Thorpe; Mr. Aſtley of Oddeſton; and Mr. Henton of Hoby." "Had the Diſhley ſheep," he ſays, "twenty years ago, been judiciouſly diſtributed over the diſtrict, and had been on all occaſions permitted to ſpeak for themſelves, it appears to me probable that there would ſcarcely have been a ſheep of any other breed now left in the midland diſtrict."

Another writer thus deſcribes Diſhley in June 1790: "We were ſhewn the different apartments in the farm, the grounds, and the ſtock; and every thing explained to meet our wiſhes with eaſe and addreſs. The fine ſheep, in number about 20, were under a clean ſhed in the grounds. A ſervant, within the barn where they are placed to be ſhewn ſeparately, hands them from the barn-door, one at a time, to another ſervant within, who ſeems exceedingly expert at ſhewing to advantage: he has the adroitneſs of a good horſe-dealer, but much leſs of his vanity. I ſat contentedly upon a bench making a few remarks, while my friends, ſome very reſpectable graziers, were engaged in handling the ſheep where quality was or ſhould have been. Although I had no concern in the examination, I diſcovered alertneſs and ſkill in the ſervant; and could but admire, with ſome degree of aſtoniſhment, the amazing breadth of ſome of their backs, the ſmallneſs of their heads, and lightneſs of their bones. They are kept as clean as a race-horſe, and I ſmiled when I was told that they, like thoſe fleet animals, wore at times body-cloaths. The three laſt ſhewn, I was told (not by Mr. Bakewell's people), were likely to make, this ſeaſon, by their gets, 3000 guineas.

"Mr. Bakewell, I find, reſpects the company of men of judgement, and is himſelf happy in ſhewing his great improvements on his farm. He is frequently viſited by the firſt characters in the kingdom, and aſſuredly his management and improvements here are deſerving the notice of even common obſervers. I was pleaſed, on leaving the ſhed, to be ſhewn the long-famed old cow, which ſtood like a venerable ruin on props of magnificent architecture, bulging fine limbs, enfeebled with old age. I will not attempt to deſcribe what ſhe has been; only in general terms obſerve, that ſhe is now 25 years old, and has been eſteemed, by judges, one of the fineſt animals of that ſpecies ever bred. She now lives in an aſylum: a meadow full of keep, ſet apart to ſooth her exit.

She eats but little, and yet retains upon her back, which is now a yard over, broad cuſhions of fat. She ſeldom moves: ſhe ſtood like a ſtatue while I went round her, upon legs bowed at the joint like thoſe of a decrepit old man in the laſt ſtage of his exiſtence.

"On our return towards Mr. Bakewell's houſe we were ſhewn the meadows, one of which had been watered by the little navigable cuts made in the grounds. It was a dry time; and the difference in the appearance of two pieces which adjoined each other, one watered and the other not, was aſtoniſhing; that which had been watered had produced two crops of hay that ſeaſon, and the other was in a ſtate of barrenneſs.

"In the ſlaughter-houſe we were ſhewn one of the fineſt ſheep that was ever bred from Mr. Bakewell's ſtock. It is preſerved in ſalt, and hangs up by another eſteemed valuable ſheep, of a different county breed. We were told that they were fed together on food of the ſame quality, and quantity if they choſe it; but the difference is amazing; one had a capacious ſtomach, &c. which might contain the entrails of a large Lincolnſhire ſheep, the other ſcarcely thoſe of a common lamb. One had a neck as long as a horned ſheep; and the other's head ſeemed without neck, ſtuck in its ſhoulders. In ſhort, the difference ſtruck me greatly; and ſo did the conduct of the perſon pleaſe me who attended us: upon his being aſked by one of the company what county breed the other ſheep was of, he modeſtly requeſted to be excuſed from replying. We were ſhewn alſo Mr. Bakewell's famous bull; but it was an animal that I rather choſe to ſee at a diſtance than at hand. I conſequently did not touch his fine carcaſe, nor thought thoſe ſafe who did[1]."

In October 1790, the compiler of this Hiſtory had the pleaſure of viewing this farm, in company with the late Mr. Schnebbelie; whoſe ready pencil produced a faithful ſketch of a ſheep of the true breed[2].

In 1793, the farm was thus judiciouſly noticed by the late Mr. John Holt, of Walton near Liverpool:

"The neatneſs of the hedge-rows, cleanneſs of the grounds, &c. cannot fail to attract the notice of an attentive traveller as he paſſes; and the general civility of the ſervants to a ſtranger, &c. (for there is no inn where you can leave your horſe) calls forth more than common gratitude for the favours conferred on one unknown either in perſon or by name.

"The two veteran herds, proud of their office, of their maſter, and their ſervice, each armed with their ſtaff of office (hazel-ſticks), ſelect and bring forth the different cattle according to the regularly-eſtabliſhed cuſtom and diſcipline of the place, explaining, in proper terms, and in an uncultivated but pleaſing manner, the ſuperior or different qualities of individuals, but that 'maſter, if preſent, could have explained the matters much better' (Mr. Bakewell was then in London). And yet they executed their office ſo completely, that enquiry was made how long they had been in that ſervice? A John Breedon, "Since the year the King was crowned," or 32 years; William Arnold, the other herd, "about 20." William Peet, who ſuperintends the horſes, has been near 40 years; but, during that time, has been abſent a few years. Several 10 or 12 years; and no one is taken into the ſervice for a leſs term than four years.

"The different breeds of ſheep kept on the farm are brought together, put ſide by ſide, which then are under the immediate eye of the ſpectator; who, if no judge of cattle, cannot fail to obſerve a difference, when ſo diſtinctly marked out in the ſeparate joints and points of each individual; and which after viewing alive, the carcaſes of different breeds, preſerved whole in pickle, and hung up ſide by ſide, may be viewed again, to examine the thickneſs of fleſh and fat on each, ſmallneſs of offal, and, again, the ſkeleton, with diſtinct bones, heads, ribs, &c. of the different breeds, to take another comparative view, and mark the difference. In this room are alſo preſerved in pickle, and ſhewn, ſome joints of beef, the relicks of Old Comely, the parent-mother of the flock, who lived to the advanced age of 26; when exiſtence became burdenſome. She was ſlaughtered about two years ſince. The fat of a ſurloin on the outſide meaſured about four inches thick.

"The ſhew of tups had been cloſed the day before our arrival, a limited time being allowed for the purpoſe of hiring for the ſeaſon, which had been regularly announced in the papers; after which they are not admitted to be ſeen till the ſucceeding ſeaſon. Much company at the farm the day before for that purpoſe; amongſt whom ſome foreigners.

"Mr. Honeyborne, the nephew of Mr. Bakewell, attended us round the farm; viewed the different ſucceſſions of crops of cabbages, drilled wheat, barley, &c. in all the fields of which are generally ſpecimens of broad-caſt, to ſhew the comparative difference. The drill is preferred. But the grand article of huſbandry is the irrigated ground, about 200 acres, from a ſtream collected carefully ſome diſtance, and which, in part, is carried round the farm for more than a mile, the lower part of which is flooded in portions according to the degree of water which falls in each ſeaſon. A mill is fed from the ſame ſource; but the water is of ſo great eſtimation in improving the lands, that the mill is ſuffered to ſtand, rather than the fields ſhould be abridged of their proper allowance; patches of which, in a variety of places, are kept dry, or prevented from this improving ſource; and the barrenneſs of which is very evident by the appearance of ruſhes, coarſer and poorer graſs. In another place, one part manured with dung from the yard, and the neighbourhood flooded; favour in the watering part. Afterwards, different patches, flooded and not flooded, to the amount of about 20 diviſions; the ſuperiority in favour of water clearly evident. Again; the ſame experiment is varied, in bringing water from a ſpring, the ſame which is uſed for culinary purpoſes in the kitchen, and this contraſted in patches, and oppoſite to the patches watered from the canal; and even here the evidence is decidedly in favour of the water; but whether in favour of the water from the ſpring or ſtream, I regret that I did not pay ſufficient attention. And again; the drainings from the yard are brought into one point, and, mixing with the water, are carried over certain fields beneath the farm, by which they are rendered ſo fertile, that this preſent year ſome parts have already been mowed twice, the firſt of which was on the laſt day of April. The laſt year they had four cuttings, the graſs from which is appropriated for the uſe of ſoiling the three-year-old heifers, which are kept in the houſe and worked, horſes, bulls, and ſome other cattle, which are not turned out to graſs. Beſides watering the grounds, this ſtream of water is converted into other uſeful purpoſes; it is formed into a narrow canal, and runs very ſilent, having but little fall; upon which boats are conſtructed to carry the manure from the yard, and the produce of the fields, when reaped, to the farm-yard; and, of late years, the turnips have been thrown into this ſtream, and have, without farther trouble, been waſhed and carried down; till, on their arrival at their deſtined port, a ſervant waits, and ſcoops them out on the banks.

"A wharf is alſo conſtructed, whereupon are landed cabbages, &c. ſo contrived as to be on a level with the canal, and renders the labour of throwing them into carts the eaſier than if the men had the trouble to lift them the height of the cart; alſo, when dung is brought from the yard, the ground is ſo raiſed as to require only looſening the cart, and thence toſſing it immediately into the boat. Mr. Bakewell uſes no waggons, but prefers the light ſingle-horſe carts.

"On different ſpots are planted clumps of willows (called the Dutch willow); ſome of theſe as if for ornament, ſome for ſhelter, and ſome, when no other place offered, near the building, along the hedge-rows; the quickſets or thorns of which ſeem not to be injured by being overſhadowed and dropped upon by theſe overbearing neighbours. A lot of theſe is in rotation regularly cut down every ſeven years (from which appears the number of plantations), and, beſides handles for rakes, pitchforks, and other tools, are applied to many uſeful purpoſes on the farm, as guarding new-planted hedges, &c. Their uſes are various, and prove a great ſaving of expence on many occaſions; a large ſtack of which, ready peeled and reared on the end, appears in the farm-yard; the bark from which is, as ſoon as ſtripped from the wood, tied up in ſheaves or bundles. Such is the general neatneſs practiſed through every department, that there is not the leaſt appearance of ſlovenlineſs, or waſte, or inattention of any kind, apparent, in the example above noticed, inſtead of a litter, as is too frequently practiſed. How much extraordinary time has this neat practice exhauſted? Probably, in the iſſue, none; for, the portion of time ſpent in the act of tying-up in bundles is next to nothing. The leſs ſpace occupied by the bark is very evident, and the neatneſs of the appearance is very ſtriking. If they are to be removed, or applied to any purpoſe, e.g. to lay for the bottom of corn or hay-ſtacks, the former trouble of tying-up is inſtantly repaid by the facility of the removal, and without any loſs of the article. Upon urgent occaſions, theſe peelings are occaſionally applied as bottoms of ſtacks; but around the yard are already formed for uſe bottoms of brick, ſo conſtructed as to ſecure the ſtacks of corn from the weather, and, as much as may be, from the vermin.

[2] See a neat etching of it, by Mr. Schnebbelie, Plate CIII.

"In the yard are ſeen varieties of carriages, different implements in huſbandry, both of the old and new ſchool, ploughs and harrows upon almoſt every conſtruction; plain and ſpiked rollers, &c. in varieties, and in great abundance, ſimple, neat, uſeful, and movable racks, for feeding horſes, call forth the attention. To prevent the horſes quarrelling or injuring one another during the conteſt, there is only one aperture at each corner. The neareſt diviſion is appropriated for their corn, and in the centre part a rack for the hay. One pair of ſhafts ſerves to take on and off, and move the whole or any number of the racks to any part of the farm. Adjoining the houſe is a ſmith's ſhop, where two men are generally employed in making and repairs for the farm, &c.

"The grounds adjoining the houſe ſeem of a ſwampy nature, and yet water is brought over the ſame from a ſmall rivulet, that it may be overflown[1]; but, by good management and well-conducted drains, &c. the inconveniences which would ariſe from the ſtagnant water are overcome. The gardens are neat, and ſeem cultivated more for utility than ſhow, and in them are fiſh-ponds well ſtored and ſupplied with water from the rivulet above noticed. The garden, I have been told, is ſometimes irrigated.

"In one particular ſtye are conveniences for meaſuring and weighing the food of the hogs, and alſo noting down the ſame, which may be done by any ſervant with a piece of chalk already lying upon the ſpot, till it can be entered in a more regular manner upon paper in a proper book. This contrivance is the moſt ſimple that can be imagined, in order to prevent miſtakes, and to render the experiments concluſive. There is alſo a weighing machine in the ſtye, particularly appropriated for the purpoſe of weighing the ſwine which are undergoing the experiments. Nine in number, divided into claſſes of three in each department, are under experiment.

"After an agreeable range through the whole of what is uſually exhibited, we were invited to partake of, and were hoſpitably entertained with, a good and plentiful dinner, good ale, and after dinner a bottle of good wine, during which we were alſo entertained with good and inſtructive converſation, and preſſed to ſtay a longer time in the moſt hoſpitable and cordial manner. It was with pleaſure we entered into theſe cultivated premiſſes; it was with regret we departed from this manſion of conviviality, with gratitude for the favours conferred, with ſatisfaction for the pleaſure we had enjoyed!

"The gentleneſs of the different kinds of cattle has been frequently noticed by others, and ſhould not paſs the attention of any obſerver. The meekneſs of ſpirit ſeems to run through the individual of every ſpecies exhibited, from the gallant ſtallion to the veteran bull. At an age when moſt of his brethren are either foaming or bellowing with rage and madneſs, or have ſuffered the ſtroke of the axe for their frequent delinquencies and violences committed; Old C. a ſon of the old parent Comely, has all the gentleneſs of a lamb in his looks and in his actions. Gently treated himſelf, he harbours no rancour, but affectionately licks the hand of his feeder; ſcratch him, and he will bow himſelf down for this kindly office to his benefactor. This old ſervant feeds within doors, nor is he any longer an hireling to his neighbours. He retired with all the dignity of majeſty, as if conſcious of his own ſuperiority[2]!"

In the autumn of the ſame year, 1793, Diſhley was attentively examined by Mr. Monk, who thus ſpeaks of it in his Agricultural Report:

"There are different breeds of ſheep in the county; the new Leiceſter, the old Leiceſter, and the Foreſt ſheep. The Diſhley or new Leiceſter, bears down every other breed before it; and I have no doubt but, in the courſe of a very few years, this breed will be diſperſed through every county in England, &c. The leading idea is, to procure that breed which, on a given quantity and quality of food, will pay the moſt; and thoſe people who have tried them are convinced that the Diſhley breed will live where many other breeds would ſtarve; and that, the more beautiful the form, the hardier the animal is of every kind. Nothing can ſhew the high eſtimation this breed is held in, clearer than the high prices they have fetched lately at different ſales. The following are ſome of the particulars of ewes belonging to Thomas Paget, eſq. ſold by auction Nov. 16, 1793.

30 ewes, at 20 guineas each, 600 guineas, Mr. Simpſon.

N. B. Lots 37, 38, 39, and 40, were thaves.

"It is wonderful, that 130 ewes ſhould fetch an average of 25 guineas each, and all of them the property of one man. The following paragraph (which elucidates the value of this beautiful ſpecies in a very high degree) I took from the Leiceſter Journal:

"In your paper was lately advertiſed to be ſold, by Mr. Boot, on the 20th and 21ſt of September laſt, the ſtock of Nathaniel Pearce, eſq. the ſheep of the new Leiceſterſhire ſort, and the neat cattle from the beſt ſort of the long-horned breed. In an advertiſement of the ſtock of C. Cartwright, eſq. alſo to be ſold by Mr. Boot, on the 7th inſtant, it is ſaid, the neat cattle are of the beſt ſort of the ſhort-horned breed, and the ſheep of the true Lincolnſhire ſort deſcended, from rams bred by Charles Chaplain, eſq. and Mr. Bartholomew.

[1] Swampy ground may, with propriety, be compared to a ſpunge full of water: when the ſtagnant water is carried off by proper drains (as is the caſe here), the ground, like the ſpunge deprived of its water, occupies leſs ſpace; and water, which is a heavy body, beſides fertilizing the land, by its ſpecific gravity conſolidates the particles of the earth ſtill cloſer together by running over the ſurface, and which is ſuppoſed to add another cauſe of fertility. Since writing the article, I have been told that Mr. Bakewell's obſervation is, "Throw water upon the ground from whatever quarter you can obtain it, provided there are no pernicious qualities, as minerals, &c. in the water."

"Many people have an idea, that this breed is at its higheſt pitch, and that the prices will ſoon fall; but at preſent I do not think it likely, at leaſt while men flock from diſtant counties, and give ſuch high prices: neither would theſe people come a ſecond and a third time, if they did not find their account in it. I heard a perſon from a very diſtant county offer 30 guineas apiece for ewes at Mr. Paget's ſale; and I heard from very good authority, that one of the firſt breeders had refuſed 1000 guineas for ſix ewes. From this the price of the breed does not appear to be falling.

"In a converſation with one of the firſt breeders in reſpect to the wool of this breed, he ſaid, people were miſtaken in their ideas about it. He allowed that the Lincolnſhire ſheep gives a greater fleece; but that a given quantity of land will maintain a greater number of the Diſhley than of the Lincoln, by which means there will be a greater quantity of wool upon a given ſpace of land. This gentleman was alſo certain, that a given ſpace of ground would maintain one third more of the Diſhley breed in number, and would likewiſe produce a greater weight of mutton than any other breed.

"On viewing the hoſpitable manſion of Mr. Bakewell, I was highly gratified by viewing his flock of ſheep, &c. Every thing at Diſhley is conducted with the greateſt order and regularity, and, I may add, with every politeneſs and attention a ſtranger can wiſh for. The ſheep are ſhewn one by one in a place built for the purpoſe. They are brought in at one door; and, after you have ſatisfied your curioſity, they are returned back by another door, and then another is brought in; and ſoon I obſerved, they brought them regularly better and better, ſo that the beſt came laſt. On my aſking the reaſon of this, I was informed, if they had brought the laſt firſt, the great ſuperiority would have made the others much worſe than they really were, which would be a great injury to them. This too I found was the reaſon they never ſhew their rams after they are engaged, it being natural to human nature to covet that which it cannot poſſeſs. I by no means profeſs to be a judge of cattle; but I think there were ſome of Mr. Bakewell's ſheep far ſuperior to any I viewed in the county, or in any other county I ever ſaw in my life.

"On another part of the farm were various kinds of breeds mixed together, and among them were three ſheep, the produce of a Ryland ewe. One got by a Ryeland ram, one by a Spaniſh, and the other by a Diſhley. The difference was very great; that by the Diſhley ram was far ſuperior to the others, and its ſhape ſhewed the advantage of this croſs to a very great degree. There were alſo other breeds; but they appeared very inferior compared with the Diſhley. The South Down is, in my opinion, next to the Diſhley. Mr. Bakewell has ſeveral ſheep of different kinds ſalted whole, for the inſpection of viſitors. They are hung up; and the difference between the breeds when dead is, if poſſible, ſtill greater than when living. I was informed, that Mr. Bakewell's ſervants ſhewed one of his Diſhley ſalted ſheep at Mr. Fowler's ſale, and the company preſent rewarded them very handſomely for the ſight of it.

"The difference of offal is certainly very great: the inſide of the Diſhley is not larger than that of the lamb; and the bone is amazingly ſmall compared with the other breeds. Mr. Bakewell has made ſeveral experiments to aſcertain the quantity of food eat by the different breeds, in proportion to their reſpective weights. Theſe experiments Mr. Bakewell carried on for three years, and they all ſhewed the great ſuperiority of the Diſhley breed. Theſe kind of experiments are very intereſting, and I flattered myſelf he would have permitted me to have taken a copy of them; but I was diſappointed. (Mr. Bakewell offered to lend me ſome of his ſheep to make the ſame experiments, but my non-reſidence prevented my having that great pleaſure.)

"Mr. Bakewell has alſo, among his curioſities, a rump and ſurloin of a cow, more than 26 years old when killed, which is wonderfully fat. It is now more than four inches thick in fat, and would, without doubt, have been conſiderably thicker, had ſhe been killed at an earlier age. He has alſo two pieces of bacon, one from a hog with very large bone, and the other from one with very ſmall bone. The latter was 11 inches through to the bone, and the former not half ſo deep. There is a time fixed for viewing the different kinds of ſtock, which prevented me from ſeeing the horſes. The famous white bull is a noble animal (but I found there were many who preferred that ſold at Mr. Paget's ſale.) In converſation with Mr. Bakewell reſpecting Mr. Paget's bull having had but few cows, I was of opinion, that if Mr. Paget had fixed his price at five or ten guineas a cow, he would have found it anſwer much better than fixing ſo high a price as 25 guineas; but Mr. Bakewell ſays, the only way to improve the breed of cattle is to keep up the price; for, if the price is low, people ſend any kind of cows, and if the produce fails, the bull is blamed; but, if the price is high, they are particular, and ſend none but the very beſt, which is the only method to improve the breed. The ſame argument, he ſays, holds good with all other kinds of cattle. After ſeeing the white bull, I ſaw the cows, heifers, &c. among which were ſome very beautiful, and of great value. It is the rule at Diſhley not to ſhew ſtock of any ſort in the field. In courſe, thoſe that are to be ſeen are fetched on purpoſe. I have no doubt but Mr. Bakewell has very good reaſons for this rule; yet many gentlemen are of opinion, that the trouble it gives takes off in great meaſure the pleaſure of viewing this beautiful ſtock. Mr. Bakewell is a great advocate for ſmall bone in all kinds of cattle; and, in his opinion, many ſmall beaſts are to be preferred to a few large, as the ſmall-boned always pay more on the ſame quantity of ground by feeding, &c. than the few large. To ſhew the difference of judgement in reſpect to the value of cattle, Mr. Bakewell informed me, that ſome years ſince he uſed to attend Loughborough Tup-market, where he had a ram which he let for 25 guineas. Soon after the agreement, another farmer was to purchaſe this ram, and Mr. Bakewell (in joke) aſked him 25 ſhillings for it. The farmer offered 18; and at laſt they parted for two ſhillings. I myſelf ſaw a heifer ſold at Mr. Pearce's ſale, near Northampton, for 80 guineas; and a few days after, as ſhe was driven through Leiceſter, a party of farmers, ſtanding together, valued her at about £8. I am ſorry to ſay Mr. Bakewell's health[1] was very indifferent, which prevented my converſing with him ſo much as I could have wiſhed; but I ſhall always think of my viſit to Diſhley with pleaſure.

"Mr. Bakewell's fences are in great order. He has different ſmall plantations of the Dutch willow in ſeveral parts of the eſtate, one of which he cuts down annually at ſeven years growth; they run very long, and ſome of them very large, and are ſplit and made uſe of for poſts, gates, rails, &c. for which they are very excellent. Mr. Bakewell uſes no other kind of wood for thoſe purpoſes; and ſeveral people are following his ornamental and uſeful method.

[1] Mr. Bakewell died Oct. 1, 1795, and was buried at Diſhley; but has no monument, unleſs that of ſir Chriſtopher Wren be applied to him — Circumspice!

"Some few meadows are watered, and a great quantity of land is capable of that improvement, as no country abounds more with rivulets and ſmall ſtreams; nor is there any where the land lies with ſuch a proper and fine deſcent, ſo as to render a very great quantity capable of that improvement, provided the different occupiers would agree to have floating drains carried in continuation over ſuch of their reſpective lands as would admit of it, for their mutual benefit. Watermills are a very great hindrance to the extenſion and general adoption of this improvement. Very little of the land is watered on the ſide of the county towards Melton Mowbray. It is chiefly confined to the Northern part, and is gaining ground very faſt. Mr. Wilkes, Mr. Bakewell, Mr. Paget, Mr. Aſtley, Mr. Moor, and a few others, water a great quantity of their land, and have derived great benefit from it. The method varies according to ſituation and circumſtances: Mr. Wilkes and Mr. Bakewell water about 200 acres each in a very maſterly manner. The whole of Mr. Bakewell's is ſupplied by a canal which he has cut, a mile and a quarter in length, and is ſtill extending it, intending to carry it as far as poſſible through the eſtate. He has ſeveral patches, which are left unwatered, to ſhew the improvement. The difference of verdure is aſtoniſhing; the pieces watered had more graſs on them, in the proportion of ten to one, than the parts unwatered, and were of a fine green; while the parts unwatered were of a ſickly yellow. Mr. Bakewell is a great advocate for watering, and thinks it one of the firſt improvements; the land adjoining Mr. Bakewell's is not watered, and is in the ſame ſtate that Mr. Bakewell's was formerly, both equally good and capable of the ſame improvement. The land is full of coarſe ſour graſs, with a great quantity of ruſhes; while Mr. Bakewell's is in the higheſt ſtate of cultivation, and not a ruſh can be ſeen. Mr. Bakewell never manures his watered meadows. He cuts the graſs all the year round, and carries it to the cattle in their ſtalls in winter, and in ſummer on to thoſe fields not capable of that improvement, by which means it goes much farther, and at the ſame time manures the ground on which it is carried for the cattle. He waters all the year round, cutting four times in the year. In very hot weather the water is allowed to continue about 48 hours; in moderate, about four or five days; and in cold, about a fortnight. Mr. Bakewell is careful not to water when it is likely to freeze on the graſs.

"Lord Harborough has been at a great expence to improve the breed of cattle in general, for the benefit of his tenants. His lordſhip gave £157. for a bull, and £89. for a cow, beſides hiring rams at a great price from the firſt breeders. I was informed that his lordſhip for many years uſed to give conſiderable prizes to his tenants for the beſt calf, &c. &c.; but, finding they had the impudence to attempt an impoſition, his lordſhip has left it off. His lordſhip told me, "That he had given a commiſſion to offer for Mr. Paget's famous bull, and with no other view than the good of his tenants." I heard his ſteward offer 50 guineas apiece for ewes at Mr. Paget's ſale. He bought a heifer at 70 guineas, which was, no doubt, for the laudable purpoſe of improving the ſtock of his lordſhip's tenants.

"On my viſit to Mr. Burgeſs, of Huggleſcote, I ſaw a fat wether of the Diſhley breed. This wether was killed on the 2d of January, at Walgrave in Northamptonſhire; and Mr. Burgeſs was ſo kind as to ſend me a haunch of it into Devon, with the particulars of the weight of the whole ſheep, as under,

The carcaſe,	—	144 lb. or 36 lb. per quarter.
Blood,	—	5
Head,	—	4¼
Pluck,	—	4¼
Guts large and ſmall,		1¼
Paunch,	—	2¼
Rough fat,		16½

"The haunch weighed 24 lb. which I ſent to my butcher in Kingſbridge to be hung up (and a ticket faſtened to it with the above particulars) for the inſpection of the farmers (on a market-day) in this part of the world. It was very much admired by every perſon; and, I am certain, the ſhewing of it has done more real ſervice to this excellent breed than my talking to them for ſeven years would have done. Several gentlemen were of opinion that it was the beſt-flavoured mutton they had ever eaten. The bone of the haunch weighed only 13½ oz. My butcher declared it had not ſo much offal as one he killed the ſame day, which was no more than 12 pounds per quarter. I was informed in Leiceſterſhire, that it is not an uncommon thing to ſalt down this mutton, and that it was a very good ſubſtitute for bacon.

"The fleeces of the wedders (wethers) run about three or four to the tod (of 28 lb.); the ewes rather more to the tod, and are of a good quality.

"Lambs are weaned from the middle of July to the beginning of Auguſt, and put upon clover, lattermath, or other freſh keep, until about November, when they are (or ſhould be) put to turnips, after having taken to eat them they uſually follow the feeding ſheep to eat up the hulls. Some few give their wethers turnips and cabbages in winter.

"The ram lambs have every indulgence from the time they are weaned till the time of ſhearing (the beginning of June) to puſh them forward as much as poſſible, as it is the common practice to let them out to hire the firſt ſeaſon. Theſe are called ſhar-hogs.

"When Mr. Bakewell lets his rams, he never aſks a price, but leaves the hirer to offer what he thinks proper. If Mr. Bakewell approves of the offer, he accepts it; if not, he rejects it.

"A Tup Society has been formed for ſome years in this county (ſome of the members reſide in the adjoining counties) by ſeveral of the firſt breeders. They have rules and regulations among themſelves, which are not much approved of by the generality of the other breeders. I underſtood thoſe rules were a ſecret; therefore I made no enquiries concerning them.

"The prices for rams by the ſeaſon (I believe they are very ſeldom ſold) are often very high; but how much is given, I will not take upon me to ſay. Many hundreds, I believe, are frequently given, and the quantity of ewes ſtipulated (about 80 is the general quantity) by agreement. Theſe very large ſums are generally given by men who breed rams to let again. The rams are generally ſent out about the latter end of September, in light carts made for the purpoſe. They travel from 20 to 30 miles a day, and are ſent to a great diſtance. Inſtead of turning the ram among the ewes, as is common in other counties, he is kept with two or three ewes, and the others brought to him one by one; and he is only ſuffered to ſerve them once each, by which means he is enabled to ſerve a much greater number.

"The breeding-flocks of ram-breeders run from 100 to 200; very few more. After the lambs are weaned, the ewes are kept moderately till winter, when they have turnips, &c. It is ſaid that this breed lamb with leſs difficulty than other breeds, but that they are bad nurſes, being often in want of milk. The ewe-lambs are generally kept from the ram the firſt autumn. The wethers (or wether-hogs) are not ſheared the firſt year.

"On Melton Mowbray ſide of the county, the ſheep are moſtly of the old Leiceſter breed; but, by buying young rams of the new Leiceſter ſort, I am informed, it is become much finer than it was formerly.

"In converſation with one of the advocates for the old Leiceſter ſort, he allowed that a daſh of the blood of the new Leiceſter was a great improvement to them; and when they are to be fatted as ſhar-hogs, the new Leiceſter evidently fatten quickeſt; but, if kept to two ſhear, the old breed grows larger (this I much doubt), and their fleeces are of more value. There are very few of the breeders of the old Leiceſter but admire the Diſhley; and I have no doubt but in a very few years there will be no other breed in the county. The Foreſt ſheep are a very poor ſort, ſomething like the breed we have upon the moor in Devon.

"Many fine bulls of the long-horned breed are reared in this county, which are often let by the ſeaſon, and ſome of them at high prices. They are let out in April, and generally returned in Auguſt. They are ſuffered to leap while yearlings; and, if approved of, are kept as long as they will do buſineſs. The age of heifers, when put to the bull, depends upon fancy. Some let them take the bull at two years old; others at three. All the two years old and three years old heifers, at Mr. Paget's ſale, had been put to bull. People in this country think that the beſt of the long-horned breed are really the beſt, as they will pay moſt for a given quantity of food.

" The following particulars of Mr. Paget's ſale will ſhew the high eſtimation this breed is held in.

First day's ſale, Nov. 14, 1793.

"The whole of the foregoing heifers are by Lot 34; and, together with the cows, have been bulled by him, except Lot 52, which has been bulled by a ſon of Garrick, off Lot 1.

"The graziers of this county are not in general particular in reſpect to the breed. Fifeſhire Scots, Shropſhires, Iriſh, Welſh, &c. in ſhort, any thing that will pay. I found ſome few advocates for the Devonſhire reds. Mr. Lynes is trying an experiment between a Devonſhire and a long-horned cow. When I ſaw them, Mr. Lynes thought the latter improved conſiderably faſter than the Devon.

" The graziers handle the lean beaſts as well as the fat ones, and ſay the hip-bone ſhould be covered with ſomething under the ſkin that feels ſoft and mellow, and likewiſe along the back and upon the ribs with a good flank; if their hides are tight and hard, they reject them as unpromiſing. The grazing ſtock is in general confined to one piece of land, and is ſeldom ſhifted as in moſt other counties, and they are generally intermixed with ſheep according to the fancy of the grazier. I obſerved pens in moſt of the grazing grounds, and in general one ſerved for two pieces or more, by being placed between them.

" Calves are reared by hand, or two to a cow, until fit to wean, and wintered upon turnips and hay.

" Some ſtallions are bred by farmers, who draw them in their teams, and cover with them in the ſeaſon. Other breeders let them for the ſeaſon. Mares are moſtly kept by farmers, who work them in their teams until near foaling, and ſome moderately afterwards; ſhutting up the foals while the mares are working. Foals are weaned about the middle of November, and run in and out as they pleaſe; they have uſually a few oats or bran with their hay.

" Richard Aſtley, eſq. has a very fine ſort of ſwine, which he ſends to different parts of England. The boars ſerve ſows at half a guinea each; and Mr. Bakewell, in order to make people particular in ſending good ſows, wiſhes Mr. Aſtley to increaſe the price to a guinea; the produce Mr. Aſtley ſells (for breeding) at five guineas each, weaning old and barrow-pigs at one guinea. They are very broad over the back, with very little offal, and have a great propenſity to fatten; the boar is thought to be very much like the wild boar.

" Mr. Biſhop, of the Three Crowns Inn, Leiceſter, has a very handſome ſow; the produce of which he ſells at two guineas each, weaning old.

" Mr. Baker is trying an experiment with 10 hogs. He gives them turnips, with the tops and roots boiled together. I ſaw them when they had been up near a month; and Mr. Baker ſaid they had thriven much better than he expected; indeed they did look very well!

" The diſorders of cattle are not ſo well attended to as in my opinion they ought to be. Scarce any thing is done for ſheep, and but little for beaſts; and even that little not very rationally applied. The ſheep-rot has been a general complaint all over the county this laſt ſeaſon, and many thouſands have died. I obſerved two advertiſements in the Leiceſter papers, from different people, offering to diſcover a ſecret to cure the rot, by ſubſcription, at one guinea each; but have not found any perſon who has the leaſt opinion of theſe ſecrets: indeed, it is generally thought there is no remedy. I was informed by one perſon, that he had found horſe-beans a remedy in the very early ſtage of the diſorder.

" When I called upon Mr. Friſby, of Waltham, he was waſhing his ſheep in a particular kind of waſh, which, he informed me, was a moſt excellent preventative againſt a number of diſorders, and what he had derived great benefit from. I was in hopes he would have favoured me with this valuable receipt, for the benefit of ſociety; but I was ſo unfortunate as not to prevail upon him at that time, as Mr. Friſby had not made up his mind about letting me have it; but I hope he will have the goodneſs to inſert it in the broad margin left for ſuch purpoſes, when this ſurvey ſhall have been printed; and I am certain, if it is that excellent preventative Mr. Friſby informed me it was, there is not a farmer but will think himſelf obliged to him for making it known.

" Neat cattle are ſubject to ſtale blood. The method of cure is to let blood as ſoon as perceived, and give 12 or 16 ounces of Glauber ſalts; 24 hours after, give four ounces of bole armoniac. This repeat the day following, if their urine is not changed; ſtrictly obſerving to keep the body open by mild purgatives and opening clyſters[1]."

The CHURCH (ſee Plate CIII.) dedicated to All Saints, conſiſts of a low embattled tower (in which is one bell); a nave, chancel, and North porch.

In the Matriculus of 1220, Diſhley is returned to be under the patronage of the abbot of Leiceſter; Richard, the then rector, having been inſtituted by Hugh then biſhop of Lincoln, and paying to the abbot half a mark ab antiquo. The church of Diſhley alſo received from the abbey of Garendon ab antiquo two marks for certain tithes [1].

In 1344, the procurations were returned nichil; the vicarage was taxed at 4 marks; and paid 1*s.* for Peter-pence. The abbot of Leiceſter was then the patron, and had a penſion from it of half a mark.

In 1454, the advowſon of the rectory was ſold by the abbot and convent of Leiceſter to the abbot and convent of Garendon; who was to pay to the former abbey 14*s.* a year as a penſion. The abbey of Leiceſter alſo retained 26*s.* 8*d.* a year for the tithes of all the land in Garendon, which land belonged to Rabell [2].

The rectory at the diſſolution belonged to the monaſtery of Garendon, and was valued at £4. per ann. [3]

In 1564, Diſhley is mentioned, "quæ tantum habet curatum;" and in 1590 Mr. Wyrley ſays, "There is a chapel at Diſhley Grange, but in it no armour."

"This church was belonging to the abbey of Garendon, and (as I am informed) is now ſaid to be a donative, and is in the grant of the earl of Rutland, who hath power of viſitation and deprivation herein; for ſo it is held in 8 Aſſ. fol. 29. by ſir William Herle, chief juſtice, who giveth it the rule in the caſe, That, in a donative, a lay patron may collate, viſit, and deprive, without the biſhop. And it is plain by all our books, that as the king might of antient times found a free chapel, and exempt it from the juriſdiction of the dioceſan, ſo he might alſo, by his letters patent, licence a common perſon to found ſuch a chapel, and to ordain that it ſhould be a donative, and not preſentative, and that the chaplain ſhould be deprivable by the founder and his heirs, and not by the biſhop; and of the ſame opinion are the Canoniſts, as appeareth by Petrus Gregorius, de Beneficiis, in theſe words: "Si capellæ fundatæ per laicos non fuerint à dioceſano approbatæ, et (ut loquuntur) ſpiritualizatæ, non cenſentur beneficia, nec ab epiſcopo conferri poſſunt, ſed ſunt ſub piâ diſpoſitione fundatoris [4]."

In 1650, the curacy of Diſhley was returned to be worth £6. 13*s.* 4*d.*; and the miniſter as "no preacher and ſcandalous."

Diſhley was in 1716 returned on oath to be of no value, except the church-yard.

In the king's books it is entered as a living not in charge; the ſtipend (with Thorpe curacy) £6. 13*s.* 4*d.* A penſion of 3*s.* is paid from it to the biſhop of Lincoln at the feaſt of the Annunciation.

This donative has been for a long time given to the rector of Hathern; by whom divine ſervice is regularly performed once in three weeks.

THORPE ACRE,

in old writings called Thorpe Hanker and Thorpe by Garendon, is a ſmall hamlet about two miles to the North of Loughborough, and nearly adjoining to Garendon park.

This lordſhip, containing five ploughlands, was valued, in the reign of the Confeſſor, at three pounds; and at the general ſurvey was worth ſeven pounds. Sixteen villans, with three ſocmen and eight bordars, had ſix ploughs. There were 30 acres of meadow [1]. To Thorpe belonged alſo at that time one houſe in the town of Leiceſter [2].

This village belonged antiently to the neighbouring monaſtery of Garendon; having been given to them by Rubell de Seignevilla and William de Dixeleia, and confirmed by Robert Boſſu, earl of Leiceſter, their founder.

Robert Blanchmaines earl of Leiceſter, ſon to earl Robert Boſſu, confirmed his father's gift of all his fee in Thorpe to the ſaid abbot and convent of Garendon; viz. whatever the above named Ernald de Boſco, or his homagers, had in Bernewange and in Medleholme; and farther, a certain meadow in Medleholme; reſerving the accuſtomed ſervices.

Ernald de Boſco confirmed his father's gift of 12 acres of ground, given to the abbot and convent of Garendon, in Thorpe field, nigh the grange of his near Ringelthorpe.

Henry ſon of Camilla of Thorpe gave and confirmed by his charter, to the abbot and convent of Garendon and their ſucceſſors, one ley of his in Thorpe field, which lay next to four leys they had of Geffray Oſtiarius, in the tillage called Leichulnellands; with warantage of that land, with chevage, for ever.

Alicia, late wife of John Doyly, knight, releaſed for her and her heirs, to the abbot and convent of Garendon, all her intereſt and claim on a rent of 13*ſ*. 4*d*. which they were wont to pay to her late huſband for a certain mill, with the appurtenances, nigh Thorpe; with warantage for her and her heirs.

Richard ſon of Nicholas of Thorpe, knight, of the one part, did covenant with the ſaid abbot and convent of Garendon, that they ſhould incloſe, and keep incloſed for ever, all the woods of Cats and Lichehang, to their moſt commodity, from his wood of Luduni unto the hedge nigh to the Goate gate; ſo that the ſaid Richard and his heirs may have, at any time, any common right or claim of bringing in any kind of cattle into the ſaid incloſure of the ſaid abbot and convent, or any thing elſe, after the incloſure thereof; with warantiſe for him and his heirs for ever, dated anno Henrici filii regis Johannis 31°, (1246-7). The like covenant did the abbot and convent make with the ſaid Richard for all their wood of Thorpe, with warantage againſt their tenants there.

Robert of the Wayter of Loughborough confirmed to the abbot and convent of Garendon four acres of meadow lying together in Thorpholme, nigh the meadow late Raphe Gryne's; with other four acres, which the ſaid Robert held of Julian of Thorpe for term of his life; yielding therefore yearly, for the five years then next enſuing the making of this deed, one roſe at Midſummer; and, after the ſaid five years, paying to the ſaid Julian and her heirs yearly 40*ſ*. equally, at the Invention of the Holy Croſs and Michaelmas; with warrantiſe of the ſame for the firſt five years [3].

Geoffrey ſon of Ralph de Louteburgh granted them all his right in the wood of Thorpe Hanker and Garendon, "à foſſato inter campum de Thorp & campum de Gerandon, uſque ad le Brende; & a le Brende uſque ad le Thweyt; & a le Thweyt uſque ad hayam ſubter caprinam ab occidentali parte, quà deſcenditur uſque ad abbatiam; & inde uſque ad foſſatum juxta Ludewyk; ſine contradictione, &c. ſicut dominus comes Wyntonie conceſſit eiſdem. Teſtibus; Hugone de Bergys de Burton, Alano Noel de Whatton, Hugone de la Grene de Preſtwald, Roberto Bars de Dixle, Radulpho Board de Querendon [4].

"Ricardus le Franceys de Wanton nihil capit per breve ſuum verſus Ricardum de Thorp & Juhanam uxorem ejus de duabus partibus duarum virgatarum terre in Thorp, & verſus Serlonem de Thorp & Sabinam uxorem ejus de tertiâ parte predictarum virgatarum terre, quas Iſolda de Franceys, amita predicti Ricardi, demiſit Roberto Auſturario [5]."

In 1340, Henry de Beaumont earl of Boghan held, at his death, a moiety of one knight's fee in Thorpe Serlone [6].

In 1346, Richard ſon of Serlo de Thorpe (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 4*ſ*. for a tenth part of one knight's fee in Thorpe Hanker, parcel of the fee of Cheſter and Huntingdon [7].

July 16, 1361, Henry Plantagenet duke of Lancaſter died ſeiſed of a tenth part of one knight's fee in Thorp Serley, hely by Juliana relict of Serlo de Thorp [8].

Sept. 17, 1392, Thomas de Walton, clerk, appointed Thomas Jeke, of Cotes, and Robert de St. Andrew, of Gotham, his attorneys, to make ſeiſin to the abbot and convent of two meſſuages, 19 tenements, 104 acres of arable, 13 acres and a rood of meadow, and four acres of wood, with the appurtenances, in Thorpe Hanker and Shepeſhed [9].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Thorpe Hanker was rated at 15*ſ*.; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 1*ſ*.

In 1452, Thomas Leukenore died ſeiſed of 26*ſ*. rent, ariſing out of certain lands and tenements in Thorpe Hanker, which he held of Elizabeth prioreſs of the monaſtery of the Holy Trinity of Gracedieu, as of the right of her church [10].

After the diſſolution of the abbey of Garendon, this lordſhip, as part of their poſſeſſion, was granted by king Henry VIII. to Thomas Manners earl of Rutland.

In a ſubſidy of 1627, Charles Fetherſton was rated 5*l*. for lands at Thorp Aker.

In 1655, there was collected in Thorpe Acre, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of 16*ſ*. 6*d*.

Thorpe Acre contains 225 acres, and was incloſed in 1780. The preſent owner of the whole lordſhip is Thomas March-Phillipps, eſq. to whom it deſcended, together with Diſhley, as hereafter deſcribed under Garendon.

CASTLE DONINGTON, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Donington on the Heath in this county, is a conſiderable village, 10 miles diſtant from Loughborough, 12 from Aſhby de la Zouch, 12 from Nottingham, and 9 from Derby; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Akele. It is bounded on the North and on great part of the Weſt by the river Trent, which here ſeparates this county from Derbyſhire; on the Eaſt by Hemington; on the South Eaſt by Kegworth; on the South by Iſley Walton; and on the South Weſt by the little hamlet of Wilſton.

Twenty-two ploughlands and a half in Dunitone, which in the time of king Edward employed twenty ploughs, and were valued at an hundred ſhillings, were worth eleven pounds at the general ſurvey, when it is ſtated that they had been[1] held (under Algar the ſeventh earl of Leiceſter[2]) by the counteſs Alveva, mother of earl Morcar. Three ploughs were in the demeſne; and thirty villans, with a prieſt, and five ſocmen, and eleven bordars, had twelve ploughs. There was a mill of ten ſhillings and eight pence value; and a wood, twelve furlongs long, and eight broad[3]. Five ploughlands alſo in Dunnintone, with a meadow three furlongs long and one broad, belonged to the manor of Barhow, which was held under the king by earl Hugo[4].

The next mention that we find of this lordſhip is in the year 1102, in a MS. intituled, “Nomina Villarum infra Honorem de Tutbury, Altum Peccum, & Caſtle Donnington cum membris, in comitatibus Staff’, Derb’, Nott’, Leiceſter’, & Warr’, ac nomina offic’ ibidem, & authoritates ſuas, & feod’, vad’, & al’ ꝑficua dict’ offic’ pertin’, &c. capt’ 4° die Februarii, anno regis Henrici ſecundo;” where, among other parts of the honour of Tutbury[5], are enumerated, “In com’ Leic’; Twycroſſe, Hogs-norton, Goppeſhall, Snareſton, Bilſton, Orton upon the Hill, Shepey, Tuſton, Cuſſington, Appleby, Little Aſhby, Caſtle Aſhby, Great Seale, Sepſton, Leire, Orleſton, Broughton, Neylſton, Over Normanton, Belgrave, Selbye, Oneleape, Garthorpe, Peccleton, Caſtle Dunnington[6].”

In 1155, the members of Caſtle Donington and their ſeveral officers are thus enumerated:

“Nomina villarum & hamletorum de aut infra honorem de Caſtle Donington, cum membris, &c. in com’ Leyceſtrie, &c. ac nomina officiariorum ibidem, & authoritates ſuas, & feoda, vadia, & alia proficua dictorum officiariorum pertinent’; ac libertates diverſorum tenentium ibidem, ab antiquo uſitat’; cum Rentali diverſorum dominiorum ibidem, capt’ virtute commiſſionis domini regis, &c. coram Thomâ Somercotes, &c. capt’ & fact’ quarto die Februarii, anno regis Henrici filii regis Henrici ſecundo, prout continetur in libro vocat’ le Coucher.

Nomina officiariorum de Caſtle Donington, &c.
The ſteward of Caſtle Donington.
The ſteward of Wirkeſworth.
The ſteward of Feſhburne.
The ſteward of the New Caſtle under Line.
The ſteward of the wapentake of Allerton, Plumtree, Ryſeley, and Braunſton.
The bailiff of Caſtle Donington.
The keeper of Caſtle Donington Park.
The bailiff of the New Caſtle under Line.
The bailiff of the wapentake of Allerton, Plumtree, Ryſeley, and Braunſton.”

William, the ſon of Nigell baron of Haulton, who founded the priory of Norton, co. Cheſter, gave to that priory, inter alia, the church of Donington, with one carucate of land, and the tithe of his mill. He died in 1133, leaving a ſon William, who died . . . . . without iſſue, and two daughters; one of which was married to Euſtace; to whom, in right of his wife, Hugh Lupus earl of Cheſter gave the manor of Haulton, and made him baron thereof, and conſtable of Cheſter, to him and his heirs. This Euſtace built the caſtle at Donington, which gave the diſtinguiſhing name to the place. A more bold and diſtinguiſhed ſituation could not eaſily be found in any inland country for the purpoſe of a caſtle; an abrupt hill, riſing over an extenſive tract of flat country, through which the beautiful river Trent winds its ſilvery ſtreams amidſt luxuriant meadows many miles each way; and though few traces of the caſtle now remain (as will appear from the view given in Plate CVII. from a drawing taken by Mr. Pridden in 1792), the ſite of the town and its lofty ſpire contribute greatly to the charms of this country. “There was a chapell there, which was to be ſerved by the canons of the pryory of Norton, and to bee there reſident, and to take one halfe of the tyth of the demeaſne of the lord Haulton for 30 yeares[7].”

This Euſtace, at his death, left Donington caſtle to Richard Fitz Euſtace his ſon, who married Albreda de Lizoures[8], half ſiſter and (as it ſeems) heir to Robert Lacy, lord of Pontefract; for, after his death, ſhe ſeized on that barony, and all his other lands; whereupon John her ſon aſſumed the ſurname and arms of Lacy.

From him deſcended John Lacy[9], who, adhering to the rebellious barons, had his caſtle here demoliſhed in 1216 by the king’s command. This John Lacy, having married Margaret daughter and heir of Robert de Quincy, by Hawiſe his wife, ſiſter and coheir of Ranulph earl of Cheſter and Lincoln, was created earl of Lincoln in 1232; and had iſſue Edmund Lacy.

Caſtle Donington is not noticed in the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about the year 1240.

To Edmund de Lacy ſucceeded Henry his ſon, earl of Lincoln; and, in right of his wife Margaret (ſole daughter and heir of William Longſpee, ſon to William Longſpee) of Saliſbury[10] alſo; who, in 1251 obtained the king’s charter for free-warren in all his demeſne lands here[11]; and May 20, 1278, under the title of earl of Lincoln and conſtable of Cheſter, obtained from king Edward I. a weekly market on Wedneſday, and a fair yearly on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Edward the king, at his manor of Donington, co. Leiceſter[12]. “Hiis teſtibus; venerabili patre Thomâ Hereford epiſcopo; Gilberto de Clare comite Glouc’ & Hertford. Dat’ per manum noſtram apud Weſtm’, xxvi die Maii.” Both the market and the fair have long ſince been diſcontinued.

In the Itinerary of 1280, Caſtle Donington, Hemington, Lockington, and Diſeworth, anſwered collectively as one vill.

In 1311, it was found that Henry de Lacy, late earl of Lincoln, deceaſed, held the town and caſtle of Donington of the king in capite, by knight’s ſervice, as parcel of the earldom of Cheſter; alſo that Hugh le Deſpenſer held one burgage and one virgate of land in Donington aforeſaid of the earl of Lincoln, by homage and the ſervice of one pair of gilt ſpurs[1].—Henry de Lacy, deſpairing of male iſſue, had ſurrendered all his lands to the king; who regranted them to him for life; and, after his deceaſe, to Thomas earl of Lancaſter and Alice his wife, daughter to the ſaid Henry, and the heirs of their bodies; failing of which, they were to remain over to Edmund the king's brother.

Thomas earl of Lancaſter, taking arms againſt the king, was defeated, taken priſoner, and beheaded at his caſtle of Pontefract 1321[5]. In the great proſcription of the barons which followed this event, the hereditary rights of the earl of Lancaſter and his wife being ſeized into the hands of king Edward the Second, and alienated in divers ways, the king enforced the counteſs Alice to releaſe this manor unto Hugh le Deſpenſer the younger, whoſe father was one of the judges that condemned the earl of Lancaſter, and had afterwards been created earl of Wincheſter.

July 16, 1322, king Edward II. granted to Hugh le Deſpenſer, junior, the caſtle, town, manor, and honour of Donington, with the appurtenances (late parcel of the poſſeſſions of Henry de Lacy earl of Lincoln, and which, by the death of Thomas late earl of Lancaſter, who married Alice, daughter and ſole heir of the ſaid Henry, became forfeited into the king's hands; the ſaid Thomas earl of Lancaſter being declared a rebel, and executed as ſuch; Alice his relict having alſo, for her and her heirs, renounced all claim to the premiſes) to him and his heirs for ever[6].

[2] In his time, 1214, the caſtles of Donington and Pontefract were for ſome time retained by king John in his own hands; allowing £40. a year for the cuſtody of them; but in 1215 Donington was reſtored to John de Laci upon hoſtages; and in the following year the caſtle was demoliſhed.

[3] He was buried in the choir of the abbey church of Stanlaw; as were his father and grandfather, with theſe epitaphs:

1. "Hic ſepelitur Heros generoſus in urbe Rogerus,
Conjuge cum charâ, quam mors proſtravit amara,
Forti Sampſoni ſimilis fuit, atque leoni;
Tauro cornuto pungendi ſemper acuto.
Tectum torace nullus ſuperare valebat;
Regnum cum pace miles ſub Rege regebat.
Nullus Trojanus par ſibi fuit in probitate,
Victor in ætate fuit alter Veſpaſianus.
Sectas Perſarum, Medorum, Sparſiatarum,
Græcos, Cretenſes, Romanos bella moventes,
Hic dum pugnavit, pugnans pugnando donavit,
Vivus ut optavit, defuncto tumba paratur.
Pictor adornavit petram ſub quâ tumulatur,
Inferni clauſtro careat perflatus ab Auſtro.
Sit prece conventus fulgoris in arce retentus.
Inclita matrona, digna Matilda corona,
Sit cum matre pia Chriſti conjuncta Maria,
Qui legis abſque morâ, pro fundatoribus ora."

2. "Egregii Comitis an hæc eſt tumba Johannis,
Hoſtibus immitis cunctis dum vixerat annis.
Jure ſuum Comitem luget Lincolnia mitem
Quem plangunt unum Ceſtrenſia caſtra tribunum.
Anglia flet ritè tali caruiſſe Quirite,
Et Stanlaw bonum dolet amiſiſſe Patronum.
Chriſto devotus miles fuit undique notus,

3. "Mors probat Edmundi brevis eſt quod gloria mundi
Mendax & mundus, quamvis quandoque ſecundus.
Scandere qui primò cum cepit lapſus in ymo;
Monſtrat quod mundus eſt labilis, atque rotundus:
Nilque fit in mundo, quod non pertranſit eundo,
Protinus à mundo, cum ſit quaſi vas ſine fundo.
Ergo det Edmundo Deus à contamine mundo Uti jocundo vultu Chriſti redeundo.

[4] This great lord died at his manſion houſe in Chancery-lane, in the ſuburbs of London, now called Lincoln's Inn; and was buried at St. Paul's church, in the new work which was of his own foundation, under a goodly monument, with his armed portraiture croſs-legged, as one that had taken a voyage to the Holy Land. [6] Eſch. 16 Edw. II.

Upon this grant, on the 25th of the ſame month, Roger Beler (then, as ſhould ſeem, either eſcheator or ſheriff of Leiceſter) was commanded to give him poſſeſſion in the premiſſes: "Et mandatum eſt Rogero Beler, quod caſtrum, villam, manerium, & honorem prediƈtum, cum omnibus pertinentiis, prefato Hugoni, vel ejus attornato in hâc parte, liberet, tenenda juxta tenorem carte, &c. vult enim rex ipſum Rogerum inde ex nunc erga regem exonerari. Teſte rege, apud Threſque, xxv die Julii."

John de Hardreſhull was joined, in 1322, with Nicholas Grey, in the governorſhip of Donington and Melbourne caſtles[2].

Neither the elder nor the younger Hugh Deſpenſer enjoyed their proſperity long; the father being executed at Briſtol in 1325, and the ſon at Hereford in 1326[3].

In the firſt parliament of king Edward III. which met March 7, 1326-7, the proceedings began with the reverſal of the attainder of Thomas earl of Lancaſter, on the plea that he had not been tried by his peers, and on the petition of his brother Henry, to whom the title was reſtored[4], but not the eſtates; for, on the attainder of the younger Hugh le Deſpenſer, the manor of Loughborough was immediately given to Henry de Beaumont and Alice his wife; and all the other lordſhips of the ſaid Hugh in this county, particularly the town and caſtle of Donington, were given, March 4, 1327-8, by virtue of the before-mentioned entail, to Edmund de Woodſtock earl of Kent, the then king's uncle[5]; who in 1330, by the procurement of Roger lord Mortimer, the queen's minion[6], was condemned of high treaſon, and beheaded at Wincheſter March 19, 1330; and, by the inquiſition after his death, was found ſeiſed, inter alia, of the caſtle and manor of Caſtle Donington, with its members, wapentakes, and appurtenances; which manor was parcel of the earldom of Cheſter, but by what portion of ſervice was unknown; alſo that there were certain foreign rents there, ariſing out of the towns of Rodington, Wilington, Leike, and Tykenhale; alſo two wapentakes, Plumtre and Riſele, pertaining to the manor of Donington. Likewiſe the underwritten knights fees:

William ſon of William held of the ſaid earl in Plumtre half a knight's fee, value £10.; the lady of Bingham held of the ſaid earl in Clipſton juxta Plumtre, one quarter of a knight's fee, value 100*s.*

William de Grey held of the ſaid earl in Hikeling one quarter of a knight's fee, value 100*s.*; Thomas de Chaworth held of the ſaid earl in Edlewalton one quarter of a knight's fee, value 100*s.*

John de la Botelarie held of the ſaid earl in Donington the tenth part of a knight's fee, value 40*s.*

William de Belton held of the ſaid earl in the ſame town the fortieth part of a knight's fee, value 6*s.* 8*d.*

Richard Baret held of the ſaid earl in Donington the fortieth part of a knight's fee, value 6*s.* 8*d.*

William de Saxton held of the ſaid earl in Donington the third part of a knight's fee, value 26*s.* 8*d.*[7]

After the death of Edmund earl of Kent, Roger lord Mortimer earl of March procured from the king a grant of the ſaid manor and caſtle for Geoffrey his ſon; but he enjoyed them not long; for, the ſame year, on the petition of Margaret widow of Edmund late earl of Kent, and of Edmund their ſon, the attainder was removed; and the ſon reſtored to the title and eſtates[8]; which he did not enjoy more than two years[9]. He is ſtated by Dugdale[10] to have died unmarried; but in 1346 we find that Alice counteſs of Kent, probably his widow, (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 30*s.* for three quarters of one knight's fee in Caſtle Donington, parcel of the honour of Cheſter and Huntingdon[11].

Having no iſſue, the title and eſtate devolved to his brother John Plantagenet, earl of Kent, who at his deceaſe, in 1352, held the caſtle of Donington, with the appurtenances, of the king in capite; alſo the tenth part of one knight's fee in Donington, which John de la Boteler held; the tenth part of one knight's fee there, which William de Belton held; the fortieth part of one knight's fee there, which Richard Baret held; the thirteenth part of one knight's fee there, which William de Saxton held; and the advowſon of the hoſpital of St. John at Donington; and Joan, daughter of earl Edmund, and wife of ſir Thomas de Holland, knt. was his ſiſter and next heir[12].

This ſir Thomas de Holland was a knight of the Garter; and, in right of his wife, was in 1353 created earl of Kent; who had iſſue by her three ſons; Thomas, his ſucceſſor; Edmund; and John, earl of Huntingdon, afterwards duke of Exeter. After his death, it was found, in 1360, that he held the manor of Donington (as of the right and inheritance of Joan his wife, who was then living) of the king, by the ſervice of one knight's fee and a half; and that Thomas de Holland was his eldeſt ſon and heir[13].

The counteſs Joan was married, ſecondly, to William de Montacute earl of Saliſbury; and, thirdly, to Edward the Black Prince, by whom ſhe was mother to king Richard II; and, in 1385, it was found that the king's moſt dear mother Joan princeſs of Wales, deceaſed, held the town and caſtle of Caſtle Donington, with the appurtenances, of the king, as of the honour of Cheſter; and that Thomas Holland earl of Kent was her eldeſt ſon and next heir[14].

In 1396, it was found that Thomas Holland earl of Kent died ſeiſed of the town of Caſtle Donington, which was held of the king, as of the honour of Cheſter; and that Thomas Holland was his ſon and heir[15].

In 1399, it was found that Thomas Holland earl of Kent (who had forfeited his lands for treaſon) was ſeiſed of the manor of Caſtle Donington, with the appurtenances[16]; and in the ſame year, ſir Hugh Shirley was appointed governor of Donington caſtle by king Henry IV. who at that time poſſeſſed the lordſhip and caſtle of Donington, with divers other lands and manors, as couſin and heir to Thomas earl of Lancaſter, who had been attainted; and who, in 1401, united and incorporated them with the dutchy of Lancaſter[17].

In 1405, it was found that Thomas Holland, late earl of Kent, died ſeiſed of the caſtle and town of Donington, with the appurtenances; that they were held of the lord Henry prince of Wales, as of the honour of Cheſter; and that Edmund de Holland, who was then aged 21 years and upwards, was brother of the aforeſaid Thomas[18], and heir to all the caſtles, manors, and lands whereof he died ſeiſed, excepting only the caſtles and manors of Donington, the wapentakes of Riſley, co. Derby, and Allerton, co. Notts; the manor of Gretham, with lands in Staynwell; the manors of Horblyng, Segebrok, and Thorley, with the free rent of Hay, and knights fees, co. Lincoln [1].

In 1411, Elizabeth wife of John late earl of Kent died ſeiſed in dower of the advowſon of the hoſpital of St. John in Donington, held of the king in capite [2].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Caſtle Donington was rated at £3. 10*s*.; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum.

A feoffment was made by king Henry VI. by ſeveral letters patent, dated Nov. 29, 1443, July 7, 1444, Feb. 23, and June 29[3], 1445, of divers parcels of the dutchy of Lancaſter (amongſt which were the caſtle, lordſhip, and manor, of Caſtle Donington, with all its members and appurtenances) to Thomas [Beckinton], biſhop of Bath and Wells [keeper of the privy ſeal], John Carpenter biſhop elect of Worceſter, Walter biſhop of Norwich (by the name of Walter Lybert [Hart] clerk), John biſhop of St. David's (by the name of John Delabere, clerk), John viſcount Beaumont, Ralph lord de Sudeley, ſir John de Beauchamp and ſir Edmund Hungerford, knights, John Hampton and John Noreys, eſquires (and others, who in 1460 were dead); to be held by fealty only, without any other ſervice; reſerving to the king, in right of the dutchy, all advowſon of churches, abbeys, priories, vicarages, chantries, chapels, hoſpitals, or other eccleſiaſtical benefices whatever, belonging to the caſtles, manors, or lands, ſo veſted in them as feoffees. One of the laſt public acts of king Henry VI. was a renewal of this feoffment in 1460, with the addition of ſeveral names (amongſt which was William de Wainfleet biſhop of Wincheſter, and John biſhop of Lincoln, by the name of John Chidwick, clerk; with Robert Stillyngton, William Say, James Goldwell, Robert Wodelarke, William Weſtbury, William Millyngton, and Thomas Barker, clerks) in the places of thoſe who were dead [4].

The ſtewardſhip of Donington caſtle and manor was granted, early in 1461, to ſir William Haſtings, knt. a faithful adherent, who, for having aſſiſted in his eſcape from Middleham, and other marks of attachment to his cauſe, had incurred high pains and penalties in the preceding reign [5]. He was rewarded alſo with the ſtewardſhip of divers other manors; was made conſtable of Leiceſter, Donington, and Nottingham caſtles; ranger of Leiceſter Foreſt, and the parks called Leiceſter Frith, Burrow park, and Tooley park; warden of Shirewood; chief foreſter of Needwood and Duffield, and ſurveyor of that honour; had grants of the manors of Barrow, Dunnington on the Heath, and Loughborough; and was afterwards created a baron [6].

Feb. 18, 1461-2, the manor and lordſhip of Donington (which Catharine ducheſs of Norfolk held for life, remainder to William lord viſcount Beaumont) were granted to ſir William Haſtings and his heirs [7].

In 1463, it was found that William lord viſcount Beaumont, who had been attainted of high treaſon, was at that time ſeiſed of the manor of Donington [8].

Oct. 26, 1464, king Edward IV. granted the reverſion of the manor and lordſhip of Caſtle Donington (parcel of the poſſeſſions of Catharine dutcheſs of Norfolk) to ſir William Haſtings [9].

There were 70 families in this pariſh in 1564.

The manor continued in the crown, as belonging to the duchy of Lancaſter, until king Charles I. by letters patent, bearing date Sept. 9, 1628, in the fourth year of his reign, under the great ſeal of England, and under the ſeal of the County Palatine of the duchy of Lancaſter, granted the ſame to ſir Edward Dichfield [10], knt. John Hilord, Humphrey Clark, and Francis Moſſe, with the rights, members, and appurtenances; and they, by deed of bargain and ſale inrolled in Chancery Oct. 26, 1633, 9 Charles I. in conſideration of £1450, paid by ſir John Coke and his ſon John, ſold the ſame, in the ſame large and ample manner as the crown granted to them, paying an annual fee-farm rent to the crown of £54. 5*s*. 2*d*.

Sir Matthew Lambe, father of the preſent lord viſcount Melbourne, married with the heireſs of the Coke family [11]; and the manor now belongs to his lordſhip, but not the ſoil; which king Edward IV. had granted by patent to the copyholders and freeholders, and to their heirs and aſſigns for ever.

By indenture dated Nov. 6, 1609, Edward Ferrers, of London, mercer, and Francis Philips, of London, gent. ſold to Walter Haſtings, of Kirby, Thomas Spenſer, of Lincoln's Inn, eſq. and Thomas Harvie, of Aſhby de la Zouch, gent. "omnia illæ duo molendina granatica, & duo molendina fullonica ſua, vocata Donington mills, alias dicta Caſtle Donington mills, &c. infra manerium de Donington; necnon parcellam terre ibidem, vocat' Magott & Walton, &c. &c. [2] This lady was the relict of John Plantagenent earl of Kent, who died in 1352; ſhortly after which, vowing chaſtity, ſhe was ſolemnly veiled a nun, by William de Edendon, then biſhop of Wincheſter, at Waverle in that dioceſe *; but afterwards, quitting her profeſſion, was clandeſtinely married to ſir Euſtace Dabriſcheſcourt, knight, in a certain chapel of the manſion houſe of Robert de Brome, a canon in the collegiate church of Wyngham, without any licence from the archbiſhop of Canterbury, by one ſir John Ireland, a prieſt, before the ſun-riſing, upon Michaelmas-day 1360; for which tranſgreſſion both ſhe and her ſaid huſband, being perſonally convented before the ſame archbiſhop, at his manor houſe of Maghfeld, 7 Id. April, the archbiſhop, for their penance, enjoined that they ſhould find a prieſt, to celebrate divine ſervice daily in the chapel of our Lady within the church of Wyngham (by reaſon that the marriage was thus unlawfully ſolemnized in that pariſh), for them the ſaid ſir Euſtace and Elizabeth, and him the ſaid archbiſhop; and that the prieſt ſhould every day ſay over the ſeven penitential Pſalms, with the Litany, for them, and all faithful Chriſtians; as alſo Placebo and Dirige for all the faithful deceaſed. Likewiſe that every morning, being riſen from his bed, he ſhould ſay five Pater Noſters and Aves kneeling, looking upon the wounds of the image on the Crucifix, and as many every night in like ſort. Moreover, that they the ſaid ſir Euſtace and Elizabeth ſhould find another prieſt, continually reſiding with one of them, to celebrate divine ſervice for them, in the ſame manner as the prieſt at Wyngham was to do; and to ſay the ſeven penitential Pſalms, Litany, Placebo, and Dirige, as abovesaid. He likewiſe enjoined the ſaid Elizabeth, that every day during her whole life ſhe ſhould ſay the ſeven penitential Pſalms, and the fifteen gradual Pſalms, with the Litany, Placebo and Dirige, and commendation of ſouls for the quick and the dead. And alſo appointed him the ſaid ſir Euſtace and her, that, the next day after any carnal copulation had betwixt them, they ſhould competently relieve ſix poor people; and both of them that day to abſtain from ſome diſh of fleſh or fiſh, whereof they did moſt deſire to eat. And laſtly, that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth ſhould once every year go on foot to viſit that glorious martyr St. Thomas of Canterbury; and once every week, during her life, take no other food but bread and drink and a meſs of pottage, wearing no ſmock, and eſpecially in the abſence of her huſband. By her teſtament, dated at Bedhampton, April 20, 1411, ſhe bequeathed her body to be buried in the church of the Friers Minors at Wincheſter, in the tomb of John earl of Kent, her late huſband, without any worldly ſolemnity; appointing that five tapers, each of them of five pounds weight, ſhould burn about her corpſe upon her funeral day; and died on the 6th of June next enſuing. In 1722, 54 freeholders polled from this pariſh; and in 1775, we find 97 names.

Nov. 2, 1734, Jane Webb, the tall woman, born at Caſtle Donington, was preſented to their Majeſties and the Royal Family. She was then 22 years of age, and upwards of ſeven feet high[4].

In 1737, an act was paſſed, for reducing the ſtint of the horſe or beaſt paſtures and ſheep common, within the manor, town, and pariſh of Caſtle Donington; by which it appears that the whole of the open and common paſtures contained about 490 acres, in which the ſeveral freeholders and copyholders within the manor, and other perſons, had a right to depaſture in the whole 491 horſes or beaſts at their election (which right was called a horſe-gate or beaſt-gate), from May 1 till November 11, in every year; and alſo a right to depaſture 4705 ſheep in the common and open fields of Donington at open time, and on the ſaid beaſt-paſture from the Friday before St. Luke till the 20th of February following; and that it was found by experience that the ſaid paſtures were not ſufficient to ſupport and maintain ſo large and numerous a ſtock of horſes or beaſts, but that the ſame were eaten up early in the ſummer, ſo that little or nothing remained for the keep of ſo large a ſtock for great part of the time they were ſo depaſtured; many of them were almoſt ſtarved, and forced to live chiefly on water, which occaſioned diſtempers among the cattle, and frequently death; and many of the ſheep, from being too numerous, often died of hunger. The prayer therefore to parliament was, to confirm an agreement, for reducing one fourth from the beaſt-gates, and one half from the ſheep-common. All which was accordingly confirmed.

In 1770, an act was paſſed for dividing and incloſing a common or waſte ground, called Derby Hills, containing about 300 acres, parcel of the manor of Caſtle Donington, in the counties of Leiceſter and Derby. In this act ſir Peniſton Lambe, bart. is deſcribed as lord of the manor of Caſtle Donington, and lord of the ſoil of the ſaid common or waſte ground; and the ſaid ſir Peniſton Lambe, ſir Henry Harpur, bart. Richard Sale, John Bakewell, and others, as entitled to right of common in and upon the ſaid common or waſte ground. Two acres are directed to be allotted to the headborough or other officer of Derby Hills for the time being, for the repair of the highways; the herbage to be taken by the lord of the manor, for his right of ſoil; the reſidue to be proportionably divided amongſt thoſe who were intereſted therein.

In 1778, an act was paſſed for incloſing, within the lordſhip and pariſh of Caſtle Donington, ſeveral open fields, meadows, and common paſtures, containing about 2300 acres (viz. 1400 acres of arable or field land, 290 acres of meadow land, and 610 acres of common paſture land, called The Cow Paſtures and Horſe Commons, or thereabout.) In this act Peniſton lord Melbourne in the kingdom of Ireland is deſcribed as lord of the manor of Caſtle Donington; Leonard Foſbrooke, eſq. as impropriator of the great tithes of the ſaid lordſhip, and entitled to the tithes of corn, grain, and hay, ariſing within thoſe parts of the ſaid lordſhip, ſubject to the payment of tithes, except the tithes of part of a certain meadow within the ſaid lordſhip, called The Tipnal Meadow; and alſo, as patron of the vicarage; the Rev. John Dalby, clerk, as vicar, and entitled to certain parcels of glebe lands and meadow ground, to certain other parcels of land called Augmentation Land, to all the vicarial tithes ariſing within the ſaid lordſhip, and to certain moduſes or ſums of money in lieu of tithes of ſeveral parcels of land in the fields intended to be incloſed; the Rev. Charles Shuttleworth, clerk, as rector of Aſton upon Trent, in the county of Derby, entitled to the tithes of hay of ſeveral parcels of land in the ſaid Tipnal meadow; and the ſaid Peniſton lord Melbourne, Leonard Foſbrooke, and John Dalby, Francis earl of Huntingdon, Richard Cheſlyn, eſq. Joſeph Greaves, eſq. Thomas Kirkland, doctor of phyſick, and ſeveral other perſons, are deſcribed as the owners and proprietors of the reſidue of the ſaid fields, meadows, and paſtures. Four acres to be ſet out for gravel pits; the herbage of which to belong to the lord of the manor in lieu of his manerial right; and a compenſation to be made to him for his right of fiſhing in certain parts in the open meadows. The impropriator to have two thirteenths of the open field, land, and commons, or fenced cloſes; one eighth of the meadow ground; one tenth of the cow paſtures and horſe commons; and ſuch part of the reſidue as ſhall be equal to one tenth of the old incloſures; out of which the vicar to have a portion of the annual value of £43.; with a farther compenſation for his glebe, and for ſuch moduſes as had uſually been paid him; the ſaid allotments to be in lieu of all tithes and payments, except mortuaries, ſurplice-fees, and ſuch moduſes as are not exonerated by exchange. The rector of Aſton to have an eighth part of ſuch meadow ground as was ſubject to pay tithes to him. A proportion to be ſet out for the owner of an antient reddine rent, for many years claimed by the proprietors of the ſite of an antient diſſolved hoſpital in Caſtle Donington. And two parcels of meadow ground, called The Stead Holm and The Muſt-gotten (about which doubts had ariſen), are directed to be divided by this act. The turnpike-road from Loughborough to Derby, and from Sawley Ferry to Aſhby de la Zouch, not to be altered.

The open fields, including the commons therein, by the ſurveys taken under the laſt-mentioned act, were found to contain 1713 acres, 2 roods, and 35 perches; the open meadows, 299 acres, 2 roods, 36 perches; and the common paſtures, 457 acres, 3 roods, 17 perches; and the antient incloſures, 333 acres, and 30 perches (excluſive of Donington Park and the lands within the antient boundary thereof in this pariſh, being 769 acres, 1 rood, 27 perches), making the lands in the whole pariſh amount to 3573 acres, 3 roods, and 25 perches. The ſoil of the lordſhip in general is a fine rich loam; and the meadows which lie adjoining the Trent are as valuable as any that are in the neighbourhood of that river.

The Turk's Head Inn is in the ſtreet that leads out of Bond Gate going up toward the church. It is called Apes gate in old writings, and is now commonly ſo diſtinguiſhed from Bond Gate.

There are now in Caſtle Donington 360 families; and, from the accurate enquiries lately ordered by Government to be made to aſcertain the population of the kingdom, it appears there are near 2000 inhabitants.

This place is noted for a great variety of religious ſects; as are ſeveral of the neigbouring pariſhes.

DONINGTON

DONINGTON PARK

In Domeſday-book it is ſaid, "In Dunitone there is a wood twelve furlongs long, and eight broad." Theſe dimenſions correſpond ſo nearly with thoſe of the antient boundary of Donington Park, that there can be no doubt but it occupies what was the wood mentioned in Domeſday-book; and from the great number of very old and venerable oaks now remaining therein, it is probable that many of them may be nearly coeval with that antient record.

This beautiful domain continued from the period of the Conqueſt the property of the barons of Haulton, till, on the death of Henry Lacy earl of Lincoln and baron of Haulton in 1310, it was brought in marriage by Alice counteſs of Lincoln, his daughter and heir, to Thomas Plantagenet, earl of Lancaſter, Leiceſter, and Derby, who alſo became baron of Haulton.

On his attainder in 1321, Donington Park, being forfeited to the crown, was granted by king Edward II. to Hugh le Deſpenſer the younger; who being afterwards alſo attainted, this manſion was given by king Edward III. in 1327-8 to his uncle, Edmund de Woodſtock, earl of Kent; who, being in his turn attainted, it was given in 1330 to Geoffrey ſon of Roger Mortimer earl of March; but was reſtored, in the ſame year, to Edmund ſon of the earl of Kent, his father's attainder being then reverſed. From him it paſſed to his brother John; and afterward to his ſiſter Joan, who brought it in marriage to ſir Thomas de Holland, knight of the Garter, who in right of his wife was created earl of Kent; whoſe grandſon Thomas was attainted in 1399, when Donington Park again reverted to the crown; and in 1401 was united by king Henry IV. to the dutchy of Lancaſter; and, as ſuch, continued to be the property of the kings of England.

In an act of reſumption paſſed in 1485, proviſion is made that it ſhall not affect a gift or grant made by the letters patent of king Henry VII. under the ſeal of the dutchy of Lancaſter, to Robert Staunton, or William Staunton, of the offices of conſtableſhip and ſtewardſhip of Donington, or of the offices of bailliſhip and parkerſhip of Donington [1].

In the ſucceeding reign, Donington Park was granted, under the dutchy ſeal, for a term of years, together with the horſe-mill in Donington, and five copyhold houſes called The Church Tenements, to Thomas Gray [2], eſq. of Langley; whoſe laſt will, dated Jan. 10, 1564-5, is here copied:

"I Thomas Gray, of Caſtall Donyngton Parke, co. Leyc. make this my laſt will and teſtament, &c. My body to be buried in the mydell of the chauncell of Caſtle Donyngton church, even before the lecture where cuſtomably the Epiſtell hath been of old tyme ſaid or ſonge upon feſtival dais, with a plain marble ſtone over me, to be ſet up upon certain pillors as the proportion thereof ſhall ſerve, being ſett about one yard high; and underneath the ſame in ſight to be made a lyvely picture of Death, for remembrance of all perſons and creatures to behold, with ſuch epitaphe and picture graven in and upon the ſaid ſtone as ſhall be before my death deviſed, or after by the device and good diſcretion of my executors, &c. For the breaking of the ground there, I give 6*s*. 8*d*. I give unto my ſon Thomas Gray my clock and bell, as an heirelome pertaining to Langley, &c.; and all my diaper ſtuffe of napery (except one diaper table cloth now given unto Katharine Gray my daughter by the counteſs of Huntingdon), when he ſhall come to his full age of 21 years and be married; and alſo all my game and mark of ſwans, &c. Alſo I give and bequeath unto my baſtard ſon Thomas Gray, the five copyholds tenements, called the Church Tenements, &c. in Caſtle Donington aforeſaid, &c. and the horſe-mill in Donington, &c. which I have under the duchy ſeale of Lancaſter. And as concerning the ordering and diſpoſing of all my meſſuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, I will that Maria my wife ſhall have them all, as well free as copyhold; and all other my farmes, &c. until my ſaid ſon and heire ſhould come to his full age of 21 years, &c. if ſhe does ſo long live ſole and unmarried, ſo that ſhe give unto every of my three daughters, i. e. Dorothy, Katherine, and Alice, each of them an hundred marks apiece, &c. And if they all die, then the money, &c. to be wholly unto my ſaid wife, ſave only one hundred pounds thereof to be paid unto my brother Richard Gray's own children, and my ſiſter Alice Parſons' children, and unto my ſiſter Eliz. Willoughby and her ſon Richard, or unto ſo many of them as ſhall be then living, &c.; and over and beſides that, for the loſing my ſaid brother Richard Gray's patent of his annuitye of 40*s*. in Touton, I give unto him £30. to be paid unto him, or unto his naturall children, any cauſe or exception before-mentioned to the contrary notwithſtanding. I doo conſtitute my ſaid well-beloved wife, my ſon and heir, and of faithful truſt, and my dearly beloved, in part above others, Francis Cave, Nicholas Beamont, eſquires, and Michael Willoughby, gent. my true and lawful executors. Witneſs, Richard Hall, Thomas Wrighte, and John Pyme [3]."—Mr. Gray died in 1565; and his will was proved on the 26th of October that year. His arms were, Barry of ſix, Argent and Azure, within a border gobony Argent and Azure; on a canton per pale, Or and Gules, a boar paſſant Argent, within a border Ermine; Plate CIX. fig. 23.

In 1575, queen Elizabeth, by her letters patent under the ſeal of her highneſs's dutchy of Lancaſter, bearing date May 14, in the 14th year of her reign, granted "the herbage, pawnage, and browſing of the ſaid park, and the office of the cuſtody and keeperſhip of the ſame park, with the lodges there, and the cuſtody and game of all the deer from time to time therein being, with all and every the vails, fees, profits, and commodities whatſoever, to the ſaid office in any wiſe belonging, and of antient time due and accuſtomed," unto ſir George Turpyn, knight, for a term of years.

April 19, 1579, the queen demiſed to Thomas Gray, eſq. ſon of Thomas Gray, deceaſed, late of Langley, eſq. his two corn-mills and two fulling mills, called Donington mills, within the lordſhip of Caſtle Donington, with the fiſhery of the dam or pool and floodgates of the mills aforeſaid, with all the ſoke and ſuit of the ſaid mills, &c.; and alſo one parcel of land called Magot of Walton; with a piece of meadow called Le Meads; one other parcel of meadow in Swyneholme; one other parcel called Black-buſhes; one other called Sharloe Acre; one other called Typnall Bank, &c.; alſo xxxiii acres and one rood of arable land, called Lordland, lying in the fields of Donington aforeſaid; and one dovecote built within the caſtle of Caſtle Donington, &c.; one cloſe called the Rydings, with five pence for yields of the ſame, &c.; one acre of meadow in Typnalls, &c.; one other parcel of meadow in Swyneholme; and one other parcel of meadow called Steadholme bank, &c. to hold for XLI years, to commence at when the term of XLI years granted by king Edward VI. 12 Nov. anno 4°, ſhould be expired.

Thomas Gray the younger ſold his term, Oct. 28, 1590, to Ralph Blackwall, of Wendeſley, co. Derby; by whom it was again ſold to ſir Francis Haſtings, April 23, 1594, for £750.

William Turpyn, eſq. by deed, dated Oct. 3, 1590, aſſigned the aboveſaid letters patent, with certain others, with all his eſtate, intereſt, and term of years to come, in the ſaid park and premiſſes, to ſir George Haſtings, of Loughborough, co. Leiceſter, knt.; and on the 25th of the ſame month, queen Elizabeth, by her letters patent under the ſeal of the duchy of Lancaſter, reciting the former letters patent being ſurrendered, granted a leaſe for 41 years to ſir George Haſtings, knt. of the ſaid park and premiſſes, reſerving a rent to the crown of £5. 2*s*.

Oct. 25, 1590, Donington Park was granted to Robert earl of Eſſex, Gilly Merick, and Henry Lyndley, for 41 years from Eaſter then laſt paſt; which, June 4, 1595, was again ſold to ſir George Haſtings, of Gopſal.

[3] Reg. Morriſon, quatern. 29. fol. 2. Teſtam. Tho. Grey, dat. 10 Jan. 1564.

Feb. 7, 1594-5, queen Elizabeth, by letters patent of this date, under the great ſeal of England, and alſo under the ſeal of the duchy of Lancaſter, granted the reverſion in fee-ſimple of the ſaid park[1], with other premiſſes, to Robert earl of Eſſex, Gilley Meyrick, and Henry Lindley, eſqrs. their heirs and aſſigns.

June 4, 1595, the ſaid earl (by the titles of the right honourable Robert earl of Eſſex and Ewe, viſcount Hereford and Bourchier, lord Ferrers of Chartley, lord Bourchier and Lovayne, knight of the moſt noble order of the Garter, and maſter of the horſe to the queen's majeſty), Gilley Meyrick, and Henry Lyndley, of London, in conſideration of £3000. granted the ſaid park, called Donington Park, otherwiſe Caſtle Donington Park, with all the rights, members, and appurtenances, to ſir George Haſtings, knt. then of Gopſal[2] (which he had purchaſed, and ſeated himſelf there, on his marriage) his heirs and aſſigns.

Sir George Haſtings, on the death of his brother Henry, Dec. 14, 1595, ſucceeded as fourth earl of Huntingdon; and a letter from him, relative to his brother's funeral, and on the death of his own ſon, Francis, dated "Donington Park, Dec. 23, 1595," has been already printed; together with his account as adminiſtrator to his brother[3]. By this noble lord the manor of Melbourn was added to the family eſtates[4].

On ſucceeding to the title, he removed to the family reſidence at Aſhby; and in 1603, (his eldeſt ſon being dead) by indenture dated June 20 in that year, in conſideration of a marriage then already had between Henry Haſtings lord Haſtings and the lady Elizabeth his then wife, one of the daughters and heirs of Ferdinando late earl of Derby, and of 4000*l.* paid to the earl; and for the proviſion of a jointure for lady Dorothy counteſs of Huntingdon, then wife of the ſaid earl; and alſo a jointure for the ſaid Elizabeth lady Haſtings; and for the eſtabliſhment of the lands, &c. in the name and poſterity of the earl; covenants with Walter Haſtings, of Kirby, co. Leic. (brother of the earl), ſir Robert Spenſer, of Oldthorpe, co. Northampton, knt. ſir Henry Haſtings, knt. ſon and heir of ſir Edward Haſtings, knt. brother of the earl, and ſir John Leigh, knt. ſon and heir apparent of ſir Thomas Leigh, of Stoneley, co. Warwick, knt.; that he the ſaid earl, before Chriſtmas next after the date of this covenant, at the coſts of the earl, do convey to Walter, &c. the manors of Thringſton and Oſgathorpe, with the lands, &c. the appurtenances, the impaled or incloſed grounds called Donington Park, in the pariſh of Donington, and all other the earl's lands in Thringeſton and Donington; the advowſons of the rectory of Oſgathorpe and vicarage of Belton; the meſſuage in Carſwell, co. Stafford, purchaſed by the earl; together with a rent of £8. iſſuing out of the manor of Thorpe Baſſett, co. Ebor.; to the uſe of the earl and lady Dorothy his wife, for their two lives, without impeachment of waſte during the life of the earl; remainder to Henry lord Haſtings and lady Elizabeth and their heirs male; remainder to the heirs of Henry lord Haſtings; remainder to the heirs of Francis late earl of Huntingdon; remainder to the heirs of George the ſaid earl:—In like manner to convey to the ſame purpoſes, the manors of Gopſal and Newbold Verdon, with the meſſuages, members, and appurtenances; Alton Grange, near Aſhby de la Zouch; and all the earl's lands, &c. in Gopſal, Newbold Verdon, Braſtoft, Naneby, Barleſton, Twycroſs, and Alton Grange; to the uſe of the earl for life (if lord Haſtings ſo long live) without impeachment of waſte; remainder after the death of lord Haſtings (if he die during the life of the earl) to the lady Elizabeth and her aſſigns, for the life of lady Dorothy; and, after the deceaſe of lady Dorothy, to the uſe of the ſaid earl, without impeachment, for life; remainder to lord Haſtings and lady Elizabeth and the heirs male of lord Haſtings by lady Elizabeth; remainder to the heirs male of lord Haſtings; remainder to the heirs male of Francis late earl of Huntingdon; remainder to the right heirs of earl George:—In like manner to convey to the ſame parties, the manors of Aller and Allermoore and Canford and the mines there; the pariſh of Bronſey, with the mines there, co. Somerſet and Dorſet; the manors of Meaſham and Okethorpe, co. Derby; and all lands, royalties, titles, &c. in Aller, Allermore, Canford, Bronſey, Meſham, and Okethorpe; to certain uſes ſpecified in the deed:—In like manner to convey to the ſame parties, the manors of Aſhby de la Zouch, Blaghfordby, alias Blougherby, Packington, Evington, Loughborough, Barrow, Quarndon, the impropriations of Aſhby and Packington, the advowſon of the parſonage of Skeffington, of the vicarages of Aſhby and Packington, the third preſentation of the rectory of Market Boſworth; royalties, &c. in fee farm of Belton, Long Whatton, and Hathern; and rent of £12. iſſuing thereout, to be ſettled on Henry, &c.[5]

Earl George died Dec. 30, 1604; and, Francis lord Haſtings, his eldeſt ſon, having died vitâ patris, Henry his grandſon, then aged 18 years and ſix months, by the inquiſition taken after his death, was found his next heir; and Donington Park is deſcribed as containing 300 acres of paſture, (worth 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*), held of the king, but by what ſervice was unknown[6].

That Henry his grandſon, who ſucceeded as the fifth earl, lived with great hoſpitality and munificence at Aſhby caſtle, the regulations of his houſhold, already printed in p. 594, bear ſufficient teſtimony.

In 1609, the earl of Huntingdon having procured for the corporation of Leiceſter a charter, dated April 17, 1609, empowering them to chuſe their ſtewards and bailiffs, &c. they obliged themſelves in £1000 to chuſe, at every turn, ſuch perſon as he or his heirs male ſhould nominate[1].

In 1620, Mr. Peſtell addreſſed a poetical epiſtle to Elizabeth counteſs of Huntingdon, recommending to her not to pay ſo cloſe an attention as ſhe had generally done to reading[2].

As lord lieutenant of the county, the earl of Huntingdon appears to have conducted himſelf on ſeveral occaſions with conſiderable activity and reſolution. In 1627, he was vindicated in the Star-chamber againſt a charge of impropriety in his public conduct; as he was again in 1628 in the Houſe of Lords.

At the election of knights for the county of Leiceſter, in March 1627-8, Ferdinando lord Haſtings and ſir Edward Hartopp were choſen; though they were oppoſed by ſir Henry Shirley, who had the beſt furtherance of the lady viſcounteſs Beaumont; a circumſtance much reſented by the earl of Huntingdon, between whom and ſir Henry ſome perſonal animoſities had lately taken place, originating from a diſpute concerning field ſports[2]. It is due to the character, however, of ſir Henry Shirley, to ſtate in his own manly words the more immediate cauſe of the provocation.

"To ſir Henry Skipwith, knight, and ſir John Skeffington, knight, two of the lord Huntingdon's deputy-lieutenants in the county of Leiceſter:

"Gentlemen, Oct. 27, 1627.

"I had thought you had known me better, than to have thought I would have a quarrel with Mr. Chetwyn. The king is much bound to my lord for his great care in the office; but I purpoſe not to make him, or any other, judge of this buſineſs: but only the lords of the Star Chamber, though I will acquaint you with what you have heard already.

"Walking in my grounds, this fellow, coming from his lord's houſe, violently aſſaulted me. More I cannot ſay unto you. If any of you, as my friends, will be pleaſed to come to dinner unto me, I ſhall be glad of your company: otherwiſe Sunday is no fit day to travail on; neither do I know of any order or farther cauſe you can take herein; for the order comes too late, when the miſchief is already done.

"It was time for my lord to have taken order when his man went home from his houſe this way. Neither let my lord lieutenant fear any farther harm to his man from me, how baſely ſoever I have been uſed. I too well underſtand my office, and the diſadvantage of breaking the peace, to proſecute that way; and ſcorn to ſet my condition in equal balance with any lord's man; otherwiſe he could not have breathed, after ſuch a great injury done to me, till now. So I reſt your loving friend, HENRY SHIRLEY."

At the commencement of the civil war, the earl of Huntingdon was too infirm to take perſonally an active part; but in June, 1642, he was placed by king Charles I. at the head of the commiſſion of array. Two of his ſons alſo were engaged in the royal ſervice; and of Colonel Henry Haſtings, lord Loughborough[3], the ſecond ſon, many gallant actions are recorded [1]. Of the elder brother, who had a command of a troop of horſe at Edge Hill, in October 1643, lord Clarendon ſpeaks leſs favourably [2].

[1] Carte, MS. from the Corporation Records.

[2] He wrote alſo two different elegies on the death of this lady in 1633.

[2] Sir Henry Shirley told Baron Knight, "if my lord had not denied him hunting on his grounds, he would not have gone on with the buſineſs in the Star-chamber;" and at his coming from London, Feb. 25, 1627-8, ſaid at Mr. Thomas Farnham's houſe in Quorn, "that he would be lieutenant within this twelvemonth: that he could have been lieutenant, if he would, at his coming from London, and have brought the patent in his pocket; and that, if he miſſed the knightſhip of the ſhire, he would be a baron and lieutenant in a twelvemonth: that, at his being in London, he kiſſed the king's hand; and the king ſaid, 'Buckingham, ſir Henry Shirley looks angrily;' and bid my lord duke ſend unto my lord keeper to put him into the commiſſion of the peace."—He added, "that he cared for never a lord in England, except the Lord of Hoſts; that it was a fine thing for my lord to deny him hawking in his ground! and that he was glad my lord had no more ground to hawk in; that he had a ſpirit as well as my lord, and my lord ſhould hear from him within three weeks; for, no man would deny a gentleman, for I am a gentleman."—Being aſked by Gilbert Barker, "Sir, you know, I hope, my lord is a gentleman?" He anſwered, "I know not that; but, if my hawk had flown into any lord's parlour, I would have followed my hawk."

[3] To this noble lord his kinſman Sir Aſton Cokayn addreſſed the following brief poetical epiſtle:

"My lord, when in my youth I (for ſome while)
Did leave the pleaſures of our native iſle,
And travell'd France and Italy; I ſpent
(Methought) my time in a moſt high content;
And was ſo far from longing to return,
That I when I was ſent for home did mourn.
And doubtleſs you are pleas'd, who now enjoy
A calm after a ſtorm of jeopardy.
Homer his Iliads might have writ of you;
And (as our fear prompts) his Odyſſes too.
But we will hope the beſt, and that you may
(As erſt Ulyſſes to his Ithaca)
Return to England (all thoſe tumults paſt),
And find it crown'd with happy days at laſt;
Be reconcil'd to ev'ry one, and know
(Among ſo many friends) no ſingle foe.

Their noble father died, Nov. 14, 1643; but not till he had ſhewn his ſteady attachment to Royalty, by converting his caſtle into a garriſon for the king [3]. Hollar's print of him is copied in Plate LXXXIII.

Ferdinando, the ſixth earl, had been returned to parliament for the county in March 1627-8. By an indenture dated May 9, 1638, and enrolled in Chancery, Ferdinando lord Haſtings, ſon and heir apparent of Henry earl of Huntingdon, and Henry Haſtings, eſq. ſecond ſon of the ſaid earl, in conſideration of 4500*l.* granted to John earl of Bridgewater and Thomas Davis a moiety of the rectory of Mould, alias Mouldeſdale, co. Flint; habend' in fee; warranty againſt grantees and their heirs; covenant to levy a fine in Michaelmas Term next; to accrue to the uſe of grantees in fee; covenant for ſeiſure in fee; power to convey againſt incumbrances by grantees; by earl of Huntingdon, Elizabeth his wife, or otherwiſe; or by the counteſs of Derby.

In 1641, he was called to the Houſe of Peers, as baron Haſtings; and, in November 1643, ſucceeded to the family honours. During the life of his father, he had made Donington Park [4] his reſidence; but, forced thence by the turbulence of captain Hotham, he was compelled to take ſhelter in the garriſon at Aſhby; where his ſufferings are pathetically ſtated in a petition to the Houſe of Peers [5].

In 1649, this noble lord experienced a dreadful domeſtic calamity, in the loſs of his eldeſt (and then only) ſon, Henry lord Haſtings, which happened June 24, in his 19th year, on the day preceding that which was deſtined for his nuptials. The Lachrymæ Muſarum on this occaſion have been already noticed, and thoſe of his noble kinſman lord Falkland cited [6].

The earl of Huntingdon had afterward a fourth ſon, Theophilus, born Dec. 10, 1650; and dying at Donington Park, Feb. 13, 1653, was buried at Aſhby; where he has no monumental inſcription; but one propoſed for him by ſir Aſton Cokayn ſhall be given:

"An Epitaph on my moſt honoured kinſman Ferdinando earl of Huntington, who deceaſed at his houſe in Donington Park about the 48th year of his age, and was buried at Aſhby de la Zouch.

"Here Ferdinando earl of Huntington
Doth lye interr'd under this marble ſtone;
Which will weep tears of dew; if we refrain
To ſhed our tears: yet weeping is in vain;
Nor ſighs nor tears will call him from his urn;
Our griefs then let's to imitation turn.
Let's emulate his worthy parts (for ſuch
His qualities were) and we ſhall merit much:
For each man may report that paſſeth by,
Courteſy and good-nature here doth lye [7]."

Of Theophilus the ſeventh earl (and of his two ſons, George and Theophilus, the eighth and ninth earls, and grandſon Francis the tenth earl) a full account has been already given under Aſhby [8]. He died May 30, 1701; and from that period the manſion at Donington Park has continued the property and principal country reſidence of the noble family of Haſtings, till Francis the laſt earl of Huntingdon, the accompliſhed nobleman whoſe talents and whoſe virtues are immortalized by Dr. Akenſide in one of the moſt animated Odes in the Engliſh language; and who, in 1789, bequeathed it to his nephew, Francis lord Rawdon, the preſent earl of Moira; from whoſe liberality the unfortunate great and the indigent poor have never failed to find an aſylum in this truly hoſpitable manſion.

The family of Rawdon is of great antiquity in this kingdom; their motto, "Et nos quoque tela ſparſimus." They were ſettled, in the reign of king William I, at the town of Rawdon, near Leeds, in Yorkſhire, where they had a conſiderable eſtate, the gift of the Conqueror; part of which, and the manſion-houſe, is ſtill in the poſſeſſion of the earl of Moira.

The following whimſical lines are taken from the original deed of gift mentioned in Weever:

"I William King, the thurd yare of my reign,
Give to Paulyn Roydon, Hope and Hope-Towne,
With all the bounds, both up and downe,
From heven to yerthe, from yerthe to hel,
For the and thyn, there to dwel,
As truly as this king ryght is myn;
For a croſſe-bowe and a arrowe,
When I ſal come to hunt on yarrow.
And in token that this thing is ſooth,
I bit the whyt wax with my tooth,
Before Meg, Maud, and Margery,
And my thurd ſonne, Henry."

In 1793, the antient manſion (of which we have given a view, Plate CIV. from a ſketch by Mr. Malcolm in 1794) was taken down; and, near the ſite thereof, the preſent elegant one hath been erected. Of this two excellent views are given in Plates CV. CVI. by the munificence of the noble owner.

In the DINING-ROOM is a good collection of antient portraits, chiefly of the Haſtings family and their relations; amongſt which are,

King Edward IV; three-quarters.

George duke of Clarence, his brother, attainted in 1477; half-length, in mail armour (miſerably engraved by Godfrey in the Antiquarian Repertory, vol. IV. p. 41; where the articles of attainder are alſo copied from the Rolls of Parliament [9].)

Iſabella, dutcheſs of Clarence; three-quarters.

Henrietta queen of Charles the Firſt; after Vandyck; whole length.

Margaret counteſs of Saliſbury, daughter of George duke of Clarence.

Cardinal Pole; anno 1557, æt. 57.

Mabilia lady Noel, daughter of ſir John Harrington of Exton, and ſiſter to lady Sarah Haſtings (1628), by Cornelius Janſen; three-quarters; very finely painted.

Theodoſia lady Duddeley, another ſiſter of lady Sarah Haſtings (1628); by the ſame hand, and very fine; three-quarters.

Algernon Percy earl of Northumberland, knight of the Garter, and lord high admiral of England 1636; after Vandyck; three-quarters.

[An incomparably fine buſt of Selina the laſt counteſs of Huntingdon is placed on her huſband's tomb at Aſhby de la Zouch [1].]

The Library (a very noble room, 72 feet long by 24) contains a moſt valuable collection of books, and the following portraits.

Over the chimneys.

Monſieur comte d'Artois; whole-length.
Duke d'Angoulême, his ſon; whole-length.

Over the doors; half-lengths.

Galileus.
Andreas Veſalius.
Sir Daniel Heinſius; by Mirevelt.
Dr. Harvey; by Vandyck.

Over the book-caſes; three-quarters.

William earl of Monteith and the counteſs of Monteith, and Edward earl of Conway, paternal anceſtors of the earl of Moira.

Ducheſs of Cleveland.
Ducheſs of Ormond.
Chriſtina queen of Sweden.
Fletcher.
Pope.
Waller.
Butler.
Sir Thomas Wyatt.
Sir John Chardin.
Henry lord Loughborough.
Sir Godfrey Kneller.
Mr. William Prynne, author of Hiſtriomaſtix, 1632.
John Wightwick, ſerjeant at law, anno 1652.

In lord Moira's ſtudy are the three following portraits, half-lengths:

The duke of Berwick, natural ſon of James II. with the Garter; believed to be a ſcarce picture. It hung, till within the memory of many now living, in one of the apartments in Aſhby Caſtle.

The hon. Robert Boyle; by ſir Peter Lely.

Dean Swift; eſteemed an original.

In the other principal apartments is a capital collection of cabinet pictures by the old maſters; and in a cabinet are preſerved ſome valuable miniature pictures; amongſt which is one of queen Elizabeth highly finiſhed: the others, for the moſt part, are of the Huntingdon family; ſeveral by Iſaac Oliver, Hoſkins, and Cooper; which, for ſpirit and exquiſite finiſhing, may rank them amongſt the beſt of the works of thoſe diſtinguiſhed maſters.

The Hall is finiſhed entirely in the Gothic ſtile; with a lofty groined cieling. The windows are enriched with fine ſtained glaſs; the upper one executed by an artiſt in Dublin; and each compartment contains a ſhield with the bearing of different antient alliances of the Haſtings family. The two lower windows are ornamented with ſome curious coats of arms, removed from a chapel at Stoke Pogeis in Buckinghamſhire, founded by Edward lord Loughborough in the time of queen Mary; viz.

Edward I, when Prince of Wales; with a label of five points.

The arms of Spain and England in pale, for Philip and queen Mary, crowned, within the Garter.

Queen Mary, ſingle; finely ornamented, but without the Garter.

Cardinal Pole; having theſe coats: Plantagenet duke of Clarence, Pole, Nevile, Beauchamp, Newburgh, Montacute, Monthermer, Clare, Spencer; a cardinal's hat and croſs [2].

George the firſt earl of the Haſtings family; with theſe coats (but without the Garter); Haſtings, Hungerford and Hungerford, Botreaux, Huſſey, Peverell, Molins, and Courtney. He was buried in the chapel at Stoke Pogeis; and his monument is ſtill remaining, with his effigies and that of his counteſs.

Francis earl of Huntingdon; the ſame as George, all within a Garter.

Henry earl of Huntingdon; alſo within a Garter.

The two laſt were the brother and nephew of the founder of the chapel at Stoke Pogeis.

Edward lord Haſtings of Loughborough; the ſame as the earls of Huntingdon, but without Courtney; with his creſt, and a mullet for difference; within a Garter.

Stafford duke of Buckingham; England, Bohun, Stafford.

Neville; Quarterly, England and Raby; within a Garter.

Stanley earl of Derby; Derby impaled with Haſtings.

To theſe are added ſeveral other curious ſpecimens of painted glaſs of an earlier period, collected from other places; particularly the arms of Richard II. with thoſe of Edward the Confeſſor, Azure, a croſs fleury between five martlets Or, impaled with the arms of France and England quarterly [3].

The ſurrounding Park is one of the brighteſt features in this country; and merits peculiar notice, from its variegated ſwells of fineſt verdure, adorned with the beauteous aſſemblage of noble trees, amongſt which the full ſpreading hawthorn makes a moſt lovely appearance, particularly in the ſpring.

Towards the North is an abrupt termination, called Donington Cliff, which has been always the admiration of the traveller, and the amateur in pictureſque ſcenery. It is richly cloathed with hanging wood, almoſt to the margin of the river Trent, which forms a very ſpacious and noble reach above; while below it is interſected by a large weir at King's mill, a favourite ſpot for the diverſion of angling; here alſo, in the ſeaſon, excellent ſalmon are plentifully taken. A view of the cliff and its appendages, from the oppoſite ſide of the river, is exquiſitely beautiful [4].

Two prints of this ſcene were publiſhed in 1745 by Vivares, from paintings by Smith; and two views in the park, taken by Mr. Malcolm in 1794, are here engraved in Plate CIV.

Returning to the town of Donington, which, with its taper ſpire, has here a moſt beautiful appearance, we come to the handſome bridge over the Trent, which is called Cavendiſh Bridge, in compliment to the Devonſhire family. It was built by ſir Matthew Lambe, in the room of a very convenient ferry which uſed to be here; and the ſtone uſed in it was brought from a quarry about three miles off [5]. For ſome time after the bridge was built, the ſame toll was taken which uſed to be paid at the ferry; half a crown for a chaiſe, and a penny for each perſon whether on foot or on horſeback: but the toll is now reduced to a very moderate one; 6d. for a chaiſe; a waggon with four horſes 10d.; and other things in proportion.

A view of this bridge is given in plate CVII.

DONINGTON HOSPITAL.

dedicated to St. John the Evangeliſt, was a very antient foundation, by John baron of Haulton, and conſtable of Cheſter.

"John lord of Haulton built an hoſpital in Caſtle Donington, whoſe governor was Humphrey, chaplayne; and there was 13 brethren, with ſiſters, but had noe regular habbit, nor obſerving any rule. And theſe take there a ſeconde portion of garbes[1], as the tyth of the church, of the demeaſnes of the ſayd lord Haulton; and alſoe the whole tyth of the fee[2]."

It ſhould ſeem, by the following deed, that the maſter of this hoſpital was occaſionally ſtyled prior:

"Sciant preſentes & futuri, quod ego Johannes conſtabularius Ceſtrie dedi, &c. monachis Cluniacenſibus de Lenton, illum tractum in aquâ de Marſe, qui vocatur Sandwarp, ita quod prefatus tractus advencionibus ejus cedat in proprios uſus predictorum monachorum ad coquinam ſuam, & nullo modo ponatur ad firmam; ſed conventus habeat piſces qui ex ipſo tractu perveniant ad uſus ſuos. Et ſimiliter dedi eiſdem fratribus tertium tractum de piſcariâ meâ de Chilwell ad anniverſarium meum faciendum. Interim prenominati monachi unoquoque anno facient unum anniverſarium pro animâ patris mei & matris mee, & in die obitûs mei renovatur iſtud ſervitium ob memoriam meam. De cetero dedi predictis fratribus meis unam acram terre in Chillewell, in dominico meo, ad ſarciendam, tam longam quam latam, ad faciendam unam manſionem ſibi & ſervicientibus ſuis, qui jam dictum tractum cuſtodiant. Hiis teſtibus; Waltero priore de hoſpitali; fratre Henrico de Dalby; fratre Eliâ priore de Dunington; Anſelino & Gilberto capellanis; Roberto filio Rogeri; Roberto conſtabulario Ceſtrie, filio meo; Radulpho de Furneis; Samſone de Strelleiâ; Ricardo & Gaufrido filiis meis; Hugone clerico de Lentonâ; Willielmo de Davidvillâ; Willielmo, Johanne, & Adamo, ſervientibus prioris; & multis aliis[3]."

In Pope Nicholas's Valor, about 1291, the temporalities of Donington hoſpital, in the deanry of Akeley, were valued at £2. 11*s*. 6*d*.

Among the antient maſters of this houſe were,
Humphrey the chaplain, 1220.
Richard de Staveneſby, 1226.
Oſbert de London, 1230.
William de Marchananton, 1297.

Oct. 12, 1366, John de Chelaſton held the hoſpital of St. John the Evangeliſt, of Caſtle Donington, not taxed, but valued at 3 marks a year, together with a prebend in the collegiate church at Derby, not taxed, but worth 20 marks a year[4].

Sir John Boteler, clerk, had a grant of the collation to the hoſpital of Caſtle Donington from king Edward IV.; which was confirmed to him in 1485[5].

At the diſſolution of religious houſes, this hoſpital is ſtated to have conſiſted only of the ſite of the hoſpital and certain lands there, valued at £3. a year, and 37 Henry VIII. on leaſe to Richard Loo. The hoſpital was founded for the ſupport of certain poor men; but at the diſſolution none were reſident here[6].

It was returned to be worth £3. 13*s*. 4*d*.[7]

Henry earl of Huntingdon, lord Haſtings, Hungerford, Botreaux, Molins, and Moeles, of the noble order of the Garter, knight, lord preſident of the queen's majeſty's council eſtabliſhed in the North parts, by deed, dated 2 October, 17 Eliz. reciting, "that whereas our late ſovereign lord king Edward the Sixth, brother to our ſovereign lady the queen's majeſty that now is, by his letters patents ſealed with the great ſeal of England, bearing date the 22d day of June, in the 7th year of the reign of the ſaid late king[8], did, for and in conſideration of the good, true, and acceptable ſervice done many ways unto the ſaid late king, by his well-beloved and faithful counſellor and kinſman Francis late earl of Huntingdon, father of the ſaid Henry now earl of Huntingdon, did give and grant to the ſaid Francis earl of Huntingdon, his heirs and aſſigns, all and ſingular the premiſes hereafter mentioned." And the ſaid earl Henry, by his ſaid deed, did grant, bargain, ſell, and confirm to John Campion, of Caſtle Donington, co. Leiceſter, yeoman, one meſſuage or tenement in Caſtle Donington aforeſaid, commonly called The Hoſpital, or Spital Houſe, together with all and ſingular the lands, meadows, paſtures, woods, commons, and hereditaments, and appurtenances whatſoever to the ſaid meſſuage or tenement appertaining.

The ſite of the hoſpital, with part of the antient buildings, and the eſtate thereto belonging, continued in the family and name of the Campions until within theſe few years; when it was ſold out in ſeveral parcels by the deſcendant of a female of the family.

The remains of the hoſpital are engraved in Plate CVIII. from a drawing taken by Mr. Pridden in 1792.

This hoſpital was endowed with a ſingular kind of tithes, ariſing from particular lands in Caſtle Donington, which had formerly been the demeſne lands of the founder. Theſe were called Reddine Tithes, and were a twelfth part of what remained after the rectorial tithes were ſet out for the impropriator; and they were enjoyed, with the hoſpital eſtate, until the incloſure of the lordſhip in 1778; when a clauſe was introduced into the act to empower the commiſſioners to ſet out lands to the proprietor for compenſation of the ſaid tithes.

CHANTRY HOUSE.

In 1509, king Henry VIII. granted licence to Harold Staunton and Thomas Heſilrige to found a chantry in the church of St. Edward the king and martyr in Donington; "for one prieſt, to ſing divine ſervice in the chapel of our Lady there, and to pray for the founder's ſoul, and alſo to teach a grammar ſchool there for the erudition of poor ſcholars, within a ſchool-houſe founded by him, within the town of Donington. Its yearly value was £8. 4*s*. 8*d*."[9]

Thomas Grey, leaſe to John Pym, dated Jan. 17, 30 Eliz. 1587, for 21 years, of all that his houſe called the Chantry-houſe, with the kitchen in the yard, and two bays of building adjoining to Atkins' entry, with the gardens, orchards, and yards thereto belonging, with the commons appertaining. Fine £10.; rent per annum three quarters of mault of Loughborough meaſure, that is good, ſweet, and marketable, and 30*s*. of lawful money of England.

On the gable of an old houſe on the South ſide of the church-yard, at preſent the abode of Thomas Dakin, a journeyman paper-maker, remains the plaiſter buſt, Plate CIX. fig. 16; and two ſhields, each bearing the arms of the Company of Plaiſterers[10]; Azure, on a chevron engrailed Or, between two plaiſterers' hammers, a trowel Argent in chief, hammers handled of the ſecond; in baſe a treble flat bruſh of the third, handled of the fourth; a roſe Gules, ſeeded Or, barbed Vert, between two fleurs de lis of the firſt. Creſt, on a wreath, a dexter arm embowed, habited Or, charged with a bend Gules, cuffed of the laſt, holding in his hand proper, a hammer, as in the arms. Supporters, two opimaci Vert, purfled Or, beaked Sable, wings Gules. Motto, Factum eſt; fig. 17.

On the 25th of February, 1792, an earthquake was felt at Donington Park[11]. Several perſons in the houſe felt the ſhock very ſenſibly; and ſome juſt gone to bed felt the bed move, after the firſt ſhock, with a kind of tremulous motion for ſome seconds[12].

In a high North window: Azure, ſix garbs Or, 3, 2, 1; impaling, Gules; five fuſils in pale Or, fig. 13.

On the font: A ſaltire, fig. 14. . . . . a croſs, fig. 15.

Againſt the Eaſt wall, hang two framed prints of the Deſcent from the Croſs and the Transfiguration.

In the Matriculus of 1220, Donington is deſcribed to be under the patronage of the prior of Norton[1]; the then rector, who had been inſtituted by Hugh Welles then biſhop of Lincoln, paying five marks a year to the ſaid prior by the authority of the biſhop and of the chapter of Lincoln. Within the caſtle was a chapel, which had been accuſtomed to be ſerved by one of the canons of Norton there reſident, who had received a moiety of all the tithes ariſing from the demeſne lands of the lord conſtable of Cheſter for 30 years paſt, the tithes of a certain mill there ab antiquo, and all the tithes of Wavercroft, by permiſſion of the rector, for 20 years. There was alſo an hoſpital at Donington, erected by John formerly conſtable of Cheſter, with a reſervation of all tithes and rights to the mother church from the ſaid hoſpital, of which Humphrey the chaplain was then maſter. This houſe was founded for 13 brethren with ſiſters; who had no regular habit, nor were bound to any rule. The brethren were to take a ſecond portion of tithes of corn[2], as the tithes of the church, from the demeſne lands of the conſtable of Cheſter, and all the tithes of hay from the ſaid lands[3].

In the Valor of Pope Nicholas, 1291, Donington is rated at 26 marks, excluſive of a penſion of 4 marks to the prior of Norton; who obtained in 1332 the king's letters patent for the appropriation of this church[4]; and poſſeſſed alſo the advowſon of the neighbouring church of Radcliffe upon Sore, co. Nottingham[5].

In 1344, the procurations were 7*s*. 6¼*d*.; the rectory was taxed at 30 marks; and 2*s*. for Peter-pence.

In 1534-5, the value of the rectory was £8.; and John Humberſton, the then lay prieſt, had £6. a year.

The rectory and advowſon of the pariſh church belonged to the prior and convent of Norton; and, ſoon after the diſſolution, were granted by Henry VIII. by letters patent, dated at Weſtminſter, the 5th day of September, in the 37th of his reign, to Robert Laurence, of Great Grimſby, co. Lincoln, clerk, and William Symſon, of Waleſbye, in the ſaid county, yeoman, in fee-farm; who, on the 30th of Auguſt, had paid £809. 18*s*. 8*d*. in part of £1009. 8*s*. 4*d*. to ſir John Williams, knt. treaſurer of the Augmentations, due (among other lands) for the parſonage of Donington[6]; and who, by licence of the ſaid king, conveyed the ſame, by deed, bearing date the 8th day of September, 37 Henry VIII. in conſideration of £360. 10*s*. to John Beaumont, eſq. his heirs and aſſigns, paying yearly to the ſaid king, his heirs and ſucceſſors, 40*s*.

Edward the Sixth, by his letters patent, bearing date the 28th of February, in the 7th year of his reign, granted the ſaid rectory and church of Donington, with all their rights and appurtenances, late the poſſeſſion of John Beaumont, eſq. and then in the hands of the ſaid king, to his beloved ſervant Edward Sowthworth, eſq. for the term of 21 years, yielding and paying to the ſaid king, his heirs and ſucceſſors, the yearly rent of £20.

Edward Sowthworth, by his deed, bearing date the 4th of March, the firſt year of queen Mary, in conſideration of £200. of lawful money of England, ſold and aſſigned the ſaid letters patent of Edward VI. to Francis earl of Huntingdon, lord Haſtings, Hungerford, Botreaux, Molyns, and Moyles, and the ſaid parſonage, church, and premiſes, with the rights, members, and appurtenances, for the remainder and reſidue of the term granted by the ſaid letters patent; and the ſaid earl covenants to pay the rent reſerved to the crown.

In 1552, the commiſſioners reported that the church of Caſtle Donington contained,

"In primis, tow veſtments, the one grene, and the other blwe.

It̃m, a cope and a veſtment, wyth the hole ſuet of whit dammaſke.

It̃m, tow veſtments, the one blewe, the other white.

It̃m, tow of yellow ſylke.

It̃m, a tynycle of dyverſe colors.

It̃m, a croſs of baſe metall.

It̃m, a cope of blue, and thre other veſtments.

It̃m, one chalice of ſylver, wythe the patent.

It̃m, one chalice, geven to the churche, in the kepinge of one Thomas Dolman of Langley, by the legacy of one Thomas Perſons.

It̃m, three belles in the ſtepell."

In 1650, Caſtle Donington was returned as an impropriation; the rectory worth £100.; the vicarage, £26. 13*s*. 4*d*.: and the incumbent, as "ſufficient."

In the king's books it is entered as a diſcharged living, worth in great and ſmall tithes, manſe, and other profits, £8. 2*s*. 3½*d*.; clear yearly value £33. 13*s*.

The epiſcopal procurations are, for the rectory, 6*s*. 5*d*.; for the vicarage, 2*s*.; and a penſion of £1. 10*s*. to the biſhop of Lincoln at Eaſter and Michaelmas.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

In the chancel:

In the North wall, under a pointed demi-quatrefoil arch, is the figure of a prieſt, whoſe ſhorn head reclines in a canopy with flowered finials, and heads at the bottom of each arch; his hands elevated in a praying poſture; at his feet a lion[4].

On the South ſide of the Eaſt wall, on a table of black marble, with a compartment of alabaſter gilt; in the upper part a buffalo's head, with a ducal coronet about his neck; in the nether part Argent, a maunch Sable; is the following epitaph for Ferdinando third ſon of the fifth earl of Huntingdon.

"IN MEMORIAM VERE NOBILIS
FERDINANDI HASTINGS, FILII
TERTII HONORANDISSIMI
FERDINANDI COMITIS HUNTINGDONIÆ; QUI HANC VITAM
MUTAVIT ANNO NONO ÆTATIS SUÆ, ANNO DOM. 1647, OCTAVO MAII.
FERDINANDO HASTINGES; OF GOD HE STANDS IN FEAR,

THE ANAGRAM,
SO OF HIS PIOUS MIND
THE HAPPY CHARACTER."

[JOHN, the elder ſon of earl Ferdinando, died an infant in December 1639; and was buried at Aſhby; but has no monument.

HENRY, the ſecond ſon, died June 24, 1649; and was alſo buried at Aſhby, without any monument; but for him the following epitaphs were propoſed:

1. "Here lies an age's paramount, the ſtore
Of Albion's ſhame, becauſe it mourns no more.
And, ſince the fate is ſo, if for his fall
We cannot weep enough, our children ſhall.
Jo. ROSSE."

2. "Tread off, prophaner feet; forbear
To preſs this hallowed mould; where lies
Firm Virtue's and high Honour's heir,
The darling of the courteous ſkies;
Who, by rare parts, the flight of Fame
In life outwent; in death his name.

On an elegant mural tablet of white marble, on the North ſide of the chancel:

"In memorie of the Rev. John Dalby, A. M. vicar of this place, and rector of Lambley, in the county of Nottingham. He bore a long and painful illneſs with great fortitude and reſignation;
fully depending on his Saviour for ſalvation, and reſigned this life on the 20th of December, 1780, aged 66 years.
Alſo of Elizabeth, relict of the above
Rev. John Dalby. She departed this life on the 29th of Auguſt, 1781, aged 59. Her ſufferings and reſignation were only equalled by her great faith and dependance on a joyful and happy reſurrection."

On a white tablet on the South ſide:

"In memory of Mrs. Hannah Dudley, wife of Iſaac Dudley, ſon of the Rev. Paul Dudley, late vicar of Humberſton, in this county.
She departed this life July 26, 1768, aged 48 years.
Alſo of the ſaid Iſaac Dudley, who died June 28, 1791, aged 73."

On an atchievement: Azure, a chevron between three lions heads eraſed Or. Creſt, a lion's head eraſed Or, Dudley; Plate CIX. fig. 24.

On a black mural tablet:

"To the memory of Mrs Maria Hodſon, wife of Mr. James Hodſon, of this pariſh, and daughter of the Rev. Paul Dudley,
late vicar of Humberſton, in this county.
She died the 5th of June, 1770, aged 59 years."

[1] Mr. Redman, miniſter of Caſtle Donington, to thwart the order concerning the adminiſtration of the Communion, at Eaſter 1644, adminiſtered it to his pariſhioners in the afternoon; and, inſtead of wine, made uſe of ale. Dugdale, Short View of the late Troubles in England, p. 570.

[2] Mr. Smith was born at Kegworth in Leiceſterſhire, became vicar of Donington about 1657, and continued there till the Bartholomew Act. His preaching and praying was affectionate, and his life exemplary. He was well beloved by his pariſh, and much lamented when ſilenced. His very enemies had nothing to ſay againſt him. When King Charles gave a toleration, he preached once a month regularly at Donington; but lived not long after, having ſpent himſelf in his Maſter's ſervice.

On another black tablet:

"To the memory of Mrs. Elizabeth Keith, relict of Mr. Hugh Keith, who had the honour to inſtruct ſeveral of the Royal Family in Engliſh and Writing.
She died March 6, 1760, aged 87.
Requieſcat in pace."

Round the ledge of a flat ſtone:

"Here lieth the body of William Dalbie, the fourth ſon of John Dalbie, yeoman, and Dorothy his wife, which ſaid William
.... May, in the year of our Lord 1641."

On flat ſtones:

"MATTHEW, SON OF FERDINANDO DAVYS, WAS BAPTIZED FEB. 23, 1669; AND WAS BURIED MAY 19, 1675."

"THE BODIE OF FRANKE, SON OF FRANKE THOMASMAN, BURIED DEC. 19, 1680, IN THE 19TH YEAR OF HIS AGE."

"Here lies interred the body of the Rev. John Mather, vicar of this place, who departed this life on the 10th day of September, 1696."

"Here lies the body of the Rev. Mr. John Boultbee, vicar of this pariſh, who departed this life Jan. 6, 1758, aged 55."

"Underneath this ſtone is interred the body of Elizabeth Eddowes.
Alſo near to her three infants.
She died Sept. 8, 1798, aged 40 years."

In the upper part of the South aile there is a chapel five yards and a half wide, and ſeven and a half long; having an Eaſt window and two of the South ſide taken in; the whole neatly lined with wainſcot.

In the middle of this chapel, on an altar tomb of grey marble, are two beautiful braſs figures, in fine preſervation; Plate CIX. fig. 18. The man is in plated armour under a double canopy; on his head a baſon helmet; enormous elbow-pieces; round ſpur-rowels; long ſword and dagger; greyhound at feet; and behind the animal's head, four cropped-haired boys in coats. The lady has the divided double head-dreſs, furred cuff, and ſleeve as of ſhift to wriſt; at her feet a little dog; and two girls on one ſide, and one on the other.

From her mouth a label with,

"Illuminet vultũ ſuum ſuper nos et miſereatur noſtri."

Round the ledge, beginning from the South:

"....................... Roberti
Staunton, armigeri, et Agnes uxor d'r'i Roberti, que obiit xviii° die menſis Julii, anno Domini milleſimo cccc°lviii° et dictus Robert' obiit die menſis ... anno Domini milleſimo cccc° ....
Quor' animabus propicietur Deus. Amen."

"On a fair marble tomb," ſays Mr. Burton, "are graven theſe two coats (Plate CIX. fig. 5, 6); and many others now taken away and broken, the creſt to one remaining, a cock's head between two wings, which I take to be the creſt to Staunton's coat."—At the Weſt end of the tomb ſtill remain a helmet, mantle, and cock with wings diſplayed; fig. 19.

On the South ſide were two or three ſhields, and one at the Eaſt end; but theſe are now all gone.

In the upper end of the North aile, is a chapel ſeven yards long and five wide, with an Eaſt window on the North ſide; the aſcent to the altar is with two ſteps; and ſtone ſeats as in the other chapel.

In the middle of this chapel, on a neat altar-monument of alabaſter, formerly very richly gilt, though now much defaced, is a figure of a man in cropped flowing hair, high cape of plated armour; collar of SS; his hands reſt on a ſcroll; his elbow pieces form a croſs, with a roſe in centre; helmet under head and mantle; but no creſt; ſword hanging by belt, roſe in hilt; dagger faſtened by a cord; mail ſhirt; ſquare-toed ſhoes; collared grey-hound at feet. His lady in a folded cap with lappets, treble necklaces, cordon, mantle, and kirtle, and belt; two little dogs on the ſide of her; her garment tucked up ſhorter than common, and gathered with an end round her waiſt; fig. 20, 21, 22.

At the head of the tomb, a figure of the Deity holding a ſoul in his lap, and a man bare-legged and kneeling at his right ſide, with a ſcroll round him. Angels hold ſhields (the coats of Heſilrige and Shirley ſingle, and alſo Heſilrige impaling Shirley); a religious in a hood fitting with a divided beard; book in right hand; ſtaff in his left. On the South ſide an angel and pilgrim alternately; the latter holding in his right hand a ſtaff; in his elevated left a roſary. At the feet the Deity in glory, with a dead Chriſt on his knee. The North ſide is hid by pews.

The inſcription, in bas relief, miſerably blundered and falſe taken by Mr. Burton's informant, is in round text letters, beginning from the head:

"Pientiſſimas Xp̄ianorũ preces expoſcũt magiſter robertus haſylryg armiger, filius willmi haſylrig, armigeri, dñi de Noſley, et Elinora uxor roberti prædicti, et filia Johannis Shyrley, Kyrie eleſon, Xp̄e eleſon."

On the floor, near the head of this, is a ſlab, with a knight and lady cut in; the inſcription imperfect.

On flat ſtones in the nave:

One large alabaſter ſtone remains, with very faint traces of an inſcription, not now legible.

On a ſmall plate of copper, on a large ſlab:

"Here lieth William Fox, ſon and heir of Simon Fox, and Ellen his wife;
both buried the 20th of July, 1585.
That fatal ſcythe which cuts in two Moſt nuptial knots, this cloſer drew:
Life made them one; Death left them ſo;
A love more conſtant who can ſhow?
Here lieth interred Thomas Fox, ſon and heir of the ſaid William, and Elizabeth his wife.
The ſaid Thomas was buried April 24, 1644;
and Elizabeth Feb. 12, 1635."

"Here lies interred the body of Joſeph Kendall, who departed this life Sept. 30, 173.., in the 63d year of his age.
He had the honour to ſerve four ſucceſſive Earls of Huntingdon.
Anne his wife died in September 1748, aged 81.

MELBOURNE

is ſo intimately connected with Caſtle Donington, that a brief account of it ſhall here be given.

We learn from Domeſday book, that the manor of Melbourne, which is in the deanry of Repton and county of Derby, was an antient demeſne of the crown, under the title of Terra Regis; and that there was at that early period a prieſt and a church there [1].

From a Court of Survey in the archives at Donington Park, it appears that the manor and lordſhip of Melbourne butteth upon the lordſhips of Donington, Wilſon, and Bredon, Eaſtward; upon Staunton and Caulke Southward; upon Derby Hills and Staunton Weſtward, till it come to the river of Trent, which is Northward, and divides it from Swarkeſton and Weſton; and that the manor extends itſelf into Swarkeſton, Cheleſton, Oſmaſton, Normanton, and Cottons [2].

This manor was granted by king Henry III. to Edmund his younger ſon, created earl of Lancaſter in 1267; who in 1290 had a grant from his brother king Edward I. of free-warren at Melbourne [3].

In 1308, Robert de Holland obtained a grant from the King in fee, of the manors of Meleburne, Newton, Oſmundeſton, Swarkeſton, Chelardeſton, Normanton, and Wyveleſton, in the county of Derby, &c. with divers liberties and privileges; namely, returns of writs, pleas of Wythernam, felons goods, &c. [4]

In 1328, Henry earl of Lancaſter and Derby, ſon of earl Edmund, by whom the caſtle at Melbourne, where for ſome time he reſided, is ſuppoſed to have been built, obtained licence for a market every week upon the Wedneſday, at his manor of Melbourne [5]; but this hath long ſince been diſcontinued.

The earldom of Lancaſter being erected into a dutchy by king Edward III. in 1345, the manor of Melbourne continued to be a part of the great inheritance belonging thereto; and in right thereof became the property of the crown.

John duke of Bourbon, who was taken priſoner at the battle of Agincourt 1415, was confined nineteen years in Melbourne caſtle in the cuſtody of Nicholas Montgomery the younger [6]. He was committed by king Henry V. and releaſed by his ſucceſſor. In 1460, the laſt year of the reign of king Henry VI, the caſtle was diſmantled by the order of queen Margaret [7]. An engraving of this antient fortreſs, from an original drawing preſerved in the office of the dutchy of Lancaſter, taken in the time of queen Elizabeth, was publiſhed by the Society of Antiquaries [8]; and ſhews the venerable ſtyle of building of this antient royal manſion.

King James I, in 1604, by a grant under the ſeal of the Duchy of Lancaſter, alienated the caſtle and manor of Melbourne to Charles earl of Nottingham; who ſoon after ſold the ſame to Henry earl of Huntingdon, anceſtor of the late earl, for £4700. The caſtle was ſuffered to go into ruins after it came into the poſſeſſion of the earls of Huntingdon; but ſufficient of the walls and foundations thereof are even yet remaining, to mark out the ſite and extent, and to ſhew the great ſtrength of the building.

By an order of queen Elizabeth, a ſurvey was made in 1602, by Thomas Fanſhawe, then auditor of the Dutchy; in which he notices that "her majeſty hath a fair antient caſtle ſtanding there, which her majeſty keepeth in her own hands;" and that Gilbert earl of Shafteſbury was then conſtable of the ſame, and bailiff there by letters patent during his life, with the annual fee of £10.

The manor is now the inheritance of the earl of Moira, as deſcended from the earls of Huntingdon.

"In the reign of queen Elizabeth, ſir Richard Harpur left his ſon John an eſtate in Melbourne [9]; and, in 1598, died William Blackwell, eſq. of Alton hall, in the pariſh of Wirkſworth, and left his ſon Ralph a capital meſſuage here [10]."

King Henry I, in 1133, erected a biſhoprick at Carliſle; and Henry III, in 1269, granted to God and the church of the bleſſed Mary at Carliſle, and to Walter then biſhop of Carliſle and his ſucceſſors, and to the prior and canons of Carliſle in the ſaid church, and to their ſucceſſors, the parſonage of Melbourne, with the rights, lands, and appurtenances. This biſhop Walter, or ſome of his immediate ſucceſſors, erected a palace here, near to the church, and imparked a part of the adjoining lands; and there they had their reſidence occaſionally for ſome centuries during the frequent inroads and devaſtations of the Scots in the neighbourhood of their palace at Carliſle.

The parſonage and palace belonging to the biſhops of Carliſle were held by ſir Francis Needham, knt. in the time of queen Elizabeth, under a leaſe; and, after that, "came to ſir John Coke, a younger ſon of the Truſley family, who was ſecretary of ſtate in king James the Firſt's time; and, having raiſed a conſiderable eſtate, ſettled his family here [11]."

By virtue of an act of parliament of the third year of queen Anne, to confirm an agreement made between Thomas then biſhop of Carliſle and Thomas Coke, eſq. (great-grandſon of ſir John, and vice-chamberlain to queen Anne) reſpecting the ſaid parſonage, the ſaid Thomas Coke being then leſſee thereof, the ſame is now held in fee-farm of the ſaid biſhoprick by the preſent lord viſcount Melbourne. The park hath been diſparked many years; but the houſe and gardens have been much improved by his lordſhip's anceſtors, and make a pleaſant ſummer reſidence. The old-faſhioned gardens, fountain, cut hedges, and ſtraight walks, ſtill remain; and, being upon an extenſive plan, are really curious, ſuch being now rarely to be met with in any part of the kingdom. The family, however, ſpend but little of their time here, as they reſide principally, when in the country, at their elegant houſe, Brockett hall, Herts.

At preſent Melbourne Hall is, by favour of the noble owner, the temporary reſidence of his young friend lord viſcount Tamworth, only ſon of my truly kind and right honourable patron the earl Ferrers.

Lord Melbourne has alſo a large and antient houſe at King's Newton; which was formerly the property of the Hardinge family; and is at preſent occupied by Edward Abney, eſq. ſecond ſon of the late William Abney, eſq. of Meaſham, co. Derby.

The whole pariſh of Melbourne, including the ſmall hamlet of King's Newton, contains 286 houſes, and 1410 inhabitants; and a conſiderable number of perſons in it are ſupported by manufactures. "Many hands are employed in combing and ſpinning jerſey; but thoſe who work upon the ſtocking-frame are ſtill more numerous, there being no leſs than eighty within the pariſh. The ſtone quarries near the town alſo afford employment to about thirty perſons. The chief part of their buſineſs is the manufacture of ſcythe-ſtones [12]."

The money raiſed for the poor in 1776 was £281. 19*s*. 4*d*.; the medium of three years 1783—1785, £266. 8*s*. 11*d*. [13]

[9] What the Harpurs had in Melbourne was a parcel of land only, called Bennet's Cloſe or Wood Cloſe, now lord Moira's.

[10] Wolley's MS Hiſtory of Derbyſhire.—In old deeds, any thing of a family-houſe was deſcribed as a capital meſſuage. A very antient building belonging to lord Moira, near the church, and now a farm-houſe, in the old deeds is called a capital meſſuage. It ſtill goes by the name of Beuley hall, from a family of the Beaulies, formerly the owners of it. This may have belonged to the Blackwells; though it does not appear that it did from the title-deeds. In 1539 it belonged to John Beaumont, eſq.; he ſold it to ſir John Port; Port ſold it in 1550 to Roger Brecknock; Brecknock ſold it to Beaulie; and the Beaulies to the Huntingdon family: ſo there ſeems no opening in the title from the deeds for the Blackwells.

5. Emily-Mary, b. Apr. 21, 1787.
6. Harriot-Anne, born July 27, 1789.

1. Charlotte, b. Jan. 10, 1767; married to Thomas Wynne[5], eſq.
2. Anne, born Dec. 27, 1767; married to ſir George Wombwell, bart.
3. Elizabeth[6], born June 17, 1769.
4. Harriott, born April 21, 1776; died in infancy.

The Church,

dedicated to St. Michael, has a tolerably good ſquare ſteeple. The lands and tenements belonging to it are mentioned in an antient ſurvey of the manor, made in 1516; and were held in fee-farm of the dutchy of Lancaſter, by the rents there mentioned:

Johannes Thurnaſton, capellanus cantarie Sancte Katharine, tenet liberè unum meſſuagium & IIII virgatas terre, nuper Roberti de Hichfield, poſtea Willielmi Bars, & aliarum terrarum & tenementorum in Newton & Wylnaſton, nuper Willielmi Bars; & redd' per annum xs. VIIId. ob. & ſectam curie.

Capellanus cantarie Sancti Michaelis tenet certas terras & tenementa; & redd' per annum IIIs. vd.

Sir Ralph Shirley, who died in 1516, bequeathed lands in Melbourne and Worthington to the chantry of St. Katharine, in St. Michael's church in Melbourne, for ever, to pray for his ſoul[7].

The chantry-houſe of St. Katharine is ſtill remaining. It is a very antient ſtone building, ſtanding within three yards of the Weſt end of the church, and now converted into a malting office. From the abovementioned ſurvey, it ſeems to have been very liberally endowed; a meſſuage and four yard-lands in Melbourne, and other lands and tenements in Newton and Wilſon, muſt have been a conſiderable property for John Thurnaſton, the chaplain thereof[8].

The living is a vicarage, the patronage of which ſtill belongs to the biſhoprick of Carliſle. Its value in the king's books is £9. 13*s*. 4*d*.; and the yearly tenths 19*s*. 4*d*.

Melbourne is remarkable for a great variety of religious ſects; the Preſbyterians, Calviniſts, Baptiſts, and Quakers, having each in it a place of worſhip.

This church does not furniſh one inſcription which at all relates to the Cokes. That family, and, we believe, the late ſir Matthew Lambe, at different times, have purchaſed the whole of the eſtates which formerly belonged to the Hardinges of King's Newton; and in the church are ſeveral antient monuments, always underſtood to be of the Hardinge family; and a few of a more recent date, which are here given:

"Henry Hardinge, of Newton, gentleman, and Elizabeth his wife;
which Henry died without iſſue, December 1613.
He gave to the poor 20*s*. yearly for ever."

"Anna Hardinge, ſecond daughter of Robert Hardinge and Jane his wife, who departed this life Dec. 7, 1721."

"Robert Hardinge, of King's Newton, eſq.
died Oct. 16, 1709, aged 53 years."

"John Hardinge, of King's Newton, eſq.
only ſon of Robert Hardinge, died January 27, 1728, aged 43 years.
Robert Hardinge, of King's Newton, eſq.
and Ann his wife, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of William Buxton, of Youlgrave, in the county of Derby, eſq.
Mary Hardinge, their eldeſt daughter, did by her laſt will and teſtament order her executor, Caleb Hardinge[9], to erect this monument, 1767."

[9] Caleb Hardinge, M. D. brother of Nicholas Hardinge, eſq. of Canbury near Kingſton in Surrey; whoſe merits I have had occaſion to notice in the Anecdotes of Mr. Bowyer, p. 129.—Dr. Caleb Hardinge died at Mansfield, co. Notts, 17... He was a man of ſingular habits and whims, but of infinite humour and wit. He was, like his brother, a moſt admirable ſcholar; and, if he had been uniformly attentive to the duties of his profeſſion, would have acquired the firſt ranks in it. In medical ſagacity and learning he had few, if any ſuperiors. His converſation was coveted by the moſt accompliſhed wits and ſcholars of his age. He was a man of perfect honour; and a more benevolent ſpirit never breathed. His paſſion for courſing was one of his moſt prominent; but, like all the reſt, he made it the ſource of infinite amuſement for his friends.—The preſent George Hardinge, eſq. of the Middle Temple, now one of the Welſh judges, and a very excellent ſcholar, is the ſon of Nicholas.

WARTOFT,

This ſmall hamlet, originally called Wavertoft Grange, was formerly a grange belonging to the priory of Norton in Cheſhire; and is conſequently extra-parochial.

Wartoft is locally ſituated within the lordſhip of Donington; and is bounded on the North and on the Weſt, to a conſiderable extent, by other parts of that lordſhip; on the South by Langley; and on the Eaſt by Diſeworth.

In 1346, the prior of Norton (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon,) was aſſeſſed 5*s.* for half a quarter of one knight's fee in Wartoft juxta Donington, parcel of the fee of Cheſter and Huntingdon[1].

In 1622, it was the inheritance of Edward lord Mountague, baron of Boughton in Northamptonſhire; who gave it in marriage with his daughter Frances, to John Manners, of Haddon, eſq.; who in 1641 ſucceeded his couſin George as eighth earl of Rutland.

Wartoft Grange, by the name of "Whartopp, alias Wavertoft, alias Whartoft Grange," in the year 1649, was conveyed by John earl of Rutland to Joseph Kniveton, of Diſeworth, gent. for 2200*l*.

It is now the property of Richard Cheſlyn, eſq. of Langley Hall, who purchaſed it in 1797. Of itſelf it is not large, conſiſting only of a farm-houſe and about 130 acres of land; but, with the manor of Langley and a conſiderable farm in the lordſhip of Caſtle Donington, to both of which it lies contiguous, forms an entire, compact, and valuable eſtate[2].

Some old walls ſhew where the old Grange ſtood, on the ſite of which a modern farm-houſe is now built.

A MONUMENT AT CASTLE-DONINGTON, p.782. Pl.CX. p called alſo in old deeds Gerondon, Gerouldon, Gerwedon, Geraldon, Garradon, and Garendedon, is two miles diſtant from Loughborough; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Akeley.

At this place, Robert Boſſu the good earl of Leiceſter[1], who became a monk here, and gave the town of Stockton at his admiſſion pro ſuſtentatione ſuâ, 5 kal. Nov. 1133[2], founded an abbey under the patronage of the bleſſed Virgin Mary[3] for Ciſtertian or White Monks; who were Benedictines, according to the letter of the rule, without mitigation ("in quo," ſays Mabillon, "regula ſine ullâ mitigatione ad apicem ſervaretur.")—This monaſtery was a daughter or derivative from the abbey of Waverley, co. Surrey, the firſt houſe in England of this order, founded by William Giffard, biſhop of Wincheſter, in the reign of king Henry I.; whence Dugdale ſtyles it "Abbatia de Gerendon, filia de Waverley[4]."

The dreſs of two monks of this houſe, with and without their cowl, are exhibited in Plate CXI.

Their peculiarities ſhall here be given, from Dugdale's Warwickſhire, compared with Malmeſbury and Knighton: "Firſt, for their habits they wear no leather or linen, nor indeed any fine woollen cloth; neither, except it be on a journey, do they put on any breeches, and then upon their return deliver them fair waſhed. Having two coats with cowls, in winter time they are not to augment, but in ſummer if they pleaſe may leſſen them; in which habit they are to ſleep, and after matins not to return to their beds. For prayers, the hour of prime they ſo conclude that before the laudes it may be day-break, ſtrictly obſerving their rule, that not one iota or tittle of their ſervice is omitted. Immediately after laudes, they ſing the prime; and after prime, they goe out performing their appointed hours in work. What is to be done in the day, they act by day-light; for none of them, except he be ſick, is to be abſent from his diurnal hours, or the compline. When the compline is finiſhed, the ſteward of the houſe and he that hath charge of the gueſts go forth, but with great care of ſilence ſerve them. For diet, the abbot aſſumes no more liberty to himſelf than any of his convent; every where being preſent with them, and taking care of his flock, except at meat, in regard his table is always with the ſtrangers and poor people. Neverthleſs, whereſoever he eats, he is abſtemious of talk or any dainty fare, nor hath he or any of them ever above two diſhes of meat; neither do they eat of fat or fleſh, except in caſe of ſickneſs; and from the ides of September till Eaſter they eat no more than once a day, except on Sundays, no not on any feſtivals. Out of the precincts of their cloyſter they go out but to work[5], neither there nor any where do they diſcourſe with any but the abbot or prior. They unweariedly continue their canonical hours, not piecing any ſervice to another except the vigils for the deceaſed. They obſerve the office of St. Ambroſe, ſo far as they could have perfect knowledge thereof from Millain, and taking care of ſtrangers and ſick people, do deviſe extraordinary afflictions for their own bodies, to the intent their ſouls may be advantaged."

Hoſpinian ſays thus of them[6]; "A year's probation; no reception of fugitives after the third time; all faſts obſerved according to the rule; proſtration to viſitors, and waſhing their feet; abbot's table always with gueſts and pilgrims; labour more than the rule required; delicate habits exploded; obſolete and primitive fervour endeavoured to be revived by them." Avarice was the great vice of this order. They were great dealers in wool; generally very ignorant; and, in fact, farmers more than monks. The authors who have written upon this order (and indeed every other) are enumerated by Fabricius; and I wiſh the learned may have the good fortune to find them, which I had not (at leaſt moſt of them), though I tried the beſt library in the kingdom, the Bodleian. The Uſus Ciſtercienſium is the main book[7].

"This order of Ciſtercians began in 1098, in the 12th year of king William Rufus, as Leland[8] ſetteth down out of an old manuſcript of the abbey of Rocheſter. At what time as the monks went about to ſeek them a fit ſeat to erect their firſt houſe upon, they heard a voice from above ſpeaking in their native tongue, Cy eſte vous, that is, 'Here ſtay you;' whereupon they there ſettled their foundation at a place in Burgundy in France, which of theſe words that they heard they called Ciſteree.

"This order, as alſo the Templars and Hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem, were, certain years after their firſt inſtitution, diſcharged from payment of tithes, ſo long as they held and occupied their lands in their own hands, or at their own coſts[9], but not in their tenants or farmers hands; and ſuch as they had in fee, but not on demiſe. And ſo was it held and agreed in 1568[10]; and in the biſhop of Wincheſter's caſe, and the archbiſhop of Canterbury's caſe, 1596[11].

"Concerning the antiquity of the freedom of this order and others from payment of tithes, I find that, by a ſynodal decree made by pope Paſchal II. (who began to reign 1099, 13 William Rufus), all religious houſes and their lands, which they held in their own occupation for the uſe of their houſes, were diſcharged from payment of tithes[12]. But this general privilege was reſtrained by a ſynod begun in the time of pope Hadrian IV. an Engliſhman (who began his papacy in 1154) continued and ended under his next ſucceſſor pope Alexander III. (who died in 1181); wherein it was enacted, that all religious houſes ſhould be freed from payment of tithes of their new improved grounds, called Novalia[13]; and of their gardens, orchards, butter, cheeſe, milk, calf, lamb, and ſuch other cattle as they had in their own occupation; and that none of their other lands ſhould be freed or diſcharged from paying tithes. But by the ſame ſynod it was fully decreed, that all the lands belonging to the orders of the Templars, Hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem, and Ciſtertians, as well antient as newly improved, ſhould be exempt from payment of tithes, ſo long as they held them in their own occupation, and huſbanded at their proper coſts; which privilege ſeemed to be granted for the more ſpecial grace, and enabling of them, being at that time held the moſt eminent and reſpected of all other orders in Chriſtendom. But, theſe three orders growing in a very ſhort time after to great eſtates in lands and livelihoods, it was decreed by a general council held at Rome, in the palace of St. John of Lateran, 1215 (17 John), that from thenceforth all ſuch lands as ſhould be purchaſed or given to any of theſe three orders, after the ſaid council of Lateran, ſhould not have the former privilege of exemption, though they did huſband them in their own occupation.

"Now after the diſſolution of abbeys, made in the time of king Henry VIII. this privilege or freedom of non-payment of tithes did not hold in all monaſteries or religious houſes of this order: for thoſe houſes which had not lands, tenements, and hereditaments, above the clear yearly value of £200. and were ſuppreſſed, ſurrendered, and given to king Henry VIII. by parliament 27 Henry VIII. were not freed from payment of tithes. But all thoſe houſes which had lands above the clear yearly value of £200. which were ſuppreſſed and given to the king 31 Henry VIII. were diſcharged from payment of any tithes, by a ſpecial branch and clauſe in the ſaid ſtatute, 31 Henry VIII. cap. 13, which was not inſerted in the former ſtatute made 27 Henry VIII. The words are theſe: 'Every perſon and perſons, their heirs and aſſigns, having any monaſteries, priories, colleges, or other eccleſiaſtical houſes or places, &c. or any manors, meſſuages, parſonages appropriate, &c. or other hereditaments, which belonged unto the ſaid monaſteries, priories, &c. which were diſcharged of and for the payment of tithes, being in the hands of the abbots, priors, or other eccleſiaſtical governors, ſhall have and enjoy every of the ſaid monaſteries, priories, lands, tenements, and other hereditaments, according to their eſtates and titles, diſcharged of payment of tithes, in as ample manner as any of the ſaid abbots, priors, &c. or other eccleſiaſtical governors, held or enjoyed the ſame at the days of their diſſolution, or coming to the hands of king Henry VIII.' And ſo was it agreed for law, in a Lincolnſhire caſe, 40 Eliz. and in a Nottinghamſhire caſe, 7 Jac. between Gabriel Armeſtrong and Thomas Hall, for lands in Cortingſtoke, co. Nott. which ſome time did belong to the abbey of Garendon, which had not lands to the yearly value of £200 [1]."

The exemption of theſe monks is thus exemplified at Preſtwould, in the Matriculus of Bp. Welles: "Monachi de Gerndon ſolvunt [2] perſone de Preſtwould III marcas pro decimis terrarum ſuorum ibidem quas propriis ſumptibus excolunt [3], ſcilicet VIII carucatas, per quandam compoſitionem inter eos."

The founder of Garendon abbey endowed it with five carucates and three yard-lands in Garendon, two carucates in Ringlethorp, certain lands in Diſhley and Ravenſton, and the wood of Shepeſhed, containing a mile and a half in length, and a mile in breadth; and Michelholm, in the lordſhip of Lockington, for a fiſhery in the Trent. He gave them alſo a burgeſs in the town of Leiceſter, qui emeat pannos ſuos cum dico [4].

Nearly coeval with the founder's gift, was the benefaction of Ernald de Boſco, his ſteward; who, with the full conſent of earl Robert Boſſu, ſignified in form to Alexander [5] biſhop of Lincoln, gave the whole village of Bittleſdon in Buckinghamſhire to the Ciſtertian monks of Garendon, to the intent that an abbey of the ſame order might be there founded [6]; which was accordingly ſoon after begun. He gave them alſo the manor of Staunton under Bardon [7].

An old MS. cited by Mr. Burton under Thorpe Ernald, as being in 1622 in the cuſtody of Henry lord Grey of Groby, ſays, "Tempore regis Stephani Ernaldus de Boſco, ſeneſchallus Roberti comitis Leiceſtrie, fundavit abbathiam de Bittleſdon [8];" and Sir William Dugdale, "Ita incepta & fundata eſt abbatia de Bittleſdon, anno Gratiæ MCXLVII, ſexto idûs Julii; hoc eſt, anno XIII à fundatione de Gerondon [9]."

For the purpoſe of further benefiting the monks of Garendon, the earl of Leiceſter obtained from Ranulph earl of Cheſter a perpetual grant of the caſtle and vill of Mountſorell, and alſo of the lordſhip of Charley, a conſiderable portion of Charnwood foreſt, with Aldermanhawe and Haliwell hawe, all which were formally conveyed to king Henry III; and by him re-conveyed to earl Robert de Boſſu [10]. This Ranulph gave them alſo common of paſture for all their cattle in Barrow [11].

Among their other early benefactors were John de Laci earl of Lincoln and conſtable of Cheſter [12]; with Robert de Ferrariis earl of Derby and William his ſon. William de Ferrariis the grandſon alſo not only confirmed the incloſed ground at Hethcote, and paſture for 300 ſheep there, 5 cows, one bull, and 6 oxen, given by his father; but added another piece of incloſure thereto, with paſturage for 300 ſheep more, at ſix ſcore to the hundred, and for 7 more cows. The firſt William confirmed the grant of Harald de Lecha and Alan his ſon [13]; and Margaret de Ferrariis counteſs of Derby, his widow, gave 15*s*. yearly rent in Anſtey [14].

Roger earl of Warwick, who died in 1153 (ſon of Henry earl of Warwick, by Margaret ſiſter to Rotrode earl of Perth), was a great benefactor to many religious houſes. He gave to this monaſtery the town of Badſley Endſor, co. Warwick; which was afterwards given up by theſe monks to earl William, the ſon and ſucceſſor of earl Roger; in conſideration whereof, he gave them 10 marks of ſilver, and releaſed to them the ſervice of a knight's fee due from Geffrey de Clinton and Robert de Burton, for a part of Ibſtock; and the ſaid earl in 1166 paſſed it away to Helias Savage [15].

Within about 30 years of their foundation, with the conſent of archdeacon Baldric, the abbot and convent exchanged an acre of land with Nicholas rector of Godeby [16]; and entered into compoſitions with the rectors of Ibſtock, Preſtwould, Waltham, and Clifton [17].

[1] "The true yearly value of all the monaſteries of this order, and of all others in this kingdom, is ſet down by Mr. Speed, in his Hiſtory of Great Britain, in a table which he had out of the Augmentation Court; which table was afterward corrected and enlarged by me out of Leland and divers records, and is printed in his ſecond edition of that hiſtory, 1627. W. Burton."

[2] "This word ſeems to limit the nature of the payment by the monks; and deſcribe it to be not a compoſition, but a payment in kind to the parſon of the church of Preſtwould. Indeed, the particular payment is not deſcribed to be of the tithe itſelf, but of three marks in lieu. But the words may be underſtood of a voluntary payment, alterable ad libitum." S. Carte.

[3] "So long as they held and occupied their lands in their own hands, or at their own coſts. The Latin words in the quotation above are rightfully interpreted by the Engliſh, or explained. The Ciſtercians were not privileged for lands which they rented (which was very often the caſe), but only for ſuch lands as belonged to them in purparty. And even this privilege or exemption was in proceſs of time, 1215, limited or reſtrained by the Lateran Council; viz. to ſuch lands or eſtates as were belonging to the Ciſtertians then (i. e. at the time of holding that council); for, by the 55th canon of that council, all their future acquiſitions were ſubjected to the payment of tithes in kind. Indeed, theſe future acquiſitions were capable of being exempted afterwards by compoſition in lieu. But the privilege of their order did not extend either to ſuch of their lands as were in farm, or leaſed out to tenants, or were acquired by them after the time of the council. What the particular lands intended to be compriſed in the quotation above were does not appear. But the time of writing the Matriculus (whence the quotation above is taken) being ſtated as made A. D. 1220, there will be little reaſon to ſuppoſe that the acquiſition accrued after the time of the Lateran Council. And I cannot help being of opinion, that, as the privilege was firſt derived or granted to the Ciſtertians by the mere or ſole authority of the pope, the parſon of Preſtwould oppoſed or refuſed to ſubmit to the reception or allowance of the privilege, in Preſtwould pariſh, and, by controverting the legality thereof, forced the monks of Garendon to a compoſition for their tithes." Margaret de Quency, counteſs of Wincheſter, granted them all Henley, three yard-lands in Weſton, and a mill there; and her ſon, Roger de Quency earl of Wincheſter, gave five yard-lands in Belgrave, and five virgates and a mill in Weſton, Hathern, and Thorpe [1].

In 1212, or after, Hawiſe counteſs of Albemarle, in her pure widowhood, after the death of Baldwin de Betun, her third and laſt huſband, beſtowed on the monks of Garendon four ploughlands in Eaſtwell; whoſe charter is thus expreſſed:

"Hawiſe, counteſs of Albemarle, to all her men and friends, French and Engliſh, clerks and laics, preſent and future, greeting. Know ye that I, being in my lawful power, after the death of Baldwin de Betun my huſband, and after I had ſettled matters touching my right and inheritance with the lord the king, have granted, and by this my charter confirmed, in pure and perpetual alms, to God and the church of St. Mary of Garendon, and to the monks there ſerving God, for the health of my ſoul, and of my huſband William de Mandevile earl of Eſſex, and of my heirs and anceſtors, four caruecates of land in Eaſtwell, with all the appurtenances, free and quit of all the ſecular ſervice which belonged to the earl of Albemarle my father, and which belongs to me and my heirs, and from all earthly ſervice; to wit, thoſe four carucates which the monks had, of the gift of Ralph the Butler, after the ſame Ralph had dereyned [or made good] that land in the court of the lord the king; and of the confirmation of William de Evermue, and of the confirmation of William earl of Albermarle my father, of whoſe fee that land is. And I will that no one therefore diſturb, diſquiet, or moleſt them; becauſe I have diſcharged the foreign ſervice, and all the ſervice which belonged to the earl of Albemarle my father, and which belongs to me and my heirs, from the land of the monks, to all the heirs of the land which is of my father's fee in Eyton and Eaſtwell, and to all thoſe who have held that land, or ſhall hold it, from me or my heirs. And I and my heirs will maintain that land for ever, free from all ſecular ſervice; and warrant all thoſe things to the monks aforeſaid. Witneſſes; Hugh abbot of Melſa [in Yorkſhire], Jordan abbot of Thornton, Adam the capellan, Ranulph the high-ſheriff, Henry de . . ., Engeram de Albemarle, John Mauveiſin, Aliza de Fontibus, Richeuda, and Clementia, my daughters [2].

William de Fortibus earl of Albemarle, her ſon, afterwards, by another charter, confirmed the ſame land at Eaſtwell to the monks of Garendon; which being almoſt word for word the ſame with his mother's grant, it is needleſs to repeat the ſame. The witneſſes were different; to wit, Henry de Aldetheleighe, Walter de Deyvill, Stephen de Segrave, Fulco de Oyri, Geoffry the Spencer, Hugh of the Foreſt, Robert de Burton, John de Folevile, Robert de Withine, Hugh de Streleghe, and many others [3].

Gundreda de Moubray and Roger her ſon gave them Ringlethorpe Grange [5], and lands at Burton [6].

In 1220, the earl of Winton was patron of Garendon.

Feb. 28, 1234-5, divers lands were given to this abbey by Robert Pakeman, of Kirby by Glenfield [7].

See before, under Thorpe-Hanker, an acccount of lands there, given to the abbey by divers perſons [8]; and in 1237, the monks poſſeſſed a right of fiſhery in the river Sore, and common of paſture at Diſhley [9].

About this period they had a grant from Robert de Tateſhall, of 30 acres of land in the Wold of Holwell, and of free paſſage for their carts there. Teſtibus; Gervaſio tunc temporis priore de Bredon, Johanne de Grei; Ingeranno Diuvle, Radulpho de Nuers, Willielmo de Quatuor-maribus, Galfrido de Langeton, Rado clerico de Bredonâ, Alano de Bullmare, &c [10]."

In 1250, Thomas Spornecurteis, of Leiceſter, executed a writing obligatory for the payment to the abbot of Garendon of four marks of ſilver, one mark in a year, in the church of St. Peter at Loughborough; and in default of payment the monks might take poſſeſſion "manſi mei in villâ de Leyceſtriâ, quod jacet juxta venelam inter manſum Willielmi Randekide, & alteram viam que ſe extendit a cruce que ſtat in foro cotidiano verſus portam orientalem." The obligor not to ſell, mortgage, nor alien the ſame houſe in the mean time, on pain of being ſubject "cohercioni ballivorum domini comitis in burgo Leyceſtrie qui pro tempore fuerint. Sealed with yellow wax, and inſcribed, "✠ S. TOME SPORNECORTEIZ [13]."

The prior and convent of Bolington [14] in Lincolnſhire, as patrons of the church of Preſtwould, had a conſiderable connexion with the tithes throughout that whole pariſh; as appears by theſe ſeven original deeds, preſerved among the Charters in the Britiſh Muſeum.

1. An agreement between the monks of Bulington and the inhabitants of Burton, reſpecting the chapel of St. Peter in that village, founded by Hugo de Berges [about the year 1200.]

2. An agreement, in 1251, between the abbot and convent of Garendon and the prior and convent of Bolyngton, releaſes the abbot and convent (on a preſent payment of 35 marks) from three marks a year, which they had till then been accuſtomed to pay, as a compoſition for tithes, for their lands at Burton Grange [15].

3. A compoſition between the prior of Bolington and Anketill parſon of Preſtwould, for tithes in Hoton and Preſtwould; without date [16].

4. A grant of Peter prior and the monks of Lenton to the convent of Bulington of all their tithes in Hoton and Cotes, in the pariſh of Preſtwould; without date [17].

5. An agreement between the church of St. Andrew at Preſtwold, and the chapel of St. John of Cotes, then recently founded by Richard Frumentin of that village, reſpecting their rights, tithes, &c.; without date [18].

6. An agreement reſpecting the rights of the church of Preſtwould and the chapel of Cotes, 1 Honorii Pape [19].

7. In 1389, William archbiſhop of Canterbury confirmed to the abbey of Bolington the church of Preſtwould, with the chapels of Houton, Burton, and Cotes.

The following article may ſerve as a ſpecimen of the grant and releaſe of the homage of a villan:

Early in the reign of king Henry III. a Houſe of Converts [2] was founded in New-ſtreet, in the ſuburbs of London, for converted Jews, who there lived under a learned Chriſtian, appointed to inſtruct and govern them. Another houſe to the ſame uſe had been ſtill earlier eſtabliſhed, in 1213, againſt the wall of the houſe of Bermondſey; and there was a third at Oxford. But another method of providing for theſe Converts was by corrodies in religious houſes; which charitably maintained them in great numbers. Among theſe the abbey of Garendon appears to have been one of the earlieſt; for in 1196, Reginald the abbot of this houſe was fatally wounded by one of theſe converts; which occaſioned their general expulſion [3]. But in 1254-5, there being at that time many of them in England, for whom the King, by reaſon of his wars, had not provided ſufficient maintenance; he thereupon, out of his Chriſtian care to ſupport them, iſſued the following circular writ (which each convert was to carry himſelf) to the abbots, priors, and convents, of moſt of the religious houſes through England, to entertain and receive one or more of them for two years; and to allow them a daily penſion or corrody, not exceeding a certain ſum; wherein the names of nearly 500 male and female Jewiſh converts thus ſent are recorded in the Fine Rolls:

"Rex abbati & conventui Sancte Marie de Geroldon, ſalutem. Cum per guerram noſtram, quam nuper ſuſtinuimus in Waſconiâ, & alia ardua negotia, ſtatum noſtrum & regni noſtri tangentia, de ſtatu Converſorum adhuc plenè ordinare non poſſumus; devotionem veſtram rogamus attentè, quatenus latorem preſentium [Robertum [4] converſum] adhuc per biennium in victualibus & aliis neceſſariis exhibere velitis; ita tamen, quod ſi liberatione ſuâ diurnâ noluerit eſſe contentus, tunc in optione veſtrâ ſit conferendi ei tres obolos per diem tantùm, ad ſuſtentationem ſuam; nullam ſuper hâc petitione noſtrâ pretendentes excuſationem, pro quâ vos debeamus alias inde ſolicitare. Quia volumus modis omnibus preces noſtras, in hâc parte, à vobis exaudiri. Quibus exauditis, in negotiis veſtris gratiam & favorem à nobis obtinebitis, cum ſpeciali gratiarum actione; reſcribentes nobis per unum de veſtris, qualiter has preces noſtras duxeritis exaudire. Teſte, &c. apud Merton, 20° die Januarii."

But, as theſe corrodies could not legally be demanded by the King for any other perſons than his own ſervants or chaplains; it ſeems that ſometimes they were refuſed; for the Religious Houſes," Prynne obſerves, "had generally ſo little charity and devotion towards theſe converted Jews, as not to entertain them upon the King's former writs and intentions; who, much wondering at it, iſſued a ſecond letter, in this very preſſing manner, on their behalf [5]:

"Rex abbati & conventui Sancte Marie de Geroldon, ſalutem. Cum preces noſtras nuper vobis directas pro Roberto filio Galfridi converſo per biennium in neceſſariis exhibendis (nobis exiſtentibus in Angliâ) minimè curaviſtis exaudire; unde plurimùm miramur, & movemur; preſumentes ex hoc, indubitanter, quod ſi abſentes eſſemus, & in partibus tranſmarinis, eedem preces noſtre parum, vel nullum, penes vos obtinerent effectum, maximè cum in preſentiâ noſtrâ illas admittere recuſaveritis: Volentes autem adhuc experiri ſi erga devotionem veſtram in hâc parte exaudiri, vel repulſam pati debeamus pro eiſdem Converſis; iteratò vos duximus ſolicitandos. Rogantes quatenus juxta tenorem priorum literarum noſtrarum, vobis inde directarum, in neceſſariis exhibere velitis; taliter in hâc parte preces noſtras effectus mancipantes, quod dilatio precedens per effectum ſubſequentem penitùs expietur: & quod à Summo Remuneratore dignam inde remunerationem, & à nobis gratias reportare mereamini. Teſte Rege, apud Weſtm', 6° die Februarii."

If theſe Converts were married men, and had families; in caſe the wife did not accompany her huſband in the converſion, ſhe forfeited her dower [6].

Roger de Quency earl of Winton, by a deed without date, aſſigned all his right to the advowſon of this abbey to Simon de Montfort, earl of Leiceſter [7]. The earl of Winton, however, who died in 1270, is ſaid to have been then ſeiſed of this advowſon; which, under him, was held by Ernald de Bois. The inquiſition adds, that his heirs, Margaret, wife of William de Ferrariis earl of Derby, Elizabeth wife of Alexander Comyn earl of Boughan, and Ela relict of Alan de la Zouch, were owners of the advowſon [8].

Henry lord Beaumont, earl of Boughan and conſtable of Scotland, and Alice his wife, counteſs of Boughan and conſtabulatrix of Scotland, daughter and coheir of the above-mentioned Alexander Comyn earl of Boughan and Elizabeth his wife, were alſo benefactors to this abbey [9].

In 1277, the abbey of Garendon was one of the 62 Ciſtertian monaſteries, to whom king Edward I. then granted letters of protection [10].

In purſuance of the famous ſtatute called "Weſtminſter Primer," made principally for the uſe and benefit of the clergy and religious houſes, king Edward I, in 1282, iſſued a writ for the abbot of Gerendon, upon his complaint, and motion for it [11].

In 1283, the abbot and convent were allowed to poſſeſs ten meſſuages and a virgate of land, with the appurtenances, in Worthington [12].

In 1286, Henry le Waleis was permitted to give two meſſuages and two virgates of land at Ravenſton, held under the abbot and convent, as of his fee [13].

The abbot of Garendon was regularly ſummoned to parliament from 1295 till 1391 [14].

In 1297, Edmund earl of Lancaſter, the king's brother, was, at his death, patron of the advowſon [15].

In 1298, Simon Glyde had permiſſion to give two virgates of land, &c. held under the ſaid abbot [16].

In 1299, the abbots of the Ciſtertian and Præmonſtratenſian orders beyond the ſeas, impoſing ſubſidies, aids, and contributions, on the monaſteries of their orders in England then under them, whereby much money, and other commodities were tranſported out of England, to the great grievance and miſchief of the kingdom [17]; king Edward I. iſſued out writs to all the ſheriffs of England, to enquire of thoſe abuſes, and to ſtop the current of them; as by the writs, ſtill preſerved upon record, it doth appear. And afterward, to ſtop the like exportation of moneys and goods (for they would not be brought totally to give over), the ſame king, by his ſpecial writ, prohibited all of the Ciſtertian order, except the abbot of Garendon, from going beyond the ſeas on that account [18].

In 1305, the abbot of Garendon was enjoined by the king to take care that the ſtatutes paſſed that year in the parliament at Carliſle ſhould be duly obſerved in all points by the monks of that houſe; and, for their better promulgation, that they ſhould be openly read, in full chapter, twice in every year [19].

In 1305, it appeared that Ralph Boſon had enfeoffed the abbot of Garendon of one meſſuage in Worthington in pure alms; and that the abbot had purchaſed a meſſuage and half a virgate of land in Swanington [20].

In 1313, Alan la Zouch was poſſeſſed of the advowſon of Garendon, then worth £20. [21]

Sept. 26, 1320, John de Sutton, abbot of Garendon, and the convent of that houſe, demiſed to Robert de

In 1325, it was found that Stephen de Segrave, deceaſed, and Alice his wife, held 14*s*. 8*d*. rent, ariſing out of divers freeholds in Garendon, Kereſby, &c. of the honour of Winton, by what ſervices was not known; and that John de Segrave was his ſon and heir[2].

In 1328, ſir Robert Holland, at his death, held, as of the right and inheritance of Maud his wife, one of the daughters and coheirs of Alan la Zouch, of Aſhby, the patronage of Garendon abbey[3].

In 1330, the abbot and convent were permitted to diſcharge William de Herle from an annual rent of 40*s*.; for which he gave them a meſſuage held under the abbot of Leiceſter by the ſervice of 12*d*. a year, and which was held by that abbot of the king in capite; it appearing that he poſſeſſed the manor of Kereby; the meſſuage to be held under Simon Pakeman, by the ſervice of a ſingle grain of wheat[4].

In 1339, the ſaid William Herle and Robert his ſon were allowed to exchange with the abbot and convent of Garendon five meſſuages, eight acres, and one virgate of land, and one halfpenny rent, with the appurtenances, in Alton and Raveneſton, in lieu of 40*s*. rent in Kereby and four virgates of land in Alton. The ſaid meſſuages, &c. were held under Alan de la Zouch by the ſervice of 28*s*. and ſuit of court at Aſhby la Zouche. There remained to the ſaid William and Robert the manor of Kereby, held under Simon Pakeman, by the ſervice of a fifth part of a knight's fee, as of the manor of Peverell; and the manor of Braundeſton, held of the earl of Lancaſter, by the twentieth part of a knight's fee[5].

The numerous poſſeſſions of this abbey in 1340 may be ſeen in the following copious exemplification:

Confirmatio regis Edwardi Tertii de quamplurimis benefactionibus monachis & eccleſie Beate Marie de Geroldoniâ conceſſis, 12 Julii, 1340, anno regni 14[6].

which Mr. Peck tranſcribed from the original [1], much more fully than is printed in Dugdale's Monaſticon; and which he alſo thus tranſlated:

1. The grant and conceſſion which Robert ſometime earl of Leiceſter, by his charter, made to God and St. Mary of Garendon, and to the monks there dwelling, of five carucates and three virgates of land, with the appurtenances, in Garendon, with all the meadows and paſtures to the ſame land belonging.

2. The grant and gift which the ſame earl, by the ſaid charter, made to the ſame monks, of all that he had in Diſhley, except the land of Roger, brother of Oſbert the chaplain.

3 The gift which the ſaid earl, by the ſame charter, made to the ſame monks, of two ploughlands, with the appurtenances, in Ringlethorp.

4. The gift and confirmation which the ſame earl, by his charter, made to the church of the bleſſed Mary of Garendon, and to the monks aforeſaid, of all the land which Rabell de Seignevilla held in Diſhleye and of the wood of Shepeſhed, containing one mile in width, and one mile and a half in length.

5. The gift alſo and confirmation which Margaret ſometime counteſs of Winton, ſiſter of Robert earl of Leiceſter, by her charter, made to the ſame church and monks, of all Henleya, to till, dig, incloſe, and to receive the whole profits thereof.

6. The grant and confirmation which the ſame counteſs, by the ſaid charter, made to the ſame church and monks, of all the lands and tenements which they had by the gift of her anceſtors, with the meadows, paſtures, and all their appurtenances.

7. The gift and confirmation which the ſame counteſs, by her charter, made to the church and monks aforeſaid, of one virgate of land in Weſton, which Walter and Godwin, the ſons of Rippyng, held, together with the tofts and crofts, meadows and paſtures, and all their appurtenances, and of the whole ſequela [2] of the men aforeſaid.

8. The gift and grant which the ſame counteſs, by her charter, made to the ſame church and monks, of one mill, with the dam and its ſequel, and with all the other appurtenances, liberties, and eaſements; and of two virgates of land in the ſame vill; to wit, that virgate of land which Ralph de Brok ſometime held, and the ſame Ralph with his ſequel; and one bovate of land which Hugh de Colville ſome time held, and the ſame Hugh with his ſequel; and one bovate of land, which Ralph de la Grene ſometime held, and the ſame Ralph with his ſequel; to hold and to have for ever, with the tofts, crofts, meadows, paſtures, and with all their appurtenances, liberties, and eaſements; and of the paſture for 100 ſheep with their lambs, in the ſame vill.

9. The gift, grant, and confirmation, which Margaret de Ferrariis, ſometime counteſs of Derby, by her charter, made to God and the church of St. Mary of Garendon, and to the abbot and monks there ſerving God, of 15*s*. of rent, with the appurtenances, in Anſty.

10. The gift, grant, and confirmation, which William de Dixele, ſon of Robert Bars de Dixele, by his charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of one meſſuage and three virgates of land, with the appurtenances, in Dixele.

11. The gift, grant, and confirmation, which Roger de Quincy, ſometime earl of Winton and conſtable of Scotland, by his charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of the whole ſalvinage, and of all the wild beaſts there, be they of what kind ſoever, which the ſaid abbot and monks and their ſucceſſors then had or from thenceforth might have, or which ſhould be found in the incloſure of Knit [3], to fence in [ad berſandum [4]], hunt and take, or any thing there, by them, or by their men, or by others in their name and with their leave they would to be done.

12. The grant and confirmation which the ſame earl, by the ſaid charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of the whole wood of them the abbot and monks, with the ſoil and all their appurtenances whatſoever.

13. The grant and confirmation which the ſame earl, by his charter, made to the ſame monks, of five virgates of land, with the appurtenances, in Belgrave, which Ralph de Gouteby, Gilbert the ſervant of Sweyn, William in the Lane, John Niger, Geoffrey ſon of Siward, and Walter Sabere held, with the aforeſaid men, and the whole ſequel of the ſame.

14. The grant and confirmation which the ſame earl, by his charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of one mill, and the ſite of one mill, five virgates of land, and one place of meadow, with the appurtenances, in Weſton, Hathern, and Thorpe by Garendon, and of the men holding the ſaid lands, with the whole ſequel of the ſame. Alſo the releaſe and diſcharge, which the ſame earl, by the ſaid charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of the view of frankpledge, and of all whatſoever ſuit of court of the ſame earl, and of all foreign ſervice, which of the aforeſaid lands, or of the men holding them, after any ſort may hereafter be required. Moreover the releaſe and diſcharge which the ſame earl, by the ſame charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of the view of frankpledge, and of all ſuit of court of the ſame earl, and of all foreign ſervice, of the five virgates of land, with the appurtenances, in Belgrave, which they had of the gift of the aforeſaid earl, with the men holding the ſaid lands, and the ſequel of the ſame.

15. The gift, grant, and confirmation, which the ſame earl, by his charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of five marks rent, with the appurtenances, in Anſty, Cropſton, Groby, and Roteby.

16. The gift, grant, and confirmation, which the ſame earl, by his charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of 20*s*. rent, with the appurtenances, in Thurmaſton.

17. The grant alſo and confirmation which the ſame earl, by the ſaid charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, to encloſe with a ditch and hedge the ſaid earl's wood called le Kut, and a certain place called le Twayt, and to keep them incloſed for ever; with permiſſion to grub up the wood and fell the ſame, or otherwiſe to convert it as they thought beſt for their own benefit.

18. The gift, grant, and confirmation, which the ſame earl, by the ſaid charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of eight marks rent in Bradgate, with his villans there, and all the land they held of him in villanage, with their chattels and ſequel, tofts and crofts, and all other their appurtenances; together with all the rents which he received of the free tenants in the ſaid vill, with their homage, wards, reliefs, and eſcheats.

19. The gift, grant, and confirmation, which the ſame earl, by the ſaid charter, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of the rent of Robert Chapeleyn of Shepeſhed, with one virgate of land which he held of the ſaid earl, together with a toft and croft, homage and ſervice, ward and relief.

20. The gift, grant, and confirmation, which the ſame earl made to the ſame abbot and monks, of common of paſture over his Foreſt of Charnwode, for one bull and 24 cows, with their produce till three years old, at a certain vaccary belonging to his grange of Swanyngton.

21. The grant, leaſe, and quit-claim, which William ſon of William Piſtor of Thurmeſton, by his writing, made to the ſame abbot and monks, of all his

By indenture, dated on the Nativity 1347, the lady Mary de St. Pol counteſs of Pembroke granted to the abbot and convent of Garendon ten tenements which ſhe poſſeſſed; one in the ſuburbs of London, in Fleet-ſtreet, of the gift of William de Hales, eſq.; the other within the city, in Sherebourne-lane, which ſhe had from Gilbert le Palmer. In return, the abbot and convent were to maintain one monk in an hermitage near to Cripplegate, to pray for the ſoul of Monſ. Aylmar de Valence, late earl of Pembroke, for the good eſtate of the ſaid counteſs ſo long as ſhe ſhould live; and for her ſoul after death; the ſaid monk to be preſented for approbation to the counteſs during life; and afterwards to the mayor of London for ever; and the rents of the ſaid tenements to be applied ſolely to the maintenance of the monk, and upholding the hermitage [2]. Of this hermitage, or chantry, which was ſituated in the corner of Monkſwell ſtreet, near Cripplegate, London, called St. James's in the Wall, an account will be given hereafter [3].

John de Bowys and the abbot of Garendon, for half a knight's fee in Cortinſtoke, in 1348, to the aid for making the king's ſon a knight, were aſſeſſed 20*s.*; whereof John paid 15*s.* 6*d.*; but the abbot had a writ to diſcharge him from the 4*s.* 6*d.* remaining. Stephen de Weſton and the ſaid abbot were in like manner aſſeſſed 10*s.* for a quarter of a knight's fee there; of which Stephen paid 7*s.* and the abbot was diſcharged 3*s.* by his writ [4].

John Powtrel was aſſeſſed, in conjunction with the abbot of Garendon, in 1348, for a knight's fee at Weſton, 40*s.* whereof he paid 35*s.* and the abbot was diſcharged the other 5*s.* by his writ [5].

The abbot and convent of St. Mary de Pratis at Leiceſter entered at different times into ſeveral compoſitions with the monks of Garendon, as appears by the following extracts from their "Rentale."

"Sunt due alie compoſitiones inter nos & monachos de Garendon. Prima earum facta fuit anno regni regis Henrici filii regis Johannis triceſimo ſeptimo. In iſtâ compoſitione abbas & conventus de Garendon conceſſerunt nobis communem paſturam in perpetuum habend' in campis ſuis & pratis de Henle, Garadon, & Dixel, tempore aperto, cum multis conditionibus, ut patet in compoſitione eadem. Item per iſtam compoſitionem abbas & conventus de Garadon facient propriis ſumptibus pontem competentem ultra ductum molendini, & illam cum neceſſariè fuerit competenter reparabunt, &c. Item facient mundari curſum ductûs diſtendentem de molendino, ſub penâ, &c. ut patet in eadem. Licebit abbati & conventui Leyc' facere liberationem aque predicti ductûs in ſuo ſolo ſicut ſolebant. Secunda iſtarum compoſitionum facta fuit anno Domini M°CCC triceſimo ſeptimo. In iſtâ compoſitione abbas & conventus de Garadon conceſſerunt pro ſe & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, quod abbas & conventus Leyc' decimas de certis locis infra limites eccleſie parochialis de Schepiſhed exiſtentibus; ſcil', de clauſo jacente inter Henle & Gothous lidegate, in logitudine juxta antiquum campum de Garadon; & clauſo quod vocatur clauſum barcarie; & clauſo juxta Conhult, a firmario ſuo liberè percipiant; & a quocunque alio quotiens & quando dicta loca vel eorum aliquis ad firmam tradi, vel fructus in eiſdem vel eorum aliquo creſcentes & a ſolo non ſeparatos vendi, locari, donari, vel alio quocunque modo alienari contigerit, &c. ut patet in eadem [1]."

"This indenture, made the XIIth day of September, the XIth year of the reign of our ſovereign lord king Henry VIIth, between the right noble Thomas lord marquis Dorſet, lord Ferrers of Groby, Aſtley, Bonvile, and Harrington, of the one party; and the right reverend father in God, Thomas, abbot of the monaſtery of our lady of Gerendon, otherwiſe called Garandon, and the convent of the ſame, on the other party; witneſſeth, that the ſaid abbot and convent have granted, dimyſed, and to ferme letten, and by theſe preſents grant, dymitte, and to ferme lett, to the ſaid Thomas lord marquis Dorſet, all their lands, tenements, rents, reverſions, and ſervices, with their appurtenances in Bradgate; except a yearly rent of 12*d.* paid to them by the prior of Ulveſcroft; to have and to hold the ſaid lands, tenements, rents, reverſions, and ſervices, with their appurtenances (except as before excepted) to the ſaid Thomas lord marquis Dorſet, and to his heirs and aſſignes, from the feaſt of St. Michael the Archangel laſt paſt before the date of theſe preſents, unto the end and term of 99 years then next and immediately enſuing, and fully to be compleat, yielding and paying therefore yearly to the ſaid abbot and convent, and to their ſucceſſors, at the feaſt of Chriſtmas, a pepper corn, if it be aſked. Alſo the ſaid abbot and convent grant, by theſe preſents, to the ſaid Thomas marquis Dorſet, that it ſhall be lawful to him, his heirs and aſſignes, at all times, at their pleaſure, during the ſaid term, to fell and cut down, ſell, carry away, the woods growing in and about the ſaid lands, tenements, and other the premiſes, without let or interruption of the abbot and convent, or their ſucceſſors. And alſo the ſaid abbot and convent covenant and grant, by theſe preſents, for them and their ſucceſſors, to the ſaid Thomas lord marquis Dorſet, and to his heirs, that they and their ſucceſſors ſhall warrant, acquire, and defend, by theſe preſents, the ſaid lands and tenements, and other premiſes (except before excepted), to the ſaid Thomas marquis Dorſet, his heirs and aſſignes, againſt all men, during the term aforeſaid. In witneſs whereof, the parties above-named, to theſe indentures have interchangeably ſet their ſeals on the day and year above-written. (The ſeal is gone, but the deed is ſigned.)

Thomas Syeſton, abbot of Garendon.

Sir Ralph Shirley, knight, by his laſt will, dated in 1513, was a liberal benefactor to this abbey [2].

Thomas Syeſton (the laſt abbot of Garendon) granted a leaſe for 99 years, Sept. 12, 1519, of all the convent lands at Bradgate in Leiceſterſhire, to Thomas marquis of Dorſet, in lieu of another leaſe, of the ſame term of years, granted by the ſaid lord marquis, of a paſture and croft adjoining, at Shepeſhed, in the ſame county, to the ſame abbot [3].

Oct. 1, 1522, the inhabitants of Shepeſhed let their common in Henley field (their liberty of common in Charnwood Foreſt excepted) for 70 years to Thomas Syeſton abbot of Garendon, and the convent there; conditionally, that the ſaid abbey ſhould yet pay ſix pounds of wax, as theretofore uſual, towards finding of the lights in Shepeſhed church; and that the inhabitants of Shepeſhed ſhould re-enter at the end of that term on the ſaid common [4].

An accurate return of the property of this abbey from March 1533 to March 1534 is in a Roll in the Augmentation office.

The grange of Staunton ſubter Bardon, part of the poſſeſſions of this abbey, was leaſed in 1534 to Thomas Seyſton, for 25 years, at the yearly rent of £12.; and in this leaſe is an exception of a cloſe called Fermer Breche, belonging to the inhabitants of Hucklecote, in right of the ſaid grange [5].

In the "Comperta Compertorum" of Doctors Legh and Layton, the viſitors appointed by the king's authority [6] in 1535, Garendon abbey is thus noticed:

"Richardus Barbor,
Richardus Torreworth,
Jacobus Hughborough,
} petunt dimitti a jugo religionis.

Fundatrix nunc comitiſſa Oxford [7], durante vitâ ſuâ, ex conceſſu domini regis; poſtea dominus rex.

Redditus annuus CCLX marcæ [8].

Debet domus centum marcas [9]."

When this abbey was ſuppreſſed, among the ſmaller monaſteries, in 1536, there were here 14 monks; and their poſſeſſions were returned by the commiſſioners [10] to be worth:

[6] This abbey, Dr. Pegge obſerves, was without the limits of the commiſſion of thoſe viſitors, but included in the terms cum aliis in the title.

[7] John de Vere, fifteenth earl of Oxford of that family, married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Edward Truſſel, of Staffordſhire, knight banneret; and ſhe, it ſeems, was the patroneſs for her life, by grant from the crown. See Dugdale, Bar. Angl. vol. II. p 143.

[8] This ſum (173*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*) is between that of Speed and Dugdale.

[9] Comperta Compertorum, publiſhed by Dr. Pegge, with the "Annales Eliæ de Trickingham, 1789," p. 78.

[10] For further particulars of the poſſeſſions, ſee the original ſurvey in the Firſt Fruits office.

Their income has alſo been ſomewhat differently ſtated. According to Speed, the clear annual ſum was £186. 15*s*. 2½*d*.; Dugdale ſays, £159. 19*s*. 10½*d*.

The ſite of this abbey, with the demeſne lands, valued at £21. 2*s*. 5*d*. were at that time under leaſe, dated 1534, to Richard Hall and Margaret his wife.

Within the walls of the abbey there was a meſſuage ſituate under a chapel called The Chapel of the Holy Croſs, or The Rood Chapel; which meſſuage was called le Rode Houſe, and formerly produced £10. a year, from oblations in money, wax, and other gifts, offered before the image of the Holy Croſs; but the crown's receiver in 1540 reported no profit accrued from the ſaid chapel, becauſe the image was taken away by order of the lord privy ſeal and other of the king's council. This chapel was alſo leaſed to Richard Hall, with a covenant that the abbot and convent ſhould find the farmer ſufficient firebote in Charnwood Foreſt [1].

A capital meſſuage at Belgrave, with other tenements, lands, meadows, paſtures, waters, and fiſheries, parcel of their poſſeſſions, were, at the diſſolution, under leaſe to John Clarke, of Belgrave, and Joan his wife, by indenture ſealed with the conventual ſeal, dated 13 Hen. VIII. for 20 years, at the rent of £2. 6*s*. 8*d*. [2]

Some idea may be formed of the comfortable ſituation of the monks of Garendon, from the number of the Granges with which they may be ſaid to have been ſurrounded; at Diſhley, Burton, Goadby, Ringlethorpe, Syſonby, Alton, Staunton, Ravenſton, and Haliwell, in the county of Leiceſter; Rampeſton and Cortingſtock, at a very ſmall diſtance from them, in Nottinghamſhire; and Hethcote, in the Peak of Derby [3]. At Leiceſter they had, by the gift of their noble founder, unum burgenſem qui emat pannum, cum dico [4], cum terrâ & domubus. They had lands alſo in ſeveral other places within the counties of Leiceſter, Nottingham, and Derby; as may be ſeen in their Chartularies; where, in addition to the benefactors already mentioned, we find the ſeveral families of Baſſet, Berges, Boves, Bozun, Chamberlain, Chevercourt, Colvill, Deſpenſer, Frumentin, Harcourt, Jort, Lecha, Liſle, Luvetot, Malet, Peverell, Picot, Pincerna, Putrell, Rampeſton, Ropeſley, Segrave, Stabularius, Verdun, Wareyn, &c.; with charters of confirmation from kings Henry I. Stephen, Henry II, Henry III, and Edward III; and eſpecial grants of privilege from popes Lucius II. Alexander IV. and Anaſtaſius III. [5]

The arms of this abbey were the ſame with thoſe of their founder; Gules, a cinquefoil Ermine, pierced of the field; with a croſier added, to diſtinguiſh them from St. Mary de Pratis at Leiceſter; Pl. CXI. fig. 6.

Willis's Hiſtory of the Abbeys gives no account of the abbots of this houſe, except that Thomas preſided in 1522 and 1526; but a catalogue of them will be given hereafter in p. 830.

Of their Chartularies I have been favoured with the uſe of two different copies, both very antient. One of theſe, the moſt complete, is the property of the marquis of Lanſdown; the other, of Craven Ord, eſq. Copious abſtracts from both are given in pp. 805—838; and ſpecimens of the hand-writing are engraved in Plate CXIII; the three firſt of them being from lord Lanſdown's; the fourth, from Mr. Ord's. By the abſtracts from the Chartularies we ſee the nature of ſome of their compoſitions in lieu of tithes, which were all made under the ſanction of archdeacon Baldric.

To the rector of Ibſtock they at firſt agreed to pay a penſion of two marks a year for their lands in that pariſh, which in 1176 they increaſed to three marks [6].

In 1177, they made an agreement with Peter rector of Preſtwould, to pay three marks for Burton grange [7]; which in 1251, after an expenſive litigation before the papal delegates, they bought-in for 35 marks [8].

A penſion of 30*s*. was paid to the church of Meuton' [9]; of 3*s*. to the rector of Gouteby, for their grange in that pariſh; 3*s*. to the rector of Waltham, for Ringlethorpe Grange; two marks to the rector of Diſhley; half a mark to the rector of Clifton; and 26*s*. to the abbot of Leiceſter [10].

In 1290, the abbot and convent were cited to anſwer a complaint of the rector of Glenfield, for non-payment of tithes for their lands at Kirby [11].

In 1291, they had a ſuit with John Comin earl of Boughan, then lord of the manor of Whitwick, for impounding and killing their hogs in Charnwood Foreſt in the time of pannage [12].

An Obituary of their founder earl Robert de Boſſu and his immediate relatives is given in the Chartulary [13]; with a particular inventory of the money rents received and paid by the abbey [14].

From one entry it appears that the religious houſes were at that time the depoſitaries of the title-deeds of the neighbouring lords; in the ſame manner, probably, as the ſtrong rooms and iron cheſts of modern bankers [15].

A legacy was received by the abbot and convent in 1296, from the executors of ſir Hugo de Vienna [16], in money and in divers uſeful articles of proviſion, to the amount of £120. 13*s*. 10½*d* [17]; and from Hugh Bagley and Alice his wife they had a legacy of a murrhine cup [18].

Some few public events are noticed in the Chartulary; as, the battle of Agincourt, 1415 [which the ſcribe has miſ-dated "1416, 4to Hen. V."] [19]; and of the battle of Queen's Croſs near Northampton, 1460 [20].

A ſeparate ſubſidy from the clergy is recorded in 1370 [21], and another from the clergy and laity in 1371; neither of which is mentioned in the printed Rolls of Parliament [22].

Five different plagues occur in the fourteenth century [23].

Two entries appear, reſpecting the neighbouring little priory of Charley [24]; two conſiderable grants from Ranulph earl of Cheſter to Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter [25]; and an antient inquiſition concerning the right of repairing the bridges between Loughborough and Cotes [26].

In 1382, the church of this abbey was polluted by two regular monks; for which offence the abbot paid 100*s*. to an Auguſtine fryar, who was then ſuffragan to the biſhop of Lincoln, for reconciliation [27].

An entry occurs, of the murder of Gilbert de Knypton, the abbot's cook, who was ſtruck to the brains with a hachet à pick, as he lay in his bed at Dixley grange, by perſons unknown, who ſtole his cheſt and his cloaths; and of a ſimilar murder, at Swynfen grange, of John de Thorp juxta Luctleburgh [28]. On both theſe occaſions, the Chartulary obſerves, was raiſed the hutagium or huthagium [29] villate generale.

The ABBEY CHURCH was large and ſumptuous; as may be judged by the following report of the goods in it "remaining unſold by the king's commiſſion for the ſurvey and diſſolution of certain religious houſes diſſolved by act of parliament 1535;" and which were ſoon after diſpoſed of for the prices marked againſt each article:

This church was demoliſhed ſoon after the ſuppreſſion of the abbey; but part of the ruins remained at the time of the purchaſe by ſir Ambroſe Phillipps; under whoſe direction the foundation was dug up, when ſeveral ſtone coffins were diſcovered.

It would be no eaſy matter perhaps, to determine, did they ſtill remain, to whom theſe coffins belonged; though this abbey had the honour of containing the aſhes of ſeveral diſtinguiſhed perſonages[1].

The heart and bowels of Saher de Quency, who died at Acon, was, by his own direction, firſt burnt to aſhes, and then brought to Garendon for interment[2].

Margaret de Quency, counteſs of Winton, his relict, was buried here, ad introitum eccleſiæ; and her ſon, Roger de Quency earl of Winton, in 1264[3].

"Rogerus de Quency obiit 25 Aprilis, M°CCLXIIII, apud Wirmegay; & Gerendoniæ ſepultus eſt[4]."

Henry de Boves was buried in their cemetery[5].

Robert de Herle was buried in Garendon church, near the altar of St. Benedict[6].

John Shirley, eſq. of Staunton Harold, was buried in St. Katharine's chapel in this abbey, with great ſolemnity, in 1486, by the abbot and whole convent; and a fine alabaſter monument erected to his memory[7]; which, when demoliſhed, was ſold for ten ſhillings[8].

In laceratâ cartâ ſic ſcribitur: "In monaſterio de Gerendoniâ, coram altare Sancte Katherine Virginis, jacet Jo̅hes Shirley armiger, qui obiit 31 die menſis Maii, anno Dn̄i 1486; cujus animе propicietur Deus. Amen[9]."

Sir Ralph Shirley alſo, in 1516-17, was buried in a fair and ſumptuous tomb, with his father and mother, and Anne his third wife[10].

The grange of Dixley, parcel of this monaſtery, was leaſed, after the diſſolution, in 1540, by the Court of Augmentations, to ſir William Gorfyn, knight[11].

March 8, 1540-1, king Henry VIII. by his letters patent, (in conſideration of the ſum of 2356*l*. 5*s*. 10*d*.) granted in fee to Thomas Manners earl of Rutland the houſe and ſite of the lately diſſolved monaſtery of Garendon, with the manors of Garendon, Diſhley, Wimeſwold, Shepeſhed, Weſton, Swithland, Burton Underſhawe, Worthington, Mountſorell, Thorpe Hanker, Leiceſter, and Cortingſtoke; the rectories and chantry of Garendon and Diſhley; the manor of Sutton Bonington in Nottinghamſhire; the manor and grange of Ravenſton, in the counties of Leiceſter and Derby; with all the rights and privileges to which the ſaid abbey was in any way entitled[12].

Feb. 19, 1541-2, William Waring, gent. died ſeiſed in fee of 100 acres of land, 80 of paſture, and 40 of meadow, in Cortingſtoke, late belonging to the monaſtery of Garendon; Thomas his ſon and heir being then 17 years old[13].

Nov. 30, 1551, Francis Digby, late of Garrendon, gentleman, obtained a pardon from king Edward VI. for having counterfeited the lawful coin of England, on the 4th of July, 1550, at Okley in Northamptonſhire, and alſo at divers other times, at Briſtol and elſewhere, " de ſolidis Anglicis, vocatis ſhillings, & groſſatis Anglicis, vocatis groats, de falſo & mixto metallo, videlicet de cupro & ſtanno, ad cuneum noſtrum de auro vocatum realls & crownes ;" and for having uttered the ſame, to the amount of 100*l.*[1].

In the return of 1555, no penſion or annuity occurs to any monk of Garendon.

In 1573, Edward earl of Rutland was queſtioned concerning his right to this and ſome other of his manors ; and in that year obtained a writ, " De manibus Reginæ amovendis de manerio de Shepeſhed, ſitu nuper monaſterii de Garendon, grangiâ de Dicheley, & rectoriâ de Bottesford, &c. in comitatibus Leiceſtriæ, &c. & illis quibus pertinent liberandis[2]."

By " The Shepherdeſſe" of ſir John Beaumont, written about 1621, ſoon after the marriage of George Villiers duke of Buckingham with the lady Catharine Manners, only daughter and heireſs of Francis earl of Rutland[3], it appears that the then noble owners of Belvoir and Burley made the manſion-houſe at Garendon their occaſional reſidence :

" A Sheperdeſſe, who long had kept her flocks
On ſtony Charnwood's dry and barren rocks,
In heate of Summer to the vales declin'd,
To ſeeke freſh paſture for her lambes halfe pin'd.
She (while her charge was feeding) ſpent the houres
To gaze on ſliding brookes and ſmiling flowres.
Thus having largely ſtray'd, ſhe lifts her ſight,
And views a palace full of glorious light.
She finds the entrance open ; and, as bold
As country maids that would the court behold,
She makes an offer, yet againe ſhe ſtayes,
And dares not dally with thoſe ſunny rayes.
Here lay a Nymph, of beauty moſt divine,
Whoſe happy preſence caus'd the houſe to ſhine ;
Who much converſt with mortals, and could know
No honour truly high, that ſcornes the low :
For ſhe had oft been preſent, though unſeene,
Among the ſhepherds daughters on the greene,
Where ev'ry homebred ſwaine deſires to prove
His oaten pipe and feet before his love,
And crownes the ev'ning, when the daies are long,
With ſome plaine dance, or with a rural ſong.
Nor were the women nice to hold this ſport,
And pleaſe their lovers in a modeſt ſort.
Then that ſweet Nymph had ſeene this country dame
For ſinging crown'd, whence grew a world of fame
Among the ſheepecotes, which in her rejoyce,
And know no better pleaſure than her voyce.
The glitt'ring ladies, gather'd in a ring,
Intreate the ſilly Shepherdeſſe to ſing :
She bluſht, and ſung ; while they with words of praiſe
Contend her ſongs above their worth to raiſe.
Thus being chear'd with many courteous ſignes,
She takes her leave, for now the ſunne declines ;
And, having driven home her flocks againe,
She meets her love, a ſimple ſhepherd ſwaine ;
Yet in the plaines he had a poet's name,
For he could roundelays and carols frame,
Which, when his miſtreſſe ſung along the downes,
Was thought celeſtial muſick by the clownes.
Of him ſhe begs, that he would raiſe his mind
To paint this lady, whom ſhe found ſo kind :
" You oft," ſaith ſhe, " have in our homely bow'rs
Diſcours'd of demigods and greater pow'rs ;
For you with Heſiode ſleeping learnt to know
The race divine from heaven to earth belowe."
" My dear," ſaid he, " the Nymph whom thou haſt
Moſt happy is of all that live betweene [ſeene
This globe and Cynthia ; and, in high eſtate,
Of wealth and beauty hath an equal mate,
Whoſe love hath drawne unceſſant teares in floods
From nymphs that haunt the waters and the woods.
Oft Iris to the ground hath bent her bow,
To ſteale a kiſſe, and then away to goe :
Yet all in vaine ; he no affection knowes
But to this goddeſſe, whom at firſt he choſe ;
Him ſhe enjoyes in mutual bonds of love ;
Two hearts are taught in one ſmall point to move.
Her Father, high in honour and deſcent,
Commands the ſylvans on the North ſide Trent.
He at this time, for pleaſure and retreate,
Comes downe from Belvoir, his aſcending ſeate,
To which great Pan had lately honour done,
For there he lay, ſo did his hopeful ſon.
But when this lord by his acceſſe deſires
To grace our dales, he to a houſe retires,
Whoſe walles are water'd with our ſilver brookes,
And makes the ſhepherds proud to view his lookes.
There in that bleſſed houſe you alſo ſaw
His lady, whoſe admired virtues draw
All hearts to love her, and all tongues invite
To praiſe that ayre where ſhe vouchſafes her light.
And, for thy further joy, thine eyes were bleſt
To ſee another lady, in whoſe breaſt
True wiſedome hath with bounty equal place,
As modeſty with beauty in her face.
She found me ſinging Floraes native dowres,
And made me ſing before the heavenly pow'rs ;
For which great favour, till my voice be done,
I ſing of her, and her thrice-noble ſon."

On the death of Francis earl of Rutland in 1632, Catharine ducheſs dowager of Buckingham became ſeiſed in fee of this lordſhip; and, in Trinity Term 1633, by a fine levied in the King's Bench before Mr. Juſtice Heath and his brethren, this noble lady conveyed the ſite of the manor of Garrowden and Shepeſhed, with the ſite of the monaſtery, to ſir Robert Pye, knt., and Thomas Fotherly, eſq. ; by whom they were reconveyed to her ſon, George Villiers, the ſecond duke of Buckingham.

The diſſolved monaſtery of Garendon, the manor of Shepeſhed, a manſion houſe, a warren houſe, other meſſuages, mills, game of coneys, cottages, lands, and wood, with all their appurtenances, ſituate, lying, and being in the county of Leiceſter, the property of the duke of Buckingham (who had been declared a traitor by the ruling powers) were ſold, June 10, 1652-3, under an act of parliament, for the conſideration of £354. 11*s.* 5½*d.* to John Thurlowe, John Hunt, and Nathanael Waterhouſe [2].

In 1645, this lordſhip was thus noted, for an extraordinary appearance in a pool of water:

> “ The moſt ſtrange and wonderful apparition of blood in a pool at Garraton in Leiceſterſhire, which continued for the ſpace of four days; the redneſs of the colour for the ſpace of thoſe four days every day increaſing higher and higher, to the infinite amazement of many hundreds of beholders of all degrees and conditions, who have dipped their handkerchiefs in this bloody pool; the ſcarlet complexion of the linen will be a teſtimonial of this wonderful truth to many ſucceeding generations. Printed at London by J. H. 1645.

“ Whoever ſhall conſider theſe ſad times, wherein not only the ſon riſeth againſt the father, the brother againſt the brother, and the ſpirit of diſſention and war is ſpread over the whole face of the earth, but ſuch prodigious and wonderful things have appeared as no age before have ever ſeen or heard of; he muſt confeſs that he liveth now in the evening of time, and in the laſt age of the world, wherein all things do begin to ſuffer a change. I will not trouble you with any thing which in this nature hath heretofore been delivered to you. The ſword at Plaiſto flouriſhing without hands, and the great ſtone clambering up the ſtairs, and whatſoever there is ſtrange or wonderful, are but ſluggiſh miacions compared to this, which doth the rather prefer itſelf to your obſervation; becauſe in the buſineſs of Plaiſto there were to be ſeen for the moſt part but ſome knaviſh lights, and as it were the hocus pocus of a ſpirit: but in this which now ſhall be repreſented unto you, the immediate anger of God, in great characters of blood, is moſt apparently to be read. At Garraton, a town in Leiceſterſhire, not far from Loughborough, is a great pond of water, which for many generations hath been known to be there time out of mind: it is above an acre in the length, and about an acre in the breadth. It was made at firſt to ſatisfy the thirſt of the cattle, which, from the commons and paſtures thereabout, did daily reſort unto it; and ſome times it allayed the draught of the poor and thirſty traveller; but now (as if it were another element) it altered both its nature and complexion, for the beaſts did refuſe to drink thereof; and ſome few days afterwards being paſſed, they would not come near the water; which the countrymen and inhabitants who were owners of the cattle thereabouts perceiving, they repaired to the pond to ſee what the reaſon of this ſtrange thing ſhould be.. Being come unto the pond, they found the colour of the water changed; for it began to look red, and the ſubſtance thereof was thicker than before. Amazed at the novelty of this ſight, they departed from the place. They make a relation of it to their friends; and one neighbour brings in another to behold this wonderful chance. The noiſe is ſpread over all the country; and in thronging numbers they make haſte to ſee it. The water, which at firſt began to look but reddiſh, doth now look higher and higher; and as the people came in it did increaſe in colour. This continued for the ſpace of four days, the country, far and near, who had notice of it, coming in to be ſpectators of it. It waxed more red the ſecond day than it ſeemed at the firſt; and far more red the third day than it did on the ſecond; and on the fourth day it grew a perfect ſanguine. There is no wonder in this nature but carrieth ſome devotion in it. The people ſtand round about the banks of the pond; and, from looking on the water, they look up to heaven, from whence they believe that the wonder came. With reverence they diſcover this miracle of the water turned into wine; but of the water turned into blood, they never heard of that wonder before. Some of them, more hardy than the reſt, would undertake to taſte of it, to underſtand if it were already as much in taſte as in complexion; but they were ſeverely charged by thoſe that did ſtand by them, and were told that they might follow the more wiſe example of the beaſts; for, ſince the cattle refuſed to drink of the water, by ſo doing they would now ſhew themſelves more brutiſh than the beaſts. The water ſtill continueth in its bloody colour, and had all one ſtanding face of blood; and withal it ſeems ſo thick, that if a high wind had blown, it is believed that it would very hardly at all, or elſe very gently, have moved. Every day brought in new obſervers to behold this admirable pool; and who had but ſeen it the day before could not be content with one day's wonder, but muſt come the next day to behold it againe. It was the object of all the eyes thereabouts; and on their return homewards the ſubject of all their diſcourſe: the knights, the gentlemen, and the ladies, the peaſants and their families, ſtood all cloſe together round about it; and, being overcome with the amazement of the ſight, there was no regard unto degrees or diſtinctions of perſons; and it ſeems they learned this inſtruction from the pond which they now make uſe of, that they were all but one blood. From the obſervations of the blood, they fall into the conſideration at laſt of the bloody times wherein they live; and being ſo near to Loughborough, they grow in diſcourſe of how much blood hath been ſpilt by the lord of Loughborough his means, who, being there the great agent of the King, hath robbed many houſe-keepers in thoſe parts of their goods and their treaſure, and, which is far more dear to them, many of their children's lives. Report in the way is made how many families hath he robbed of their fathers, and how many he hath left without their children. They report from the beginning all the ſkirmiſhes that have been made in thoſe parts, and all the battles that have been fought, and all the ſieges that have been laid and raiſed; and, paſſing from one devouring buſineſs to another, they do curſe the proceedings of the civil war. The true narration of this water turned into blood may be put into ſucceeding calendars; and it may be printed in its own rubrick. In our days did this prodigious ſight appear; and afterward the crimſon colour of the pond did begin to change, and every day to look paler and paler, until at length it by degrees turned unto its firſt complexion of water, the bloody ſubſtance ſinking down and by its own weight ſettling itſelf in the bottom of the pond. In the mean time, the rumour of this flying up and down the country, there being above one thouſand witneſſes to juſtify the truth of it. One Maſter Neale, a gentleman of good account, living at Great Leake in Nottinghamſhire, being travelling on his occaſions unto London, and hearing the report of it to be commonly ſpoken, as he did ride upon the way, though it was four miles out of the road, he reſolved to ſee it; and, making haſte, eaſily overcame the length of the way, out of a deſire to enjoy the novelty of the ſight. Being arrived, he ſat a long time on horſe-back at the entrance into the pond, muſing and looking on it (for it was juſt at that time when the water did begin to return to its firſt complexion), and perceiving the red ſubſtance in the nature of a filmy body to deſcend towards the bottom, he did put ſpurs to his horſe, who did fling back, and ſnorted, and was unwilling to go into the pond; but after he had forced him to enter a little way into it, and ſtirred towards the bottom of the water with his cane, he perceived clots, as it were, of congealed blood in great abundance to riſe up; and having ſtaid upon the top of the water for a little ſpace, to deſcend afterwards by degrees again. Not able to ſatisfy himſelf with any reaſon from whence this wonder ſhould ariſe, he departed; but the country people reſolving to examine and dive into the cauſe thereof, they had a meeting amongſt themſelves for that intent, and concluded at it to have the pond drained, it being believed that the enemy had thrown ſome carcaſes into the pond to ſtain the water, and to bring thereby ſome ſudden deſtruction upon the cattle. This belief being entertained, the ſluice is opened, and now the water comes tumbling forth as if it were glad of its liberty, and was afraid to ſtay any longer in the portentous place; where, before it was in a ſwift torrent, it made good its paſſage as if one part were in emulation to overtake the other; and the latter ſtrove with the former for the honour of proceeding; and to perfect the work, wherein ſome deeper places of the pond the water ſtood ſtill, and could not diſadvantage itſelf into the channel, the countrymen, ſome with ſcoops and ſome with pails, did carry forth the water. With many hands they overcame the taſk, which ſeemed at firſt almoſt impoſſible. And the pond being drained, and found nothing but fiſh, of which in divers kinds there were great ſtore, and theſe fiſh ſeemed ſtill to be very good, and nothing the worſe for that miraculous accident which had made red the water. We may learn by this what God can do; who, in a moſt wonderful way, can expreſs his power without the leaſt damage to his creatures. Howſoever, the pond being drained dry, which may increaſe the wonder, the blood in many places was diſcovered in extended degrees to be like ſo many ſcarlet carpets on the bottom of the pool, to the unſpeakable amazement of the beholders; and indeed they may well put wonder on it; for though, in our own Chronicles and in other Hiſtories, we have read ſometimes of clouds that have rained drops of blood, which though it is very wonderful, yet, becauſe philoſophers have undertaken to give a natural reaſon for it, it ſubtracteth ſomething from the greatneſs of the wonder: but this, as no cauſe can be aſſigned for it, ſo no ſtory as I remember can example it; but, being as far beyond nature as example, it ſheweth itſelf to proceed from the immediate power and the hand of God. I will not preſume to give you the interpretation of it; nor ſay it is ſuitable to the preſent condition of theſe bleeding times; neither will I be ſo hardy as to affirm, that the four days wherein the water every day ſeemed to increaſe in the redneſs of its colour doth ſignify the four years of the war, which now are already or near expired, and that as the water every day, for the four days, exceeded one another in the defines of its ſanguine dye, it looked every day redder than before, ſo the war for theſe four years hath every year been one year more bloody than the other; ſurely it will prove good news, could I from hence aſſure you, that, as after the four days being ended, the water did begin to return in its firſt genuine colour; ſo the fourth year of this war being expired, the kingdom ſhall again return to its antient bleſſing and habit of peace; and that as the water bringing its firſt cleanneſs, the blood did ſink down and vaniſh away, ſo now the crying ſins of blood ſhall be waſhed away from this kingdom by the cleanneſs of a new life, and by the tears of true repentance. There were many of the town of Garraton, both men and women, and of the inhabitants of the country thereabout, who dipped their handkerchiefs in this pond when it was of a bloody colour; and the linen retaining the complexion of blood, it will be a teſtimonial to ſucceeding times of this moſt ſtrange and wonderful accident, and of the truth of what we write."

[2] From a MS. in the Bodleian Library, intituled, “Purchaſers, &c. of the Eſtates of the Royaliſts, in the years 1651—1654.”

The duke of Buckingham, in 1657, recovered the poſſeſſion of Garendon, and of the greater part of his other eſtates; but, having become involved in pecuniary embarraſſments, this noble domain was for ſeveral years in the poſſeſſion of divers mortgagers.

In 1682, the manſion-houſe of Garendon was the reſidence of John Barwell, eſq. of Kegworth; whoſe pedigree was entered at Loughborough, in the Heraldic Viſitation of that year, Sept. 11, under the title of "Barwell of Garendon[1]." At this period the lordſhips of Garendon and Shepeſhed were on ſale, under the ſuperintendance of Mr. Hemings, a land-jobber, who was an agent for the duke; and, in the beginning of 1683, were purchaſed (for the ſum of 28,000*l.*[2]) by Ambroſe Phillipps, eſq. at that time an eminent counſellor of the Middle Temple[3].

Mr. Phillipps was knighted by king James, at Whitehall, April 11, 1686; appointed king's ſerjeant on the 22d of Auguſt following; and, having ſettled at Garendon, and diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his diſcharge of the duties of an active magiſtrate, died June 16, 1706, aged 69; and was buried in the chancel of Shepeſhed church, where a handſome monument is thus inſcribed:

"To the memory of ſir Ambroſe Phillipps, late of Garenton, knight, and ſerjeant at law,
who was educated at Wincheſter ſchool, and for ſome time was fellow of New colledge in Oxford. Afterwards he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of the Law; which having practiſed about 30 years with great ſucceſs and commendation, he then retired into the country, where he made himſelf uſeful by compoſing differences and preventing law-ſuits amongſt his neighbours; and ſpent much of his time in building, planting, and other improvements.
He died the 16th of June, anno Dom. 1706, in the 69th year of his age.
This monument was erected by dame Mary his wife.
Dame Mary Phillipps died October 17, anno Dom. 1736, æt. 88."

Sir Ambroſe had four ſons; 1. Ambroſe, who died in his father's life-time, Aug. 5, 1696, æt. 25, and was buried at Shepeſhed; 2. William, his ſucceſſor at Garendon (of whom hereafter); 3. John, a Turkey merchant, who died at Low Leyton, Eſſex, Jan. 17, 1756, æt. 80, and was buried at Shepeſhed[4]; 4. Charles, a Turkey merchant, who alſo died at Low Leyton, Sept. 13, 1754, aged 71, and was buried at Shepeſhed[5]; and one daughter, Mary, married to Edward Liſle, eſq. of Crux Eaſton, Hants; whoſe daughter Elizabeth[6], wife of Henry March, eſq. died in 1726, and was buried at Low Leyton; where an altar-tomb in the church-yard, with her arms, is thus inſcribed[7]:

"In a vault beneath this tomb is depoſited the body of Mrs. Elizabeth March, the moſt dear and moſt deſerving wife of Henry March, eſq. of London, Turkey merchant; to whom ſhe bore five children;
Henry, John, Henry-Francis, Mary, and Elizabeth;
John only ſurviving.

[6] This was the eldeſt of the ſiſters who had the honour of the following compliment from Mr. Pope, in an "Inſcription on a Grotto of Shells at Crux Eaſton, the work of nine young ladies:

"Here, ſhunning idleneſs at once and praiſe,
This radiant pile nine rural ſiſters raiſe;
The glittering emblem of each ſpotleſs dame,
Clear as her ſoul, and ſhining as her frame;
Beauty which Nature only can impart,
And ſuch a poliſh as diſgraces Art;
But Fate diſpos'd them in this humble ſort,
And hid in deſarts what would charm a court."

She was eldeſt daughter of Edward Liſle [1], of Crux-Eaſton, in the county of Southampton, eſq.
by Mary, the only daughter of ſir Ambroſe Phillipps, of Garenton, in the county of Leiceſter, knt.
being born the xvith day of December, MDCXCV.
and married the xvith day of July, MDCCXXI.
She dyed the xith day of December, MCCXXVI, juſtly and truly commendable in every part of life, amiable for the graces both of mind and body, late much delighted in, now lamented by, her friends."

William Phillipps, eſq. the ſecond ſon of ſir Ambroſe, and ſucceſſor to the family eſtates, was born in 1672; and, being firſt bred to merchandize, reſided ſome years in the Engliſh factory at Conſtantinople; but was called home upon the death of his elder brother Ambroſe, after having gained abroad the character of an able merchant, and made a very good improvement of the fortune his father gave him. In 1703 he married Jane, daughter of ſir Samuel Daſhwood, knight, then lord-mayor of the city of London; and by her had iſſue three ſons, Ambroſe, Samuel, and William, and two daughters Mary and Anne, which latter died young. He was many years an active juſtice of the peace, in which ſtation he made himſelf very uſeful to his country, by compoſing of differences, and by keeping up a good harmony and friendſhip amongſt his neighbours. He died June 20, 1729, aged 57. [2] His widow ſurvived till 1761.

Ambroſe Phillipps, eſq. was a moſt accompliſhed gentleman. He travelled through France, and into all parts of Italy; and was ſo remarkably beautiful in his perſon, that at Rome and Venice he was called "The handſome Engliſhman." He ornamented the Park with large plantations, built the magnificent Gateway in the park leading to Shepeſhed, and the elegant Temple and Obeliſk in the park. The garden front of the preſent houſe, which was alſo deſigned by him, but executed by his ſucceſſor, ſhews the great taſte he had in architecture; and was only deſigned as the ſecond front to a moſt magnificent houſe he intended to have built, had he lived to have completed it. He was choſen repreſentative for the county in 1727 and 1734; and, dying unmarried, Nov. 6, 1737, was buried at Shepeſhed; where the following very elegant epitaph is inſcribed to his memory by Dr. Liſle:

"Siſte paululùm, Viator, & humanæ ſortis miſerere.

His two brothers Samuel and William both went to Smyrna, as merchants; but returned to England on the death of Ambroſe; when Garendon became the property of Samuel Phillipps, eſq. who was high-ſheriff of the county in 1751. He married Sophia, daughter of Francis Lewis, of Stanford Hall, co. Notts, eſq. and ſiſter and heir of Francis Lewis, eſq. of the ſame place. This lady dying Jan. 19, 1766, aged 39; he married, ſecondly, Mary, daughter of Thomas Allſopp, of Loughborough, gent. Mr. Phillipps's unfeigned love of truth and juſtice, unblemiſhed honour and integrity, rendered him reſpectable in the public eſteem; while his particular care and tenderneſs for the intereſts of his dependants, family, and friends, were the favourite diſtinctions of his private character. He delighted in the elegance and improvements of his native ſeat; but particularly cheriſhed its moſt diſtinguiſhed ornaments, plenty and hoſpitality. By the death of his elder brother, he became poſſeſſor of Garendon; and by his own death [3] without iſſue, March 16, 1774, aged 65, concluded the too ſhort-lived race of a moſt reſpectable and worthy family [4]. He bequeathed the property at Garendon, &c. to his lady for her life; who was remarried, July 2, 1776, to ſir William Gordon, K.B. This gentleman, deſcended from an honourable and antient family in Scotland, and born in the Iſland of Jamaica [5], had for ſome time been miniſter plenipotentiary at Bruſſels; and, for his honourable ſervices at that Court, was created knight of the Bath in 1775; and further rewarded by an annual grant of royal favour, which he held till his death, which happened in Curzon-ſtreet, May Fair, at the age of 72, Jan. 26, 1798.

During the occupancy of Garendon by ſir William and lady Gordon, permiſſion was granted by lord chancellor Apſley to cut down timber to the amount of £9500.; of which £5000. was felled in the park, where the old oaks were of an immenſe ſize; and a fine avenue of double rows of large elms, from the park-gate leading from Loughborough to the houſe, was then laid proſtrate, ſo that very little old timber remained. The money that the wood ſold for was ordered to be inveſted in the funds; and the intereſt, as part of the eſtate, to be applied to the uſe of the poſſeſſors during life.

On the death of lady Gordon, Aug. 5, 1796, the property at Garendon, &c. paſſed, under the ſettlement by Mr. Samuel Phillipps's will, to his maternal couſin, Thomas March-Philipps, eſq. of More Critchell, co. Dorſet (ſon of Jane, third ſurviving daughter of Edward Liſle, eſq. by Mary, daughter of ſir Ambroſe Phillipps), the preſent owner; who ſerved the office of high-ſheriff for the county in 1801.

The preſent manſion-houſe was built on the ſite of the monaſtery, and is ſuppoſed to have been erected about 150 years; but conſiderable alterations were made in it, and the new beautiful garden front was erected, by Ambroſe Phillipps, eſq. about 1736. Of this front a pleaſing view is given in Plate CXII. by the liberality of Mr. Phillipps; whoſe polite attentions I have much pleaſure in publicly acknowledging.

In that part of the houſe which appears the oldeſt ſome of the lead ſpouts have a fleur de lis; others a boy on an eagle, gryphins, flying horſes, harpies, &c. &c.; and on a ſmall ciſtern leading to one of them is, "S. P. 1742." The arms of Phillipps are alſo on ſeveral of the ſpouts in the old front; of which a ſmall view is ſhewn in Plate CXIII.

TRIUMPHAL ARCH-WAY in GARENDON PARK.

3P2

In the drawing-room of Garendon Hall are ſeveral good portraits.

Two of ſir Ambroſe Phillipps; one a fine miniature; the other a large one, in his ſerjeant's dreſs, with a roll in his hand.

Lady Phillipps, in the ſame ſize.

William Phillipps (who died in 1729) and his lady, large ſize.

Ambroſe Phillipps, eſq. who died member for the county in 1737, in a Venetian dreſs.

The late Samuel Phillipps, eſq.

And ſome other family portraits.

The preſent worthy owner poſſeſſes "A Plan of Garendon Park, the ſeat of Samuel Phillipps, eſq. with the improvements as deſigned by Ambroſe Phillipps, eſq.;" on which the principal front and the back front, each 116 feet, are accurately delineated; with a ground-plan of the whole; views of an intended family mauſoleum; and ſeveral other monumental deſigns.

Mr. Buſby[1], in 1742, gave the Society of Antiquaries a print of a rotunda, like a Roman temple, then lately built by Ambroſe Phillipps, eſq. in his park at Garendon; a private plate, which I am permitted to uſe as Plate CXIV.

The triumphal arch-way (Plate CXV.) is at the end of the part leading to the Foreſt, towards Shepeſhed, where at preſent is no regular road to meet it. —A larger arch was intended for the main entrance to the park from Loughborough.

An obeliſk, 80 feet high, terminates the view from the front of the houſe.

Another lofty obeliſk was alſo intended, on which was to have been a ſtatue of Hercules.

In 1721, four freeholders polled from Garendon; William Phillipps, eſq. John Alt, William Fulwood, and William Warner. In the poll-book of 1775, only one name appears under Garendon; John Buckley, of Normanton, co. Notts, who voted for a moiety out of Zouch Mills, in the tenure of Martha Jelly.

The following circumſtances relative to an extraordinary murder at this place are well authenticated:

"John Harris, of Shepeſhed, carpenter, was convicted of the murder of William Warner, of Garendon, gardener, before Judge Page, March 3, 1729-30. He did not confeſs the crime till three days after condemnation. He was executed, and hung in chains upon Moorly[2] in the Foreſt, the 10th of April following, aged 32. William Warner, the ſon of William Warner aforeſaid, had hired Harris to execute the murder aforeſaid, but afterwards impeached him, and thereupon claimed his Majeſty's pardon, according to a proclamation publiſhed in the Gazette; but, being indicted upon the Black Act for deer-ſtealing, he was condemned in the Midſummer Aſſizes of 1730. The next Lent Aſſizes he was ordered for tranſportation. In November, 1731, he returned from tranſportation, was apprehended at Caſtle Donington the February following, and the next aſſizes ordered for execution. To make his puniſhment more exemplary, he was brought into the Foreſt, and ſuffered upon the ſame poſt where his companion hung in chains. This happened March 31, in the 25th year of his age, A.D. 1732. His body was carried to Leiceſter, and buried in All Saints church yard, by the Rev. Mr. Hackett[3]."

The following particulars relative to this murder were communicated by Mr. Webſter, of Loughborough; whoſe father, ſtill living, well remembers the chief part of the circumſtances: "William Warner, having a houſe in Garendon Park about three quarters of a mile from the hall, was a widower, and had a ſon grown to manhood, and likewiſe one or more daughters, one of whom was courted by John Harris, carpenter of Shepeſhed; and it was ſuppoſed by the ſon and daughters that the old man made love to the dairy-maid at the hall, which perhaps was the caſe, but which did not meet with their approbation: for one night, the old man having ſtayed at the hall until eleven o'clock, about the midway he was found murdered; and ſuſpicion falling on his ſon and Harris, they were both apprehended. Before this happened, Harris was a man of good character, and well reſpected."

The Shepeſhed Regiſter has alſo the following entry reſpecting another perſon who was ſuſpected of being privy to the murder:

"John Flawn[4] was condemned, for forging Mrs. Grey's will of Kegworth, by judge Probyn, Aug. 31, 1741. He was executed at Leiceſter Aug. 15; and buried at Shepeſhed Aug. 16."

On Sunday night, Aug. 16, 1800, three ruffians attacked the houſe of Mr. Whittle of Haliwell Haw[5] (the farm-houſe built on the ſite of a hermitage near Loughborough), about eleven o'clock. Mr. Whittle and his ſon went out and ſaw the men: it is ſuppoſed one man was robbing the hen-rooſt whilſt the other watched. One of the ruffians fired a gun loaded with ſhot and ſlugs, and ſhot Mr. Whittle, who dropped on the ſpot. It is ſuppoſed one of the ſhots penetrated the brain, ſeveral in his body, and a ſlug grazed his ſhoulder, and penetrated the body of a tree at a diſtance. The ſlug was afterwards cut out of the body of the tree. After the ruffian's ſhot, Mr. Whittle's ſon fired his piece at them. Whether the ſhot took place is not known. Mr. Whittle's ſon was not wounded, though he was by his father's ſide. Mr. Whittle was the ſon of Mr. William Whittle the old warrener, whoſe deſcription of the ſlipping of a hill has been already noticed[6]. He rented Halliwell Haw of Mr. Phillipps; which is in the liberty of Garendon, and was formerly moated round. The moats are ſtill viſible; and the well is an uncommonly fine one, very large; perhaps five yards long and three broad: it is a ſoft water, never freezes in winter, and at the ſpring-head throws out as much water as would turn a mill-wheel; the ſame quantity in ſummer as in winter. Some curioſities have been found there within a few years back.

Feb. 18, 1741; and promiſed to be an active and uſeful member; but his life was ſhortened, June 2, 1742, at the age of 35. A curious ſeal in his poſſeſſion is noticed in Gent. Mag. vol. LXXI. p. 1077.

A hill about a mile diſtant, but in ſight of Shepeſhed. Cloſe behind it is a tremendous rock.

[3] Theſe particulars are entered in the Pariſh Regiſter of Shepeſhed, by the Rev. Thomas Heath, then vicar.

[4] "Flawn kept a public-houſe at Shepeſhed, which was a place of reſort for Warner and Harris; and notoriouſly a bad houſe. I have further heard, that a girl who lived ſervant with Flawn reported that ſeveral bloody napkins were burnt at his houſe after the murder; and it ſeems likely, as vengeance overtook him, though it was ſo long after. I remember, when I was a boy, it was very much talked of; and I knew the ſpot where it was ſaid the murder was committed. I have heard my mother ſay, that it was common report that Harris recollected when the blow was, as it were, gone from him, and had not reached the old man, that he had had his fortune told him, that he ſhould kill a man, and be hanged for it. [3] Repreſentative in parliament for the borough of Marlborough in 1727 and 1734; and for the county of Southampton (of which many of his anceſtors had been ſheriff) in 1737.—This family is very antient, and makes a conſiderable figure in Britiſh Hiſtory, under the name of De Inſulâ; and it is remarkable, that the Liſles were among the early benefactors to Garendon Abbey (ſee p. 811). Of this family was John Liſle, eſq. one of Cromwell's lords, and commiſſioner of his great ſeal; the ſacrifice of whoſe widow, by the infamous Judge Jefferies, has been generally reprobated. By this lady, who was a coheireſs of ſir White Beconſawe, knight, Moyles Court, Hants, was brought in marriage to the Liſles in 1636. At the advanced age of 80, ſhe was tried, convicted, and executed at Wincheſter, for ſecreting in her houſe two Diſſenting miniſters, who took refuge there after the defeat of the duke of Monmouth's little army at Sedgemoor in Somerſetſhire.

On a plain flat ſtone in Ellingham church-yard is the following conciſe inſcription:

> "Here lies Dame Alicia Liſle, and her daughter Anne Hartſall.
> Alicia Liſle died the 2d Sept. 1625."

Abſtract and Analyſis of the principal Deeds in the Regiſter, or Chartulary, of GERONDON ABBEY, in the Poſſeſſion of the Marquis of LANSDOWN.

⁂ This fine Chartulary is very fairly written on 38 leaves of vellum, and well preſerved. In 1680 it was the property of GEORGE VILLIERS, duke of BUCKINGHAM, who at that time poſſeſſed the ſite of the Abbey; and came, in 1683, with the title-deeds of the lordſhip, into the poſſeſſion of AMBROSE PHILLIPPS, eſq.; by one of whoſe deſcendants it was preſented to JAMES WEST, eſq. who owned it in 1763, when the contents were prefixed by Dr. DUCAREL. On Mr. Weſt's death, in 1772, it was purchaſed (with many other valuable MSS.) by the preſent noble Owner, to whoſe public ſpirit I am indebted for the loan of it. The beginning Dr. Ducarel thought to be as old as the time of King Henry I.; though the latter part is not older than that of King Edward III. On a ſpare leaf are, as uſual, ſome detached memoranda; amongſt which the only one in the leaſt legible is, that the abbot, on the feaſt of the Annunciation of the Bleſſed Virgin, 49 Edw. III. 1375, ſold a quantity of beans and peas, "unum taſſum[1] fabarum & piſarum," to ſir Wareyn de Bagworth and his brother, for the ſum of 32*l.*; and, in conſideration of the money being to be paid by future inſtallments, 100*s.* to be added to the price, of which 20*s.* were paid at the ſigning of the agreement.

Robertus comes Legrec' epiſcopo Lincolnie, baronibus & hominibus ſuis, & omnibus filiis ſancte eccleſie, ſalutem. Noſcant omnes tam preſentes quam futuri, quod ego Robertus, pro ſalute anime mee, & uxoris mee, & filiorum meorum, & patris & matris mee, & parentum meorum, conceſſi & confirmavi Deo & Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ſecundùm beati Benedicti regulam ibidem degentibus, & ſecundùm conſuetudinem Ciſtercienſis eccleſie Deo ſervientibus, omnes donationes patris mei, videlicet, v carucatas & iii virgatas terre in Geroldoniâ, cum pratis & paſcuis omnibus eidem terre pertinentibus; & ut habeant paſturam bovibus, & vaccis, & porcis, & capris, & equis, & omnibus eorum animalibus, cujuſcunque ſint generis, quietè omnino de ſuffragio, & omni aliâ conſuetudine, in nemoribus meis de Sepehevid & de Diſſelai. Preterea concedo eis, ut habeant de eiſdem nemoribus materiem ad domos ſuas faciendas, & omnia alia neceſſaria ſua, & ligna ad ignem, & quicquid eis neceſſarium fuerit ad haias ſuas, & alia omnia aiſiamenta ſua, ſine vaſto foreſte, quod non ſit deſtructio nemoris, ſicut in patris mei cartâ continetur. Preterea conceſſi & confirmavi eis quicquid in Diſſeleiâ de feodo meo, cum omnibùs pertinentiis ſuis, & ii caruc' terre in Ringeltorp, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis; & in burgo Legrec' burgenſem unum quietum, ut hoſpitetur eos. Concedo etiam & confirmo predictis monachis de Gerold', de boſco de Sepeheviâ, unam leucatam in latitudine, & in longitudine unam leucatam & dimidiam, ſicut patris noſtri carta teſtatur. Prefatam verò terram de Diſſelai & boſcum concedo & confirmo, ſicut pater meus dedit eis, ad incrementum videlicet rerum aliarum quas prius dederat eis. Haſque omnes donationes tenebunt monachi prenominati in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam. Ego autem & heredes mei poſt me eccleſiam predictam & res ejus in noſtrâ propriâ manu & protectione tenebimus, tanquam noſtram propriam elemoſinam. Teſtibus Petronillâ comitiſsâ, Willo filio meo, Willo abbate de Legrec', [fratre Hug' canonico, Roberto capellano, Ernaldo de Boſco, Willo Baſſet, Aſketillo Mallori, Gilleb' de Charneles, Willo de Widvill, Willo Dive, Rogero de Cranford, Ricardo filio Walonis, Rogero Trutanno, Herũ Mareſcallo, Rabello de Seinevillâ, Ham' de Hottot, Philippo de Stanes, Edwino de Sepeheviâ, Gilberto Foreſt, Galfrido Oſtiario, Godeberto Foreſtario.]

G. Camerarius de Clintun [3]. (1. a.)

G. Camerarius de Clintunâ R. epiſcopo de Ceſtriâ, & omnibus ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, perpetuam ſalutem in Domino. Notum ſit omnibus vobis, quod Robertus de Burtuniâ, conceſſu meo & bonâ voluntate, dedit & conceſſit Deo & Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, in perpetuam elemoſinam, iii carucatas terre in Ibeſtochâ, cum omnibus appenditiis, tam in pratis quam in paſcuis, & in omnibus aliis neceſſariis predictis iii carucatis terre pertinentibus. Hec villa Ibeſtocha reddebat mihi ſervitium unius militis; [& ad has iii carucatas terre predicte Ibeſtoche, que fuit tertia pars ville, quam predicti monachi modò in ſuâ poſſeſſione ſuſceperunt, pertinebat ſervitium tertie partis unius militis.] Sed ego, peccatis meis preteritis, pro meipſo & omnibus amicis meis adhuc in hâc fragili vitâ viventibus, & pro animâ patris mei, ceterorumque propinquorum meorum jam defunctorum, predictum ſervitium tercie partis unius militis in perpetuum quietum concedo Deo & Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & fratribus ibidem Deo ſervientibus, & Roberto de Burtuniâ. Hanc autem quietationem & conceſſionem proprii ſigilli impreſſione confirmo. Quare volo, & omnibus preſentibus atque futuris notifico, quatenus predicti fratres ſupradictam terram abſque ullâ calumniâ omnium futurorum, tam heredum meorum quam extraneorum, benè & in pace, & honorificè, & quietè, in perpetuum teneant. His teſtibus; Roberto comite de Legreceſtriâ, Roberto comite de Ferrariis, Hugone Paupere, Hernaldo de Boſco, Galfrido abbate, Roberto de Crefe, Galfrido de Turvillâ, Ricardo clerico comitis, Rogero de Frievillâ, Ricardo de I'neres, Willielmo de Greſeleiâ, Edwino Diſpenſatore.

Willielmus comes de Warwic' [4]. (1. a.)

Omnibus ſancte matris eccleſie fidelibus, Willielmus comes de Warewic, ſalutem. Sciatis me penitùs remiſiſſe & quietum clamâſſe ſervitium dimidii militis Gaufredi de Clintonâ, & Rob' de Burtunâ, & heredibus eorum in perpetuum, quod mihi debebant pro parte illâ de Ibeſtocâ quam monachi de Geroldoniâ tenent. Quare volo & firmiter ſtatuo, ut predictus Gaufridus de Clintonâ & Robertus de Burtonâ, & heredes eorum, omnimodis predictam habent quietantiam erga me & heredes meos, & monachi erga eos & heredes eorum, de ſupramemorato ſervitio, & de omnibus auxiliis, & relevationibus, & exactionibus ſecularibus, ad me & ad heredes meos & ad heredes eorum pertinentibus. Teſtibus; Rotroco epiſcopo Ebroiacenſi, Roberto priore de Kinildwurth, [Henrico de Hoburt, Galf' fratre ejus, Turſtino de Munford, Hugone de Ardene, Hugone filio Ricardi, Roberto filio Odonis, Rann' de Buclevill', Oſmundo de Chavĩ, Nigello de Amundevill', Willielmo filio Hugonis, Waltero Revel.

Willielmus comes de Warwic'. (1. b.)

Omnibus ſancte matris eccleſie filiis Willielmus comes de Warewic, ſalutem. Noverint tam poſteri quam preſentes, quod abbas T. & conventus Gerondonie reddiderunt mihi, & heredibus meis in perpetuum quietam clamaverunt, Badeſleiam, cum univerſis ejus pertinentiis, quod Henricus de Cald', aſſenſu patris mei Ricardi, in elemoſinam eis donaverat; & ego, pro hâc redditione & quietantiâ, dedi predicto abbati & monachis ſuis x marchas argenti; & preterea remiſi penitùs & quietum clamavi ſervitium dimidii militis G. de Clintun & R. de Burtun, & heredibus eorum in perpetuum, quod mihi debebatur pro parte illâ de Ybeſtoc que predicti monachi tenent. Privilegia Lucii Pape. (9. a.)

Lucius epiſcopus, ſervus ſervorum Dei, dilectis filiis Roberto abbati & fratribus monaſterii de Geroldoniâ, tam preſentibus quam futuris, regularem vitam profeſſis. Apoſtolici moderaminis clemencie convenit religioſos diligere, & eorum loca ſuâ protectione munire. Dignum namque & honeſtati conveniens eſſe cognoſcitur, ut qui ad eccleſiarum regimen aſſumpti ſumus, eas & a pravorum hominum nequitiâ tutemur, & apoſtolice ſedis patrocinio foveamus. Eapropter, dilecti in Domino filii, veſtris juſtis poſtulationibus clementer annuimus, & prefatum monaſterium, in quo divino mancipati eſtis obſequio, ſub beati Petri & noſtrâ protectione ſuſcipimus, & preſentis ſcripti privilegio communimus; ſtatuentes, ut quaſcunque poſſeſſiones, quecunque bona, ex dono nobilis viri Roberti comitis Legreceſtrenſis, vel aliorum Dei fidelium, idem monaſterium inpreſentiarum juſtè & canonicè poſſidet, aut in futurum, conceſſione pontificum, largitione regum vel principum, oblatione fidelium, ſeu aliis juſtis modis, Deo propitio, poterit adipiſci, firma vobis veſtriſque ſucceſſoribus & illibata permaneant. Sanè laborum veſtrorum quos propriis manibus aut ſumptibus colitis, ſive de nutrimentis veſtrorum animalium, nullus omnino clericus vel laicus decimas exigere preſumat. Sancimus etiam ut ordo monaſticus ſecundùm beati Benedicti regulam & inſtitutionem fratrum Ciſtercienſium perpetuis ibi temporibus inviolabiliter conſervetur. Prohibemus quoque ut nulli fratrum, poſt factam profeſſionem, abſque abbatis totiuſque congregationis permiſſione, liceat ex eodem clauſtro diſcedere. Diſcedentem verò abſque communium literarum cautione nullus audeat retinere. Decernimuſque ut nulli omninò hominum liceat prefatum monaſterium temerè perturbare, aut ejus poſſeſſiones auferre, vel ablatas retinere, minuere, aut aliquibus vexationibus fatigare; ſed omnia integra conſerventur eorum pro quorum gubernatione & ſuſtentatione conceſſa ſunt uſibus omnimodis profutura, ſalvâ auctoritate Romane eccleſie. Si qua igitur in futurum eccleſiaſtica ſeculariſve perſona, hanc noſtre conſtitutionis paginam ſciens, contra eam temerè venire temptaverit, ſecundo trióve commonita, ſi non ſatisfactione congruâ emendaverit, poteſtatis honoriſque ſui dignitate careat, reamque ſe divino judicio exiſtere de perpetratâ iniquitate cognoſcat, & a ſanctiſſimo corpore ac ſanguine Dei & divini Redemptoris noſtri Jeſu Chriſti aliena fiat, atque in extremo examine diſtricte ultioni ſubjaceat. Cunctis autem eidem loco juſta ſervantibus ſit pax Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti, quatinus & hìc fructum bone actionis percipiant, & apud diſtrictum Judicem premia eterne pacis inveniant. Amen.

Privilegia Anaſtaſii Pape. (9. a. b.)

Anaſtaſius epiſcopus, ſervus ſervorum Dei, dilectis filiis monaſterii Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, eorumque ſucceſſoribus monaſticam vitam profeſſis. Religioſam vitam eligentibus, apoſtolicum convenit adeſſe preſidium; ne fortè cujuſlibet temeritatis incurſus aut metus a prepoſito revocet, aut robur, quod abſit, ſacre religionis infringat. Eapropter, dilecti in Domino filii, veſtris juſtis poſtulationibus clementer annuimus, & beate Marie ſemper Virginis eccleſiam, in quâ divino mancipati eſtis obſequio, ſub beati Petri & noſtrâ protectione ſuſcipimus, & preſentis ſcripti privilegio communimus; inprimis ſiquidem ſtatuentes, ut ordo monaſticus, qui ſecundum Deum, & beati Benedicti regulam, atque Ciſtertienſium fratrum conſuetudinem, in eodem loco noſcitur inſtitutus, in ipſo monaſtico futuris temporibus inviolabiliter obſervetur. Prettereà quaſcunque poſſeſſiones, quecunque bona, idem monaſterium inpreſentiarum juſtè & canonicè poſſidet, aut in futurum, conceſſione pontificum, largitione regum vel principum, oblatione fidelium, ſeu aliis juſtis modis, preſtante Domino, poterint adipiſci, firma vobis veſtriſque ſucceſſoribus & illibata remaneant. In quibus hec propriis duximus exprimenda vocabulis: Quicquid habetis in Geroldoniâ ex dono Roberti comitis Legreceſtrie; videlicet, quinque carucatas terre & tres virgatas, cum pratis & omnibus paſcuis ad ipſam terram pertinentibus. Quicquid habetis in Diſſelaiâ. Terram de Ringualtorp, cum pertinentiis ſuis. Paſturam etiam quam in nemoribus ſuis de Sepehevâ & de Diſſelaiâ, ad opus omnium veſtrorum animalium, cujuſcunque generis ſint, quemadmodum vobis ab omni conſuetudine atque paſnagio liberam & quietam idem comes & eccleſie veſtre conceſſit, vobis nichilominus confirmamus. Ligna preterea & materiam neceſſariam ad domos veſtras & edificia conſtruenda, ad ignem, & ad alias neceſſitates veſtras, ab eodem Roberto vobis conceſſa, quemadmodum in ſcripto ejuſdem comitis continetur commiſſe, vobis eccleſie auctoritate apoſtolicâ confirmamus. Quicquid habetis Roberti de Burtuniâ, conſenſu Ricardi filii ſui & heredum ipſius; tres videlicet carucatas terre de dominico ipſius in Ibbeſtochâ, cum omnibus appendiciis ſuis, pratis, paſcuis, & aliis ad eandem terram pertinentiis. Quicquid habetis ex dono Willielmi de Haurucurth, conſenſu Yvonis fratris ſui, & Agnetis matris ipſorum; ſcilicet, tertiam partem totius terre Stantune, cum pratis, paſcuis, & pertinentiis ſuis. Reliquas verò duas, quas, datâ pecuniâ viginti & unâ marcarum argenti & quatuor equis, & decem acras ſegetis, a ſupradicto Willielmo emiſtis, ita quidem quod annis ſingulis unam ei marcam argenti debetis exſolvere, veſtris uſibus perpetuò decerminus pertinere. Duas carucatas terre in Hibeſtochâ. Duas carucatas terre in Cortingeſtocâ. In eadem villâ duas alias carucatas terre. In Burtonâ duas carucatas terre. In eadem villâ unam carucatam terre. Sanè laborum veſtrorum, quos propriis manibus aut ſumptubus colitis, ſeu de nutrimentis veſtrorum animalium, nullus a vobis decimas preſumat exigere. Decerminus ergò ut nulli omnino hominum liceat ſupradictum monaſterium temerariè perturbare, aut ejus poſſeſſiones auferre, vel ablatas retinere, minuere, ſeu quibuſlibet vexationibus fatigare; ſed illibata omnia & integra conſerventur eorum pro quorum gubernatione & ſuſtentatione conceſſa ſunt uſibus omnimodis profutura. Si qua igitur in futurum eccleſiaſtica ſeculariſque perſona, hanc noſtre conſtitutionis paginam ſciens, contra eum temerè venire temptaverit; ſecundo tertióve commonita, nec preſumptionem ſuam congruâ ſatisfactione correxerit, poteſtatis honoriſque ſui dignitate careat, reamque ſe divino judicio exiſtere de perpetratâ iniquitate cognoſcat, & a ſanctiſſimo corpore ac ſanguine Dei & divini Redemptoris noſtri Jehu Chriſti aliena fiat, atque in extremo examine diſtricte ultioni ſubjaceat. Cunctis autem eidem loco ſua jura ſervientibus ſit pax Domini noſtri Jehu Chriſti, quatinus & hìc fructum bone actionis percipiant, & apud diſtrictum Judicem premia eterne pacis inveniant. Amen.

Privilegia Alexandri Pape. (9. b. 10. a.)

Alexander epiſcopus, ſervus ſervorum Dei, dilectis Turſtino abbati monaſterii de Geroldoniâ, ejuſque fratribus, tam preſentibus quam futuris, regularem vitam profeſſis. Religioſam vitam eligentibus, apoſtolicum convenit adeſſe preſidium; ne fortè cujuſlibet temeritatis incurſus aut metus eos a propoſito revocet, aut robur, quod abſit, ſacre religionis infringat. Eapropter, dilecti in Domino filii, veſtris juſtis poſtulationibus clementer annuimus, & prefatum monaſterium, in quo divino mancipati eſtis obſequio, ſub beati Petri & noſtrâ protectione ſuſcipimus, & preſentis ſcripti paginâ communimus; ſtatuentes ut quaſcunque poſſeſſiones, quecunque bona, idem monaſterium inpreſentiarum juſtè & canonicè poſſidet, aut in futurum, conceſſione pontificum, largitione regum vel principum, oblatione fidelium, ſeu aliis juſtis modis, preſtante Domino, poterit adipiſci, firma vobis & illibata permaneant. In quibus hec propriis duximus exprimenda vocabulis: Grangiam juxta abbatiam, & aliam que dicitur Dixleias. Grangiam nomine Stantun, & aliam Swinefen. Grangiam Cortingeſtoche, Grangiam Rampeſtune, Grangiam Burtun, Grangiam Halebi, Grangiam Ringaltorp, Grangiam Gouthebi; & novam Grangiam de Pecco, cum pertinentiis ſuis. Libertates etiam omnes ſeu immunitates a kariſſimo filio noſtro Henrico illuſtri Anglorum rege nobis & eccleſie noſtre indultas auctoritate apoſtolicâ confirmamus, & illibatas perpetuis temporibus permanere ſtatuimus. Sanè laborum veſtrorum, quos propriis manibus aut ſumptibus colitis, ſive de nutrimentis veſtrorum animalium, nullus omnino clericus ſive laicus a vobis decimas exigere preſumat. Si qua verò libera & abſoluta perſona, pro redemptione anime ſue, veſtro in monaſterio ſe conferre voluerit, ſuſcipiendi eam facultatem liberum habeatis. Preterea ſtatuimus, ut ſi ſuper decimis inter vos & aliquem perſonam eccleſiaſticam, cum conſenſu epiſcopi vel archidiaconi ſui, compoſitio facta fuerit, rata perpetuis temporibus & inconcuſſa perſiſtat; adjicientes etiam auctoritate apoſtolicâ interdictum, ne quis fratres veſtros, poſt factam in veſtro monaſtico profeſſionem, abſque veſtrâ licentiâ ſuſcipere audeat vel retinere. Preſenti quoque decreto ſancimus, ut epiſcopus in cujus epiſcopatu veſtra conſiſtit eccleſia nec regularem electionem abbatis veſtri unquam impediat, nec de removendo ac deponendo eo qui pro tempore fuerit, contra ſtatuta Ciſtercienſis ordinis & auctoritatem privilegiorum ſuorum, ſe intromittat. Paci quoque & tranquillitati veſtre paternâ ſolicitudine providentes, auctoritate apoſtolicâ prohibemus, ne infra clauſuras locorum ſeu grangiarum veſtrarum nullus violentiam vel rapinam ſive furtum facere, ſeu hominem capere, vel combuſtionem facere, audientur. Et ſi quis hoc temerario auſu preſumpſerit, tamquam ſacrilegus judicetur. Decernimus ergo ut nullis omnino hominum liceat prefatam eccleſiam temerè perturbare, aut ejus poſſeſſiones auferre, vel ablatas retinere, minuere, ſeu quibuſlibet vexationibus fatigare; ſed illibata omnia & integra conſerventur eorum pro quorum gubernatione & ſuſtentatione conceſſa ſunt uſibus omnimodis profutura, ſalvâ ſedis apoſtolice auctoritate. Si qua igitur in futurum eccleſiaſtica ſeculariſve perſona, hanc noſtre conſtitutionis paginam ſciens, contra eam temerè venire temptaverit, ſecundo tertióve commonita, niſi preſumptionem ſuam congruâ ſatisfactione correxerit, poteſtatis honoriſque ſui careat dignitate, reamque ſe divino judicio exiſtere de perpetratâ iniquitate cognoſcat, & a ſanctiſſimo corpore & ſanguine Dei & divini Redemptoris noſtri Jehu Chriſti aliena fiat, atque in extremo examine diſtricte ſubjaceat ultioni. Cunctis autem eidem loco ſua jura ſervantibus ſit pax Domini noſtris Jehu Chriſti, quatinus & hìc fructum bone actionis percipiunt, & apud diſtrictum Judicem premia eterne pacis inveniant. Amen.

Carta Regis. (10. a.)

Henricus rex Anglie, & dux Normannie & Aquitanie, & comes Andegavie, archiepiſcopis, epiſcopis, comitibus, baronibus, vicecomitibus, & omnibus fidelibus ſancte eccleſie per Angliam conſtitute, ſalutem. Sciatis me conceſſiſſe & confirmâſſe abbatiam Geroldonie, cum omnibus appenditiis ſuis, & cum omnibus terris unde habent cartas ſuas & cyrographia, de cujuſcunque feudo ſint. Quare volo & precipio ut benè & in pace, & quietè & liberè ab omni conſuetudine ſeculari, omnes poſſeſſiones ſuas teneant, ſicut aliqua eccleſia in totâ terrâ meâ meliùs & liberiùs tenet. Et volo & precipio quod nullus abbatem vel monachos predicte eccleſie de poſſeſſionibus ſuis mittat in placitum niſi per me & ante me. Preterea volo & precipio ut ſint quieti de ſcireis & hundredis, & Danegelde, & de omnibus aliis ſecularibus infeſtationibus. Carta Roberti comitis ſenioris, de Dixeleiâ. (10. b.)

Robertus comes Legreceſtrie univerſis ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, tam preſentibus quàm futuris, ſalutem. Sciatis me dediſſe, & hâc cartâ meâ confirmâſſe, eccleſie beate Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, totam terram illam quam Rabellus de Seignevillâ tenuit in Dyxleiâ, in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam, & liberam; & de boſco de Sepeheved unam leucatam in latitudine, & in longitudine unam leucatam & dimidiam. Hanc verò terram & hunc boſcum dedi eis ad incrementum rerum illarum quas priùs eis dederam. Quare volo firmiterque precipio, quod predicti monachi teneant predictam terram & predictum boſcum liberè, & quietè, & honorificè. Teſtibus; Roberto priore de Kinildeworde, Hugone Barre archidiacono, Willielmo de Calewich, Roberto capellano meo, Willielmo Baſſet, Harveio Mareſcal, Rogero de Cranford, Rogero Waleis, Radulfo Fridai, Willielmo de Amundevillâ, Petro clerico meo, Symone clerico, Roberto de Creft.

Robertus comes Legeceſtrie. (11. a.)

Robertus comes Legreceſtrie omnibus hominibus ſuis, Francis & Anglis, preſentibus & futuris, ſalutem. Sciatis me, pro ſalute meâ, & uxoris mee, & Roberti filii mei, & patris & matris mee, & anteceſſorum meorum, dediſſe in perpetuam elemoſinam Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, in manerio meo de Lochentun, in Michelholmio, ad faciendam unam piſcariam, locum competentem in Trente; & ita fieri debet quod homines non habent juſtam querelam conquerendi quod in eis aliquod nocumentum fiat. Et hoc feci conceſſu Roberti filii mei & heredis. Teſtibus; Alexandro abbate de Bitleſden, & A. priore Legreceſtrie, Roberto capellano, Ernaldo de Boſco, Galfrido Labbe, Ricardo Teverai, Willielmo de Charneles, Radulpho de Turevillâ, Davido de Bocebi, Herveio Mareſcallo, Rogero de Cranford, Rogero Walenſi, Willielmo filio Amfredi.

Carta Gereberti. (11. a.)

Alexandro, Dei gratiâ, Lincolnienſi epiſcopo, & cuncte pie matris eccleſie filiis, Willielmus Gerebertus preſentis vite proſperitatem & indeficientis beatitudinis eternitatem. Notum ſit omnibus, tam poſteris quàm preſentibus, quod ego Willielmus Gerebertus, conſilio & conceſſione fratrum meorum Johannis & Helye, & ſponſe mee, & ceterorum meorum amicorum, clamo ſolidam & quietam, & ſine calumniâ, Geroldoniam, cum omnibus appenditiis ſuis, pro animâ patris mei, & meâ, & omnium familiarium meorum, monachis de Waverle. Hancque, Moderatrice omnium bonorum diſcretione me ad id adducente, predictam Geroldoniam ad fundamentum abbatie libens concedo; quamvis illud manerium, cujus membrum Geroldonia eſt, patre meo injuſtè & abſque judicio, & ſine aliquo foriſfacto, eſſet ablatum. Preterea quicquid Robertus comes Legreceſtrie de eodem manerio monachis in prefatâ Geroldoniâ habitantibus dedit, quia modò illud tenet in ſuo dominio, hujus cartule teſtimonio indivulſum manere a me & ab omnibus meis confirmo; &, ſi divina miſericordia me quandocunque illud manerium adipiſci permiſerit, in multis dominia monachorum augmentabo.

Willielmus de Harvecurt. (11. b.)

Anno ab Incarnatione M°C°XLVIII°, Stephani regis Anglie XIII°, domini Godefridi abbatis IV°, ſexto idûs Martii, apud Geroldoniam, coram omni conventu, hujus conventionis tractata fuit cauſa, & ad finem uſque producta, inter Willielmum de Harvecurt & predicte eccleſie monachos. Notum ſit archiepiſcopis & epiſcopis, clericis & laicis, Francis & Anglis, preſentibus & futuris, & omnibus inſimul ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, quod ego Willielmus de Harvecurt, conceſſu & bonâ voluntate Yvonis fratris mei, & Agnetis matris mee, omniumque ceterorum amicorum meorum, tam propinquiorum quam extraneorum, conceſſi Deo & Sancte Marie, & monachis Geroldonie de ordine Ceſtertienſi, totam terram Stantunie, cum omnibus appendiciis, in pratis & paſcuis, & ceteris neceſſariis ad illam terram pertinentibus; tertiam ſcilicet partem in perpetuam elemoſinam, pro animâ patris mei, & aliorum parentum meorum defunctorum, necnon & pro remiſſione propriorum meorum peccatorum, omniumque inſimul amicorum, preteritorum, preſentium, & futurorum. Reliquas verò II predicte terre partes firmâ & ſtabili emptione & venditione, propter XX marcas argenti, & IV equos, mihi III & Yvoni fratri meo I; & matri mee marcam I, & X acras ſegetis. Et, ut emptio hec & venditio ſit ſtabilis & firma, per annos ſingulos, in recognitione I marcam argenti. Et ſuper hoc, quod magis utique diligo, ſi in hâc terrâ meus extremus ſupervenit dies, predicti monachi corpus meum ad ſepulturam ſuſcipientes, in ſuâ eccleſiâ, ſicut pro illius loci monacho, per omnia facient. Hanc donationem & venditionem ego Willielmus de Harvecurt & Yvo frater meus, propriis manibus, ſuper altare Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ obtulimus, preſenti omni conventu, & aliis quamplurimis militibus & clericis, Francis & Anglis. Quicunque diebus poſteris, diabolicâ ammonitione, predictos monachos ſuper hâc conventione quocunque modo infeſtare contendit, ego Willielmus de Harvecurt & Yvo frater meus, ceterique amici mei, coram regibus & principibus, in omnibus curiis manutenendo, & cauſam eorum defendendo, ſecundum poſſe noſtrum, ſicut pro noſtro patrimonio & propriâ hereditate prompti defenſores aſtabimus. Hujus conventionis ego Willielmus de Harvecurt ſum auctor & teſtis, cum aliis plurimis hic denotatis; Yvone fratre meo, Johanne preſbytero de Boſeword, Jordano de Chaili, Helyâ Catem', Ricardo filio Frewardi, Helgeram de Suentune, Ricardo filio Grifin, Ingenulſo de Carneles, Edwino Diſpenſatore, Perchenhaie de Sepeheve, Godeberto de Sepeheve, Rogero de Dixeleiâ, Fulcone filio ſuo, Gilleberto de Torp, Galfrido filio Hoſmundi, Wlrico de Leiceſtriâ, Galfrido filio ſuo, Willielmo filio Symonis fine.

Ivo de Harvecurt. (12. a.)

Notum ſit archiepiſcopis & epiſcopis, clericis & laicis, Francis & Anglis, preſentibus & futuris, & omnibus inſimul ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, quod ego Yvo de Harvecurt, cum communi conſenſu amicorum meorum & conſilio, concedo & do, & firmiter confirmo, donationem & venditionem fratris mei Willielmi de Harvecurt, & eaſdem conventiones quas habuit cum abbate & monachis de Geroldoniâ, ſicut heres totius patrimonii, & qui pecuniam predicte emptionis & venditionis ſuſcepi. Hanc donationem, venditionem, & emptionem, ego Yvo & Willielmus frater meus ſuper altare poſuimus: & hoc conſilio & bonâ voluntate matris noſtre Agnetis, & ceterorum amicorum noſtrorum. Si quis autem hujus donationis & venditionis atque emptionis calumniator acceſſerit, per me & per amicos & per heredes meos, ſicut pro propriâ hereditate, coram regibus & principibus, in omnibus curiis manutenendo, & cauſam eorum defendendo, ſecundum poſſe noſtrum, prompti defenſores aſtabimus. Sicut etiam frater meus Willielmus hanc conventionem ſcripto ſuo confirmavit, &, me preſente atque concedente, totoque conventu aſtante, multiſque aliis tam clericis quam laicis ſimul preſentibus, ſuper altare ejuſdem eccleſie poſuit, ita & ego poſui, & ad memoriam poſterorum cartâ confirmavi. Iſti ſunt teſtes; Johannes de Boſewordâ & Willielmus de Garenton, Rogerus de Bareſworde & Wodeman de Witachere, Willielmus Lenforced, Gaufridus de Garenton, Henricus de Careltone, Radulphus Wiſcard, Ricardus filius Grifin, Alardus de Wlfre, Robertus filius Engelram & Pagamus frater ſuus, Ricardus filius Willielmi, Valterus de Chibeworth, Ricardus Piſtor.

Robertus de Harvecurt. (12. a.; printed in p. 806.)

Willielmus Burdet. (12. a.)

Sciant omnes qui viderint literas has, quod ego Willielmus Burdet & Hugo filius voluimus & concedimus ut monachi de Geroldoniâ teneant liberè & quietè Stantonam, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, ſicut tenuerunt tempore Yonis de Harecurt, unam marcam inde per ſingulis annis perſolvendis[1].

Tomas Diſpenſator. (12. a.)

Omnibus filiis ſancte matris eccleſie Tomas Diſpenſator, filius Gaufridi Diſpenſatoris, ſalutem. Sciatis me conceſſiſſe & confirmâſſe donationem patris mei, quam fecit monachis de Geroldoniâ, videlicet, de totâ terrâ quam reclamavit in Stantonâ. Et ſicut ille prefatam donationem coram monachis & multis aliis teſtibus ſuper altare poſuit, ſic & ego manu meâ eandem donationem ſuper altare Dei obtuli & conceſſi, ut monachi eam teneant liberè & quietè a me, & a cunctis heredibus meis, in perpetuam elemoſinam. Semitam quoque in campo eorum, per quam ego & homines mei incedere ſolebamus, que erat ad gravamen eorum, & ad detrimentum ſegetum, quietam omnino conceſſi. Hii fuerunt teſtes; Willielmus abbas Legreceſtrie, Hugo Barre, Willielmus Burdet, Willielmus de Widevill, Gaufridus filius Algot, Willielmus de Rudevill, Gillebertus filius Picot, Gillebertus de Segrave, Radulphus Fridei, Ricardus filius Nicholai, Gaufridus Oſtiarius, Gilbertus Foreſtarius, Aſketillus de Torp, Johannes Conſtantin, Gaufridus de Curci, Ranulphus Leblud.

Ernaldus de Boſco. (12. b.)

Univerſis ſancte Dei eccleſie filiis Ernaldus de Boſco ſalutem. Noverint cuncti fideles tam poſteri quam preſentes, quod ego Ernaldus conceſſi eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis Deo ibidem ſervientibus, & in perpetuam elemoſinam dedi, manerium meum Stantonam de ſub monte Bardonâ, quod Gaufridus de Ghent in feudum & hereditatem mei pro ſervicio meo donaverat. Hoc itaque manerium, cum omnibus libertatibus & conſuetudinibus ſuis, in nemore & plano, pratis & paſcuis, & omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, volo ut predicta eccleſia & monachi benè & in pace & honorificè teneant, ſolutum & liberum & quietum ab omni ſervitio & exactione ſeculari erga me & heredes meos; defendendum etiam fideliter & pro poſſe meo manutenendum contra omnes qui aliquam violentiam vel injuriam predicte eccleſie vel monachis inferre temptaverint. Hujus autem conceſſionis mee ſunt teſtes; Robertus comes Legreceſtrie, Ricardus abbas de Prato Legreceſtrie, Gaufridus abbas.

Geraldus de Burtonâ [1]. (15. b.)

Univerſis ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, tam preſentibus quam futuris, Gerardus de Burtonâ ſalutem. Sciatis me conceſſiſſe, & hâc cartâ meâ confirmâſſe, donationem Emme uxoris mee Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, pro ſalute anime mee, & omnium anteceſſorum meorum; ſcilicet, heremitorium de Halliwellehage, cum omni incremento nemoris, & pratum ad cheveſcias, que predicta uxor mea, cum conceſſu heredum ſuorum Willielmi & Roberti, prefate eccleſie, antequam deſponſeram, in perpetuam elemoſinam donavit, per diviſas quas ego & uxor mea & filii ipſius ipſis demonſtravimus. Hanc igitur elemoſinam ego & uxor mea & filii ejus guarantizabimus, & contra omnes homines defenſores aſtabimus. His teſtibus; Gilleberto de Setgrave, Aſketillo de Berges, Gilleberto filio Picot, Roberto filio Picot, Gilleberto filio Gerardi, Gregorio de Dive, Ricardo de Swanhintun, Rogero filio Godeberti.

Robertus de Jort. (15. b.)

Notum ſit cunctis fidelibus matris eccleſie, tam preſentibus quam futuris, quod ego Robertus de Jort, cum conſilio & bonâ voluntate & conceſſione uxoris mee Emme, & heredum meorum Willielmi & Roberti, dedi Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ x acras terre in campo de Wimund', juxta campum de Burtunâ, ſimul & heremitorium de Haliwellehage, ſicut dedi illi qui priùs ibi manſerit, in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam, ſolutam & quietam ab omni ſervitio. In recompenſationem hujus donationis, monachi predicte eccleſie dederunt mulam unam, uxori mee II ſolidos, & Willielmo & Roberto heredibus meis unicuique VI denarios. Teſtibus; Gaufrido clerico de Wimundewald, Roberto diacono de Lucteburg', Aſketillo de Preſtwould, Gaufrido de Jort, Henrico filio Serlonis & Ricardo fratre ejus, Nicholao & Alvino mercatoribus de Montſorel, & aliis multis.

Willielmus de Jort. (15. b.)

Noverint univerſi filii ſancte matris eccleſie quod ego Willielmus de Jort, poſtquam revelavi terram meam & uxorem duxi, cum bonâ voluntate & conceſſione matris mee Emote, & fratrum meorum, conceſſi & confirmavi donationes patris mei Deo & Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus; ſcilicet, x acras terre in campo de Wimundewald, juxta campum de Burtonâ, & heremitorium de Halliwellehage, in longitudine & latitudine ita plenariè ſicut habuerunt in tempore patris mei, & ſicut cyrographum patris mei teſtatur; & paſturam xx vaccis & nutrimentis earum. Has prenominatas terras liberas & quietas ab omni ſervitio & conſuetudine ſeculari habebunt monachi in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam, excepto quod ſingulis annis dabunt unum caſeum in Natali Domini. Et ego & heredes mei predictis monachis terras illas ſicut noſtram perpetuam elemoſinam contra omnes homines guarantizabimus. His teſtibus; Galfrido clerico de Wimundewald, Willielmo Putrel & Galfrido filio ejus, Radulpho filio Hugonis, Aſketillo de Berges, Ivone de Preſtwald, Andreâ de Wimundewald & Willielmo filio ejus, & Picot, & Roberto de Jort, Radulpho filio Radulphi, Gerardo de Burtonâ.

Acilia uxor Ricardi Frumentini. (15. b.)

Notum ſit univerſis ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, tam preſentibus quam futuris, quod ego Acilia dedi & conceſſi Deo & Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, conceſſione domini mei Ricardi, & filiorum meorum Roberti & Willielmi, pro ſalute noſtrâ, & omnium anteceſſorum noſtrorum, totam illam partem terre inter Burtonam & Seggeheſwald, que pertinet ad unam carucatam terre, & ex aliâ parte dimidiam partem predicte carucate inter Burtonam & Soram, que propinquior fuit ville de Burtonâ. Et preterea do predictis monachis III acras terre inter Houtonam & Wimundeſwald de maritagio meo, que magis ſint ad eorum commodum, cum dimidiâ parte totius prati de Seggeheſwald. Hec omnia tenebunt predicti monachi in perpetuam elemoſinam, reddendo ſingulis annis mihi & heredibus meis II ſolidos & VI denarios ad feſtum Sancti Johannis Baptiſte, ſalvo forenſi ſervitio. Et ego Acilia & heredes mei hanc elemoſinam contra omnes homines guarantizabimus, & defenſores aſtabimus. His teſtibus; Roberto filio Hard', Gilleberto filio Picot, Gilleberto de Setgrave, Aſketillo de Berges, Godefrido de Stanford, & multis aliis; Dioniſiâ uxore Aſketilli, & Roeheſiâ uxore Aſketilli de Berges, & Matillidâ uxore Godefridi, & Aeliciâ uxore Ivonis de Preſtwould.

Carta Ricardi Frumentini. (16. a.)

Univerſis ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, tam preſentibus quam futuris, Ricardus Frumentinus & Acilia uxor ejus ſalutem. Sciatis nos, communi aſſenſu & integrâ voluntate, conſilio amicorum noſtrorum, & conſenſu & conceſſione heredum noſtrorum Roberti & Willielmi, dediſſe, & hâc cartâ confirmâſſe Deo & Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, pro ſalute noſtrâ & anteceſſorum noſtrorum, totam illam partem terre inter Burtonam & Seggeheſwald que pertinet ad I carucatam terre, & ex aliâ parte dimidiam predicte carucate inter Burtonam & Soram, que propinquior eſt ville de Burtonâ. Et preterea damus predictis monachis III acras terre inter Houtonam & Wimundewald de dominio noſtro, que magis ſint ad eorum commodum, cum dimidiâ parte totius prati de Seggeheſwald. Hec omnia tenebunt predicti monachi in perpetuam elemoſinam, reddendo ſingulis annis nobis & heredibus noſtris II ſolidos & VI denarios ad feſtum Sancti Johannis Baptiſte, ſalvo forenſi ſervitio. Et ego Ricardus Frumentinus & Acilia uxor mea, & heredes noſtri, hanc elemoſinam contra omnes homines guarantizabimus, & defenſores aſtabimus. His teſtibus; Roberto filio Hard', Gilleberto filio Picot, Gilleberto de Setgrave, Aſketillo de Berges, Godefrido de Stanford, Ricardo filio Serlonis, Odone filio Picot, Ricardo filio Nicholai & Nicholao filio ejus, Oſberto de Preſtwald.

Aſketillus de Berges[1]. (16. a.)

Noverint cuncti filii ſancte matris eccleſie quod ego Aſketillus de Berges do Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, IIII carucatas terre in Burtonâ, in agris & pratis, in paſcuis, & rivis, & cheveſciis, in aquis & ſtagnis, in viis & ſemitis, & ceteris rebus univerſis per totum campum adjacentibus; quas tenebunt in puram elemoſinam, liberas & quietas ab omni terreno ſervitio ad me & ad heredes meos pertinente. Has IIII carucatas ego & heredes mei manutenebimus & guarantizabimus, & ubique pro poſſe noſtro defenſores aſtabimus. Inter has IIII carucatas terre due carucate terre quas tenuit Galfridus Diſpenſator non erunt, nec aliqua pars earum, nec terra eccleſie, nec terra Picot, quia monachis ſuas IIII carucatas ego Aſketillus de Berges liberas & quietas ab omni calumniâ donavi. Preterea concedo & do eis totum clauſuram curie ſue quam tenent in excambio toftarum ville, & extra curiam octo acras, in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam. Pro quartâ verò carucatâ terre perſolvent monachi ſingulis annis IIII ſolidos; duos domino meo Radulpho, & duos mihi, & heredibus noſtris. Et quia conceſſi eis habere per totum campum communè & plenariè IIII carucatas terre, in terris & in pratis, exceptis omnibus aliis que prius acceperam ab eis, ſicut cyrographa eorum teſtantur, dederunt mihi monachi decem ſolidos. Preterea dabunt mihi, quamdiu vixero, unoquoque anno, cappam unam inter feſtum Sancti Michaelis & Sancti Martini, & unos ſotularens, & alios ſotulares inter Letare Jeruſalem & Paſcha; & panem unum monachi cotidie quamdiu accipere voluero. De cappâ & ſotularibus, & pane, poſt mortem meam erunt monachi omnino quieti. His teſtibus; Roberto comite Legreceſtrie, Yvone de Harvecurt, Willielmo Burdet, Roberto de Creft, Roberto capellano, Willielmo de Wideuill, Hervi le Mareſcal, Radulpho de Turevillâ, Willielmo de Charneles, Hugone de Scaldford, Roberto filio Hardulf, Ricardo Frumentino, Ricardo filio Nicholai, Thomâ de Alebi, Ernaldo de Tuiford, Gilleberto de Setgrave, Willielmo filio Anfr', Alano de Rampeſtun.

Aſketillus de Berges. (16. a.)

Notum ſit omnibus tam preſentibus quam futuris fidelibus matris eccleſie, quod ego Aſketillus de Berges conceſſi Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ illam carucatam terre quam Gillebertus ſacerdos de Waletunâ de me in feudum tenuit, in pratis & paſcuis, & aliis pertinentiis, ſicut predictus Gillebertus ſacerdos illam preſate eccleſie dedit, & ſuper altare coram teſtibus obtulit. Monachi vero predicte eccleſie, pro annuo cenſu & adquietatione omnium rerum & ſervitiorum que ad me pertinent, mihi & heredibus unoquoque anno IV ſolidos dabunt, ad feſtivitatem Sancte Crucis poſt Paſcha. Pro hâc vero conceſſione & conventione mihi dedit conventus Geroldonie II marcas argenti, & I equitaturam V ſolidorum. Unde volo ut omnes amici mei & vicini, Franci & Anglici, ſciant & intelligant quod ego Aſketillus contra omnes qui hanc conventionem temptaverint infringere, & a poſſeſſione eccleſie ſubtrahere, cum eiſdem monachis defenſurus aſtabo. Et illos precor quatenus hujus conventionis ſint teſtes, & mecum aſſiſtant defenſores, ut illibatè prenominatam terram in perpetuam poſſeſſionem conſervent eccleſie Geroldonie. Iſta carucata, que prius diviſa jacebat per totum campum, nunc apud Soram jacet, exceptis pratis que ſunt apud Waldz. His teſtibus; Clemente ſacerdote, Roberto de Jort, Ricardo Frumentino, Aſketillo de Preſtewaldâ, Picot de Wimundewald, Geraldo de Burtunâ, Geraldo de Waletunâ, Radulpho milite, Ricardo ſcriptore, Andreâ, Ranulfo de Preſtewaldâ, Roberto de Burtunâ, Alphaht filio Marie.

Aſketillus de Berges. (16. b.)

Notum ſit omnibus audientibus vel videntibus literas has, quod ego Aſketillus de Berges, cum conſilio & bonâ voluntate Hugonis de Berges patris mei, & conceſſione ac confirmatione dominorum meorum Turſtini & Radulphi de Queniburg, concedo & firmâ donatione do Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ III carucatas terre in Burtunâ; ſcilicet, II carucatas terre apud Seggeheſwald plenariè, & I carucatam per totum campum ut jacet, cum omnibus predicte terre pertinentiis, in agris & pratis, in paſcuis, & rivis, & cheveſciis, in aquis & ſtagnis, in viis & ſemitis, & ceteris rebus univerſis, in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam, ſolutas, liberas, & quietas ab omni terreno ſervitio. Hanc donationem predicte terre unuſquiſque noſtrorum ſuper altare poſuit, & ſacramento confirmavit. Dederunt autem mihi monachi predicte eccleſie, in adquietatione omnium rerum omnino & omnium ſerviciorum, & pro recompenſatione hujus donationis & elemoſine, XVI marcas argenti. Hujus donationis teſtes ſunt; magiſter Bernardus de Queniburc, Galfridus de Jort, Robertus diaconus de Lutteburg, Nicholaus & Gerardus clerici, Walo clericus de Sepeheviâ, Rogerus capellanus ejus de Wimundewald, Willielmus ſacerdos de Watonâ, Rogerus preſbyter de Hauet' & Radulphus clericus, Rabel miles, & Radulphus de Queniburg, Robertus Andree filius, & Ranulfus de Cortingeſtocâ, Radulphus Grip, Gillebertus ſacerdos de Waletun, & totus conventus de Geroldoniâ. Preterea, prece & voluntate patris mei Hugonis, dedi predicte eccleſie VIII acras terre circa grangiam ſuam, in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam, liberas & quietas & ſolutas ab omni terreno ſervitio, ut predictam terram aliam. Pro recompenſatione vero harum VIII acrarum dederunt mihi monachi ipſius eccleſie XVI ſolidos. Hujus donationis teſtes ſunt; Robertus filius Radulphi & Ricardus Frumentinus frater ejus, Rogerus de Stretleiâ, Gotelinus artifex, Henricus de Luvetot, Main de Geroldoniâ, Gillebertus de Valetun, Robertus de Jort, Robertus Putrellus, Picot de Wimundewald, Aſketillus de Preſtwaldâ, Gerardus de Burton, Gillebertus filius Picot, Gerardus de Waletun.

Aſketillus de Berges. (16. b.)

Notum ſit omnibus audientibus & videntibus literas has, quod ego Aſketillus de Berges dedi Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, pro ſalute anime mee, & uxoris mee, & omnium anteceſſorum meorum, in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam, XIII acras prati de dominio meo; IX in Nordalâ, juxta quas ipſi monachi habent III acras; reliquas vero IV in Suddalâ, juxta ſuam partem prati; liberas & quietas ab omni ſervitio poſſidendas. Hanc elemoſinam ego ipſe Aſketillus de Berges meâ manu ſuper altare poſui, aſtante toto conventu ipſius eccleſie. His teſtibus; Aſketillo Mallori, Simone Mallori, Radulpho Mallori, Willielmo de Blabi, Gilleberto Picot, Willielmo Mallori.

Ex Privilegiis Alexandri Pape. (17. b.)

Alexander epiſcopus, ſervus ſervorum Dei, venerabilibus fratribus epiſcopis, & dilectis filiis archidiaconis, & aliis eccleſiarum prelatis, per Angliam conſtitutis, ſalutem & apoſtolicam benedictionem. Non eſt nobis dubium vel incertum quomodo religioſi fratres Ciſtertienſis ordinis eâ religione pre-emineant & virtute, quod ex inſtitutione patrum & predeceſſorum noſtrorum hii qui in eorum monaſteriis profeſſionem faciunt ſine licentiâ abbatis ſui prohibentur de clauſtro diſcedere, & diſcedentes in aliis monaſteriis recipi. Inde eſt quod nos eandem inſtitutionem non ſolum amicam religioni, ſed & rationi conſonam, ſolicitè conſervare volentes, univerſitati veſtre, per apoſtolica ſcripta precipiendo mandamus, quatenus monachos vel converſos preſcripti ordinis, poſt factam in monaſteriis ſuis profeſſionem, in aliis monaſteriis, ſine licentiâ abbatum ſuorum, per epiſcopatus veſtros percipi nullatenus permittatis. Et ſi qui ex eis fuerint qui ſine licentiâ abbatum ſuorum de monaſterio in quo profeſſionem fecerint exire preſumpſerint, &, commoniti, ad ſua monaſteria celeriter non redierint, eos tamdiu, appellatione remotâ, cenſurâ eccleſiaſticâ percellatis, donec ad monaſteria unde exierunt regredi compellantur. Parochianos autem veſtros, ſi qui in monachos vel converſos prefati ordinis violentas manus injecerint, ſublato appellationis remedio, ſecundùm tenorem generalem decreti excommunicationis denuntietis, ipſoſque faciatis ſicut excommunicatos cautiùs evitari, donec eis quos leſerunt congruè ſatisfaciant, & cum literis veſtris apoſtolico ſe conſpectui repreſentent.

Item, ex Privilegiis Alexandri Pape ad ordinem Ciſtertienſem. (18. a.)

Prohibemus ut nullus epiſcoporum abbatibus vel grangiis veſtris aliquam religioſorum ſeu ſecularium hominum habitationem, unde vobis inquietatio poſſit pervenire, ſuperedificari permittat; ſed eos qui ſuperedificare temptaverint, ne id faciant illi epiſcopi quorum dioceſani ſunt ſub anathematis interventione prohibeant; adjicientes etiam ut, propter communia interdicta terrarum, nulla eccleſiarum veſtrarum a divinis compellatur abſtinere. Interdicimus item ne aliquis omnino perſona fratres ordinis veſtri audeant ad ſecularia judicia provocare; ſed ſi quiſquam ſit adverſus eis, aliquid crediderit de jure competente, ſub eccleſiaſtici judicis examine experiendi hanc facultatem.

Item, ex Privilegiis Alexandri Pape ad univerſum ordinem Ciſterſienſium. (18. a.) Sanè ſi epiſcopi aliquid ab abbatibus preter obedientiam debitam contra libertatem ordinis a nobis & a predeceſſoribus noſtris indultam expetierint, liberum ſit eiſdem abbatibus, auctoritate apoſtolicâ, denegare quod petitur, ne occaſione iſtâ ordo ipſe, qui hactenus liberè extitit, perpetue ſervitutis laqueo vinciatur. Quod ſi epiſcopi propter hoc aliquem in perſonas vel eccleſias veſtras ſententiam promulgatur, eandem ſententiam, tanquam contra apoſtolice ſedis indulta prolatum, irritam fore ſancimus.

Alexander Papa. (18. a.)

Alexander Papa Eboracenſi archiepiſcopo. Fraternitatem tuam ſcire volumus & firmiter tenere, quod, ex caritatis fervore, ob multiplicia tue gratiſſime devotionis obſequia nobis frequenter impenſa diligimus, ut nichil aliquando tibi denegare velimus, quod cuilibet fratrum noſtrorum debemus. In eo autem quod de compellendis monachis albis & nigris, canonicis regularibus & ſecularibus, ad ſolvendas decimas de terris conductis quas habent ad terminum vel ad firmam, a nobis tue diſcretionis prudentia poſtulavit, te vel alium quemlibet audire vel exandire nullâ ratione poſſumus, niſi manifeſtè vellemus obviare juſticie, & predeceſſorum noſtrorum inſtitutionibus contraire, ne videamur religionem perſequi; quam ſi fortè non haberemus in nobis, in aliis diligere & fovere teneamur. Cautum ſiquidem habetur in ſcripturis predeceſſorum noſtrorum Romanorum pontificum, quod religioſi viri ab exactione decimarum de laboribus ſuis quas propriis manibus aut ſumptibus colent, & de nutrimentis animalium ſuorum propriis, eſſent immunes. Sed pie recordationis A. Papa, predeceſſor noſter, labores in novalia pro ſuâ voluntate convertit. Illud etiam nos a tue petitionis effectu retrahere videtur, quod in Veteri Teſtamento non recolimus nos unquam legiſſe ut Levite Levitis decimas perſolviſſent. In Novo, ſicut tua diſcretio non ignorat, non ambigimus eſſe ſtatutum, ut populus eccleſiis illis decimas ſolvant ubi percipiunt ſacramenta. Unus Apoſtolus ait, "Hoc eſt magnum, ſi temporalia metimus ubi ſpiritualia ſeminamus." Et grave tibi ſit ſicut non eſſe debet ſi, ratione divine ſcripture, & noſtrâ honeſtate penſatâ, petitionem illam, quantumcunque te diligamus, & ſicut hujuſmodi fratri deferre velimus, non duximus admittendam. In nullo enim patieris repulſam, quod ſecundum Deum & juſtitiam a nobis fieri poſtulares. Valete.

Ex Privilegio Alexandri Pape. (18. a.)

Sanè laborum veſtrorum, quas propriis manibus aut ſumptibus colitis, ſive de nutrimentis veſtrorum animalium, nullus omnino clericus ſive laicus a vobis exigere preſumat.—Hoc idem eſt ex Privilegiis aliorum Romanorum pontificum.

Decreta pontificia Paſchalis Secundi Pape. (18. a.)

Decimas a populo ſacerdotibus atque Levitis eſſe reddendas divine legis ſancitur auctoritas. Ceterum a monachis ſive clericis communiter viventibus nulla ratio ſinit ut milites aut epiſcopi, aut perſona quelibet, decimas de laboribus ſeu nutrimentis ſuis extorquere debeant.

In beati Gregorii Actubus. (18. a.)

Communi vitâ viventibus jam de faciendis portionibus vel exhibendâ hoſpitalitate vel adimplendâ miſericordiâ quod erit nobis loquendum, cum omne quod supereſt in cauſis piis & juſtis & religioſis erogandum ſit, dicente Domino, "Date elemoſinam, & ecce omnia munda ſint vobis."

Item Magotienſe Concilium. (18. a.)

Decrevit ſacer iſte conventus, ut epiſcopi vel abbates de agris & vineis ſuis, que ad ſuum & fratrum ſtipendium habent, ad eccleſias ſuas decimas deferri faciant; familie verò ibi dent ubi infantes eorum baptizantur, & ubi per totum anni circulum miſſas audiverint.

Item Gregorius Papa. (18. a.)

Statuimus ut monaſteria ex ſuis predictis nullominus cogantur dare decimas; quia, ſi legitimè dandum ſit orphanis & peregrinis, indignum valdè eſt ut ab ipſis exiguntur qui propter eum cujus ſint decime pauperis reficiuntur. Nam ſi pauperes ſint Domini, paupertas pauperibus eroganda eſt. Et illi videlicet qui pro timore illius quas poſſidere poterant dimittant, eumque nudi ſequentes, poteſtati alterius ſubditur.

Item Paſchalis Secundus. (18. a.)

Novum exactionis genus eſt, ut clerici a clericis frugum vel animalium decimas exigant. Nunquam hoc in lege Domini precipi legimus aut permitti. Nec a Levitis Levitas decimas extorſiſſe aut accepiſſe cognovimus. Illi profectò clerici laborum ſuorum decimas debent, qui a clericis ſpiritualium miniſtrorum labores accipiunt.

Item ex Privilegiis Alexandri Pape. (18. a. b.)

Statuimus ut ſi ſuper decimas inter eos & aliquam perſonam eccleſiaſticam, cum conſenſu epiſcopi vel archidiaconi ſui, compoſitio facta fuerit, rata perpetuis temporibus & inconcuſſa perſiſtat.

De eodem, Rex Anglie, & dux Normannie & Aquitanie, & comes Andegavie. (18. b.)

Archidiaconis de Legrereceſtriâ & Notinhamiâ, & miniſtris ſuis, ſalutem. Precipio vobis quod faciatis abbati & monachis Geroldonie ſtabiles teneri compoſitiones ſuas quas fecerunt de decimis ſuis in parochiis veſtris, ſicut eas habere debuerant; & ne patiamini quod aliquis ſuper hoc eos inde vexet, nec aliquam injuriam eis inde faciant vel contumeliam. Teſte, Roberto comite de Legreceſtriâ. Apud Leuas.

Carta Henrici Regis Senioris[1]. (18. b.)

Henricus rex Anglie, archiepiſcopis, epiſcopis, abbatibus, baronibus, vicecomitibus, & omnibus filiis ſancte eccleſie per Angliam conſtitute ſalutem. Sciatis quod Robertus comes Legreceſtrie dedit & conceſſit Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, v carucatas & III virgatas terre in Geroldoniâ, cum pratis & paſcuis omnibus eidem terre pertinentibus; & ut habeant paſturam bobus, & vaccis, & porcis, & capris, & equis, & omnibus animalibus eorum, quicunque generis ſint, quietè omnino de paſnagio & omni aliâ conſuetudine, in nemoribus ſuis de Sepeheiâ & Diſſelai. Preterea concedit eis ut habeant de eiſdem nemoribus materiam ad domos ſuas faciendas, & omnia alia neceſſaria ſua, & ligna ad ignem, quodcunque eis neceſſarium fuerit ad haias ſuas, & ad cetera omnia aiſiamenta ſua, ſine vaſto foreſte, & quod non ſit deſtructio nemoris. Hanc autem ejus ſupradictam donationem & omnimodam conceſſionem concedo, & regiâ auctoritate in perpetuum confirmo, ſicut comes ipſe ſuâ cartâ propriâ conceſſit & confirmavit. Et precipio quod eccleſia predicta & monachi benè & in pace, & honorificè, & liberè, & quietè teneant, cum omnibus libertatibus & conſuetudinibus, ſicut alie eccleſie & elemoſine de terrâ meâ meliùs & liberiùs tenent. [Teſtibus; W. archiepiſcopo Cantuarie, & Thurſtano Eboracenſi archiepiſcopo, & R. epiſcopo Sarum, & H. epiſcopo Winton', & A. epiſcopo Lincoln', & G. cancellario.]

Quieta clamatio de terris in Burtonâ. (18. b.)

Hec eſt finalis concordia, que facta fuit apud Weſtmonaſterium, ad Scaccarium, ad proximum Paſcha poſt primam coronationem Margarete regine, filie regis Francie, coram Ricardo de Luci, & Ricardo electo Wintonie eccleſie, & Gaufrido electo Elienſis eccleſie, & Hunfredo de Bohun conſtabulario, & Hugone de Gundevill, & Tomá Baſſet, & Ranulpho de Glanvile, & Bertramo de Verdun, & aliis juſticiariis qui tunc ibi fuerunt, inter Gillebertum de Colevillâ, & Tomam Diſpenſatorem, per finem duelli, de duabus carucatis terre in Burtun, quas predictus Tomas Diſpenſator clamabat tenere de Gilleberto de Colevillâ. Unde placitum fuit inter eos in curiâ domini regis; ſcilicet, quod predictus Tomas quietam clamavit unam ex illis carucatis terre prenominato Gilleberto, illam videlicet que jacet infra culturas ipſius Gilliberti; & prenominatus Tomas & heredes ſui debent tenere alteram carucatam terre in feudo & hereditate de predicto Gilleberto & de heredibus ſuis, faciendo ſervitium quantum pertinet ad ſervitium unius militis de unaquaque carucatâ terre quam predictus Gillebertus de Colevillâ tenet in Burtonâ de eodem feudo. Et, pro fine iſtius concordie, conceſſit Tomas Diſpenſator facere Gilleberto de Colevillâ ſervitium quarte partis feodi militis, quod predictus Gillebertus clamat verſus Alanum Malet in Preſtewald, tenendum infra ſervitium ſui feodi militis de predictâ terrâ de Burtun, ſi ipſe Gillebertus poterit diſrationare predictum ſervitium verſus prenominatum Alanum. Si verò non poterit ſervitium illud diſrationare verſus Alanum Malet, vel verſus heredes ſuos, tunc ipſe Gillebertus quietam clamat illam calumpniam quam habet in predictâ terrâ de Preſtewald, de ſe & heredibus ſuis, predictâ Tome Diſpenſatori & heredibus ſuis.

Carta Stephani Regis[2]. (18. b.)

Stephanus rex Anglie, archiepiſcopis, epiſcopis, abbatibus, comitibus, juſticiariis, vicecomitibus, baronibus, & omnibus fidelibus ſuis totius Anglie, ſalutem. Sciatis quum Robertus comes Legreceſtrie dedit & conceſſit Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, v carucatas & III virgatas terre in Geroldoniâ, cum pratis & paſcuis omnibus eidem terre pertinentibus, ut habeant paſturam bobus, & vaccis, & porcis, & capris, & equis, & omnibus eorum animalibus cujuſcunque ſint generis, quietè omnino de paſnagio, & omni aliâ conſuetudine in nemoribus ſuis de Sepeheveiâ & Diſſelai; preterea concedit eis ut habeant de eiſdem nemoribus materiam ad domos ſuas faciendas, & omnia alia neceſſaria, & ligna ad ignem, & quicquid eis neceſſe fuit ad haias ſuas, & alia omnia aiſamenta, ſine vaſto foreſte, quod non ſit deſtructio nemoris. Hec in cartâ regis Henrici firmata ſunt conceſſu ſuo. Et preterea poſtea dedit IV carucatas & dimidiam, cum pratis & omnibus eis pertinentibus, in dominico ſuo de Diſſelai; & in burgo Legreceſtrie unum burgenſem, qui emat pannos ſuos, cum dico, cum terrâ & domubus ſuis. Hec & omnia alia que eis predictus comes & alii fideles dederint legaliter eis concedo, ſicut carta comitis & aliorum dantium teſtant, & ſicut carta regis Henrici teſtat. Et ut in eternum illi eccleſie ſine diminutione remaneant, ſigilli mei impreſſione & autoritate regiâ corroboro. Teſtibus; Willielmo archiepiſcopo Cant', [& Thurſtano archiepiſcopo Eboracenſi, & Alexandro epiſcopo Lincolnienſi.]

Radulphus Stabularius. (19. a.)

Noverint cuncti fideles, tam poſteri quam preſentes, quod ego Radulphus Stabularius, & uxor mea Quenilda, communi aſſenſu & bonâ voluntate, quietum clamavimus in perpetuum, de nobis & heredibus noſtris, Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis Deo ſervientibus ibidem, in eccleſiâ de Lucteburg, quicquid juris & calumnie habuimus in terrâ de Cortingeſtocâ, quam prefati monachi tenent in eadem villâ. Si quis autem aliquid gravamen vel calumniam de eadem terrâ in futuro tempore eis inferre voluerit, nos & heredes noſtri pro poſſe noſtro defenſores aſtabimus. Ad hoc firmiter obſervandum ego Radulphus in manu Thome Diſpenſatoris affidavi. Pro hâc conceſſione dederunt nobis monachi duas marcas argenti, & vaccam unam, & x agnos, & pullum unum, & ſcrofam unam. His teſtibus; Thomâ Diſpenſatore, Robto Putrel, Robto filio Picoth, Willo de Munford.

Quenilda uxor Radulphi Stabularii. (19. a.)

Noverint cuncti fideles, tam poſteri quam preſentes, quod ego Quenilda uxor Radulphi Stabularii, multo tempore antequam ipſum ſuſcepi in virum, clamavi Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ, & monachis ibidem Deo ſervientibus, & obtuli ſuper altare eccleſie de Dyxele coram teſtibus, quicquid juris & calumnie habui in terrâ de Cortingeſtocâ, quam prefati monachi tenent in eadem villâ. Monachi verò, pro amore Dei, & pro hâc conceſſione, dederunt mihi victum meum in totâ vitâ meâ. Et poſtquam virum ſuſcepi, totam ſupradictum terram in eccleſiâ de Lucteburg predictis monachis de Geroldoniâ in perpetuum clamavi. His teſtibus; Petronillâ, Edalinâ, Givâ, Emmâ, Godâ, Agnete.

Compoſitio de Ibeſtochâ. (19. a.)

Noverint tam poſteri quam preſentes filii ſancte matris eccleſie, quod, aſſenſu Baldrici archidiaconi Legreceſtrie, anno ab Incarnatione Domini M°C°LXXVI, hec compoſitio facta fuit inter eccleſiam Sancte Marie de Geroldoniâ & eccleſiam Sancte Helene de Ibeſtochâ, per abbatem Turſtinum & Ricardum perſonam prefate eccleſie: Quod monachi de Geroldoniâ dabunt ſingulis annis prenominate perſone III marcas argenti; xx videlicet ſolidos infra Octavas Paſche, & xx infra Octavas Sancti Michaelis, pro omnibus decimis omnium terrarum quas habebant eo die ad remanendum in parochiâ prefate eccleſie de Ibeſtochâ, unde eccleſia ipſa aliquas decimationes habere conſuevit, & pro unâ virgatâ terre in Stantonâ. His teſtibus; abbate Martino de Cumbâ, Willo abbate Mirevall, magiſtro Bernardo, Roberto ſacerdote de Swepeſton, Radulpho milite de Greſeleiâ, Acardo preſbytero, magiſtro Gregorio.

Compoſitio de grangiâ Burtone. (19. a.)

Anno Incarnationis Domini MCLXXVII, ad Paſcha. Ricardus de Sancto Petro, perſona eccleſie Sancti Andree de Preſtewould, gratiâ fraternitatis & karitatis intuitu, fecit hanc compoſitionem cum monachis de Geroldoniâ, ſuper decimis omnium terrarum grangie ſue de Burtonâ, quas in perpetuam poſſeſſionem habuerunt in eadem parochiâ eo die quo hec compoſitio facta eſt; videlicet, quod predicti monachi, ſingulis annis, ſolvent prenominato Ricardo, ad feſtum Sancti Botolphi, tres marcas argenti pro eiſdem decimis. Et monachi prefate abbatie ſub hâc conditione fideliter pacti ſunt, quod ſi, à predicto termino Paſche, in parochiâ de Preſtewald aliquo modo aliquas terras adquiſierint, perſolvent inde plenariè decimas de garbis predicto Ricardo. Hec compoſitio facta eſt aſſenſu Baldrici tunc temporis archidiaconi Legreceſtrie, & cum ejus ſigillo confirmata eſt. His teſtibus; Hugone abbate de Reveſbi, Galone monacho, Waltero de Waſſinburc, magiſtro Gerardo filio Baldrici archidiaconi, Acardo capellano, Nicholao diacono, Simone, Willielmo, Philippo filio Philippi de Kymâ, Rogero de Benigwurd', Thomâ filio Willielmi, Willielmo de Einesford, Radulpho filio Oſberti, Simone de Canci, Ricardo de Ormeſbi, Waltero Alfort, Jacobo filio Alani de Fenne.

Teſtibus his; Roberto decano de Fanketonâ, &c.

An award, dated Sept. 18, 1461. (23. b. 24. a.)

Notum ſit omnibus Chriſti fidelibus, tam preſentibus quam futuris, quod magna diſcordia fuit exorta per Johannem Bothe de Orleſton, inter abbathiam de Garadon & prediƈtum Johannem Bothe, pro unâ parvâ ſykâ juxta torrentem vocatam Sor, & exitus remociores ſeu exteriores molendino de Cottes pertinentes, & pratum domini de Lovell, olim Matylde Holand, verſus Normonton, & pratum prediƈti Johannis Bothe uſque Hathern, ubi prediƈtus Johannes dicebat totum eſſe ſuum pratum inter aquam & aquam. Similiter abbas de Garadon contradixit; ſic dicendo, ut aſſeruit per homines de patriâ vicinos, quod illa parva ſyka juxta aquam inter excluſam & pratum domini de Lovell, olim Matylde Holand, pertinet molendino de Cottes. Et poſtea partes prediƈti prediƈtam materiam poſuerunt ſuper homines. Et ſic unanimi aſſenſu & conſenſu tres homines eſſe judices elegerunt; videlicet, Robertum Staunton, Ricardum Neel, & Willielmum Page, ut per diſtriƈtiones & demonſtrationes vicinorum omnium detunicaretur & dejudicaretur materia prediƈta. Et ſic partes prediƈti, videlicet, abbas de Garadon & Johannes Bothe fiancias ſuas in manibus trium prediƈtorum Roberti, Ricardi, & Willielmi, affidaverunt; ac inſuper per obligationem obligaverunt ſe, ſucceſſores & heredes ſuos, in centum libris legatis monete Anglie, eſſe contentos, & eorum quemlibet eſſe contentum, necnon ſucceſſores & heredes eſſe contentos, cum judicio trium prediƈtorum eleƈtorum in perpetuum. Et tunc, anno regni regis Edwardi Quarti VIII°, die menſis Septembris XVIII°, diverſi homines vicinorum hominum premoniti ad prediƈtam terram devenerunt. Inprimis, Thomas Marſhall firmarius de Dixley, Henricus Chamburlen de Hathern, Walterus Nauntell de eadem, Ricardus Baddyley de eadem, Willielmus Belt de eadem, Johannes Deyſin de eadem, Robertus Canner de eadem, Johannes Smyth de eadem, Johannes Shakſper de eadem, Johannes Samir de eadem, & alii de eadem villâ, Vicars de Knyghtyſthorpe, Vicars de eadem, Johannes Eleyn de Thorpe Hanker, Ricardus Elſley de eadem, Thomas Waytegale de eadem, Jacobus Jacſin de eadem, Robertus Pleyke de eadem; cum multis aliis. [1] July 19. [2] October 25. [3] So the Regiſter, very plainly. But this battle was fought in 1415, in the king's third year.

[4] See this at length, hereafter, under Whitwick.

33. a. Mem' quod abbas & conventus de Gerondoniâ habent in Cortinſtochâ & Rempiſtone decem & novem bovatas terre, ad quas pertinent xv s̄. x d̄. pro ſcutagio, quando factum eſt ad quadraginta ſolidos; ſed de illis xix bovatis terre habemus milites, ſicut patet per cartas feoffamentas in puram elemoſinam. Quietancia caret de locis predictis.

Mem' quod die Martis prox' ante feſtum Tranſlationis Sancti Thome Martyris [1], anno regni regis Edwardi filii regis Henrici xxxiv°, ego Willielmus de Burdet, receptor denariorum honoris Leyceſtrie, recepi, per manus Walteri Schepeſhede clerici, de abbate de Gerondoniâ, decem ſolidos & decem denarios, in partem ſolutionis unius feodi militis, in Wymundewald, Burton, & Cotes, de ſcutagio pro guerrâ, &c. anno viceſimo octavo. Et de eodem abbate, per eundem receptorem, decem ſolidos & decem denarios, pro parte unius feodi militis in eiſdem villis, de anno xxxi°.

Pateat univerſis per preſentes, me Nicholaum de Coleſhull, receptorem domini Henrici comitis Lancaſtrie de honore Leyceſtrie, recepiſſe de Johanne Peverel de Cotes decem ſolidos pro relevio Willielmi le Butiler de Overſleye, pro decimâ parte unius feodi militis in Burton ſuper Waldas, quam abbas de Geroldoniâ & conventus ejuſdem loci tenent in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam, de dicto Johanne Peverel. De quibus decem ſolidis fateor me eſſe pacatum, & dictum Johannem inde fore quietum per preſentes. In cujus rei teſtimonium preſenti acquietancie ſigillum meum appoſui. Dat' apud Leyceſtriam, nono die Octobris, anno regni regis Edwardi Tertii poſt Conqueſtum x°.

33. b. Terre diverſorum infraſcriptorum in Swanington moor, videlicet, a Godberti hawedland jacente ad le Breched, computand' verſus bercariam uſque ad Fenſike inter Bredonthornes & Tangemoram.

Item abbas de Geroldoniâ habet lxx pedes de latitudine, de eadem longitudine, pro tribus virgatis terre & dimidiâ.

Item Gateland x pedes, pro dimidiâ virgatâ terre.

Item Johannes Loffyn, pro unâ virgatâ terre, xx pedes.

Item Johannes Page de Thringeſton, pro i virgatâ, xx pedes.

Item dominus de Whytewyk, pro vi virgatis terre, $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{vi}}$ pedes.

Item abbas de Gerondoniâ, pro iii virgatis terre, lx pedes.

Item dominus Johannes Talbot, pro viii virgatis terre, $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{viii}}$ pedes.

Item participes iiii virgatarum terre, videlicet, Frodelay, Campton', Blacfordeby, Appulby, & alii, $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{iiii}}$ pedes.

Item Robertus Godbertus tantùm ſicut priùs, videlicet, $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{v}}$ pedes.

Item abbas de Gerondoniâ lxx pedes.

Item Johannes Loffyn tantùm ſicut priùs.

Item Johannes Page tantùm ſicut priùs.

Item dominus de Whitewyck tantùm ſicut priùs.

Item abbas lx pedes, ut ſcribitur priùs, poſt ipſum dominum. Ubicunque Rogerus Godbertus habet quinque virgatas terre in mores, lerres, vel ubiubi, ibi abbas de Gerondoniâ habet tres virgatas & dimidiam. Et ubicunque dominus de Whitewyk habet vi virgatas, abbas habet iii virgatas immediatè ſequentes. Et ſic Rogerus habet in tribus locis in le Breche in toto, videlicet in quolibet loco $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{v}}$ pedes; & ſemper abbas poſt ipſum immediatè lxx pedes. Item dominus de Whitewyk habet in le Breche in tribus locis, videlicet in quolibet loco $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{vi}}$ pedes, & abbas immediatè poſt ipſum ſemper lx pedes. Et ceteri omnes priuſcripti tantùm ſicut priùs in toto in le Breche.

Item Rogerus Godbert habet in the Moor in quatuor locis, videlicet, quolibet loco $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{v}}$ pedes. Item abbas poſt eum lxx pedes. Item dominus de Whitewyk $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{iiii}}$ pedes, & abbas immediatè poſt eum lx pedes in quatuor locis; videlicet in quolibet loco tantum. Et notandum quod ſemper computandum & menſurandum eſt prout in principio ſcribitur.

Terra Gerondonie diſtr' fuit pro dimidio feodo militis in Hawetherne. Et ſuper hoc venit Robertus de Meynill, ballivus ejuſdem abbatis, in plenâ curiâ, & profert duas cartas, que teſtantur quod Rogerus filius Roberti Venatoris de Kereby feoffavit predictum abbatem de uno toſto & crofto & unâ virgatâ terre in Hawetherne, in liberam, puram, & perpetuam elemoſinam. Et Ricardus Frаunceys de Watton feoffavit predictum abbatem de uno toſto & crofto & unâ virgatâ terre in Hawethern, in liberam, puram, & perpetuam elemoſinam. Et ſuper hoc profert quandam cartam quiete clamationis domini Rogeri de Qwency, quondam comitis Wyntonie, que teſtatur quod idem Rogerus quietum clamavit dictis abbati & monachis predictas duas virgatas terre in Hawetherne in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam, ſed ſine omni forenſi ſervitio. Ideo diſtrictio predicta deliberetur.

Mem' quod die Martis poſt feſtum Sancti Hillarii, anno Domini m°ccc^mo^lxxiii°, mota diſcordia inter Johannam que fuit uxor Johannis Clerk de Bradegate, & Johannem Meke, tenentem noſtrum in Bradegate, ſuper metis & diviſis inter tenementa que idem Johannes Meke tenet de nobis & tenemento predicte Johanne; unde illa conquerebatur quod parietes ſive muri camere & grangie predicti Johannis Meke poſiti erant ſuper ſolum predicte Johanne. Interim abbas, hoc intelligens, acceſſit apud Bradegate, die Martis predicto, ad probandam rei veritatem. Comparuit etiam predicta Johanna cum conſilio ſuo, videlicet, Johanne Botiler, ſeneſcallo domini de Groby, Alano de Sutton, Murdaco de Grenleye, & aliis amicis ſuis; qui, cum diligenter examinâſſent homines etatis antiquioris de Bradegate ſuper premiſſis de quibus predicta Johanna conquerebatur ut premittitur, invenerunt per teſtimonium eorum, ac per vetuſtatem murorum lapid' predictarum grangie & camere, quod earundem muri & parietes ſic poſiti erant & continuati à tempore cujus contrariam memoriam nullus eorum ſeu eorum parentes habere potuit vel notitiam. Invenerunt etiam quendam lapidem poſitam pro metâ extra gardinum predicti Johannis Meke, in latere foſſate verſus campum, reſpicientem directè ad medium foſſati, inter gardinum Johannis Meke & gardinum predicte Johanne. Invenerunt ſimiliter, per teſtimonium eorundem hominum, quod quidem alius lapis, qui poſitus erat pro metâ inter cameram predicti Johannis Meke & grangiam predicte Johanne, juxta alteram viam que ducit in medium ville, compollens predicto lapidi verſus aquam, amotus erat diligenter per predictum Johannem Clerk, quondam virum predicte Johanne, cum edificavit illam grangiam juxta viam, & poſitus ſub pede poſtis illius grangie propioris camere predicti Johannis Meke, juxtam predictam cameram. Unde predictus abbas, & omnes alii ex parte predicte Johanne, volentes hujus liti & diſcordie pro futuris temporibus, finali aſſenſu & concordiâ tam predicti abbatis quam predicte Johanne tunc ibidem preſentium, poſuerunt unum lapidem inter cameram predicti Johannis Meke & grangiam predicte Johanne Clerk, juxta predictam viam, ut eſſet pro metâ in perpetuum, loco alterius lapidis ſic amoti; &, per omnes evidentias quas habere potuerint, adjudicabunt, quod omnes parietes ſive muri lapidei predictarum domorum Johannis Meke poſiti erant in ſolo abbatis, & quod ſolum predicte Johanne in nullo accidebant, nec ſtille que cadebant de ſuperciliis domorum predicti Johannis Meke. Ad quorum quidem omnium & ſingulorum declarationem, ac amoris & concordie inter partes, ut premittitur, reformationem, per aſſenſum earundem partium factas & adjudicatas, preſentes tunc erant, videlicet, prediƈti Johannes Botiler & filius ejus, Alanus de Sutton, Murdacus de Grenlie, Thomas Alblaſter de Cropſton, Johannes Pye de Groby parcarius, Henricus de Hulſtei de Thurmeſton, Johannes Prat parcarius de Bradegate, Henricus de Sentelaye, Robertus Smyth de Cropſton, Willielmus Hungreton-man, Simon de Cropſton, Thomas Milner de Bradegate, Alexander de Leyc' de eâdem, Willielmus Aleyn de eâdem, Willielmus Paulet de Anſty, & Johannes amicus prediƈte Johanne, & multi alii.

Et, preter hoc, dono ei hereditariè omnes tenuras de quibus erat meus afidatus, et ſicut carta mea ei teſtatur. Et inſuper volo, & firmiter vobis precipio, ut ipſe comes Robertus Legreceſtrie prediƈtum caſtellum & villam de Muntſorell, cum prediƈtis tenuris, benè & honorificè, jure hereditario, de me & de heredibus meis, teneat, in villâ & extra, & cum . . . . . . in foro & in vico, in boſco & plano, in pratis & paſturis, in aquis & molendinis, in viis & ſemitis, & foribus, & in omnibus aliis, ac etiam cum ſocâ & ſacâ, thol & them, infangunthef, & omnibus aliis conſuetudinibus & libertatibus. Teſte, Gilleberto comite de Clarâ.

Rannulphus comes Ceſtrie, conſtabularius, dapiferis, miniſtris, vicecomitibus, & omnibus ballivis ſuis, Francie & Anglie, ſalutem. Sciatis me dediſſe & conceſſiſſe Roberto comiti Legreceſtrie, in feodo & hereditate, ſibi & heredibus ſuis, de me & heredibus meis, Cernelegam, & omnes boſcos adjacentes, juxta foreſtam ſuam Legreceſtrie, tam meos proprios quam eos de feodo meo, excepto parco meo de Barewâ; habend' eos in foreſtâ de me ita benè & liberè & plenariè, ſicut meliùs tenet foreſtam Legreceſtrie de rege; excepto hoc, quod retineo aiſiamenta manerii remota poſita, ſine vaſto, & ſine venditione boſci, prout habeo. Dedi ei hereditariè quicquid habeo in civitate Legreceſtrie, in dominico & feodo, ut de hâc tenurâ fidem mihi fecit ut de domino de quo tenet. [Explicit Cartularium.]

The following liſt of the abbots of Garendon is principally ſupplied from the foregoing Chartulary; with the aſſiſtance of Dr. Kennett's MS notes in Mr. Gough's copy of Dugdale's Monaſticon; and Tanner's Notitia Monaſtica, with MS notes by Mr. Rowe Mores.

Thurſtan occurs abbot in 1176[2].

1189. Obiit Turſtanus abbas Geraldunæ. Succeſſit Wilhelmus prior ejuſdem domûs[3].

1195. Wilhelmus abbas Gereldunæ dimiſit abbatiam ſuam. Succeſſit Wilhelmus abbas Miravallis[4].

1196. Reginaldus abbas Geroldoniæ graviter vulneratus eſt in infirmatorio ſuo noƈte, propter quod miſſum eſt per generale capitulum Ciſtertii, ut omnes converſi ejuſdem loci diſpergerentur[5].

Reginaldo Geraldon abbate 1196, a quodam converſo ſuo graviter in infirmatorio vulnerato, aliis converſis conſentientibus, juſſum eſt in generali capitulo Ciſtertii, omnes converſos ejuſdem loci amoveri[6].

1219. Adam abbas ſeptimus Waverle ceſſit; ſucceſſit ei Adam abbas Gereldoniæ, oƈtavus abbas Waverle[7].

1226. Cedente Wilhelmo, ſubrogatur Reginaldus prior Geroldoniæ ejuſdem domûs abbas decimus[8].

1234. Cedente Reginaldo, ſubrogatur Andreas prior de Garadon, ejuſdem domûs abbas undecimus[9].

Simon occurs in the reign of Henry III.[10]

Robert de Thorp 1274[11].

Thurſtan perhaps ſucceeded[12].

Roger occurs 1281[13].

Euſtace was his ſucceſſor[14].

1295. Joh̃es abbas Gerendonie profitetur obedientiam epiſcopo Lincoln', & benedicitur 8 kal. Junii[15].

In 1320, John de Sutton was abbot.

William de Sanƈtâ Cruce, late abbot of Garendon, was, at the king's inſtance, made the firſt abbot of St. Mary de Grace, alias Eaſt Minſter, in the churchyard of the Holy Trinity within Aldgate, London, founded by Edward III. The king gave this William £20. a year, for the maintenance of himſelf and the monks of the new abbey March 24, 1349-50[16].

Thomas Syeſton, alias Shepyſhed, was abbot in 1510; and held that office till the diſſolution in 1536.

The following deeds are copied from the originals among the antient Charters in the Britiſh Muſeum.

1. Alexandro, Dei gratiâ, Lincoln' epiſcopo, & omnibus ſancte eccleſie filiis, Rotbertus comes Legreceſtrie ſalutem. Sciatis quod, amore Dei, & remiſſione peccatorum meorum, & ſalvacione anime patris mei, matris mee, & ſalvatione anime mee & anteceſſorum meorum, & rogatu Ernaldi de Boſco, volo & concedo donum quod Ernaldus predictus dedit in elemoſinâ Deo & beate Marie & abbati de Gerendonâ, ad abbatiam faciendam, & additulatam ad abbatiam de Gerendonâ. Hoc donum verò, quod Ernaldus de Boſco dedit, & quod ego conceſſi, eſt Bethleſdena. Sicut enim ordini de Ciſtelſienſibus predictus Ernaldus Bethleſdenam in boſco & in plano conceſſit & dedit, ita hanc conceſſionem volo & concedo. Quare firmiter precipio quod iſtud benè & in pace & honorificè teneat. Teſtibus; Amiciâ comitiſſâ, Rotberto filio comitis, Willielmo Burdet, Giſleberto de Vernet, Rotberto de Creſt [2].

2. Univerſis ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, de Parco Lude & de Humbreſten' abbates, & H. de Dovenham decanus, ſalutem. Univerſitati veſtre innoteſcat, quod cauſâ que vertebatur coram nobis, auctoritate domini pape Innocentii Tertii, inter moniales de Bulington & parochianos de Burton, ſuper capellam de Burton, in hunc modum conquievit; videlicet, quod Hugo de Berges, quidam parochianus de Burton, in cujus fundo dicta capella ſita, conceſſit & dedit, & cartâ ſuâ confirmavit, matrici eccleſie Sancti Andree de Preſtwald, & domui de Bulington, unam virgatam terre, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, in territorio de Burton, in liberam & perpetuam elemoſinam; & prior & moniales de Bulington facient in perpetuum, ſingulis annis, ſextâ feriâ in ebdomadâ, miſſam celebrari in capellâ Sancti Petri de Burton, que pertinet ad eccleſiam de Preſtwald, per capellanum de Preſtwald, vicarium ſuum, & clericum ejus, exceptis diebus Omnium Sanctorum, Sancti Andree, & Natale Domini, & Purificationis beate Marie, & Paraſceue, & Aſſumptionis beate Marie, ſi feriâ ſextâ contigerint; ſalvâ tamen divinorum celebratione in eadem ebdomadâ loco ſexte ferie ſupplendâ, die ſcilicet Lune, ita quod dicti Hugo de Berges & heredes ejus, & homines in villâ de Burton manentes, invenient neceſſaria divina in prefatâ capellâ celebrandi; ſcilicet, calicem, librum, & alia eccleſie ornamenta. Nos vero huic compoſitioni, ut firma & illibata permaneat, auctoritatem noſtram impertivimus, & eam preſenti ſigillorum noſtrorum appoſitione confirmavimus [3].

In cujus rei teſtimonium, &c.

Ibid. A grant from Robert de Burton, dated 1145, of three carucates of land, in his demeſne of Ibſtock, in recompence for 30 marks of ſilver, which the monks of Garendon had given to redeem him from captivity (ſee p. 823.) Primum pactum hujus ditionis & conceſſionis ego & Ricardus filius apud Lereceſtriam, in thalamo Ernaldi de Boſco, fide & juramento coram teſtibus confirmavimus.

P. 8. b. Another grant from Robert de Burton and Richard his ſon, dated alſo in 1145, of half a carucate, pro remiſſione peccatorum noſtrorum, & omnium amicorum tam vivorum quam mortuorum, & nominatim pro Ingenulfo fratre meo, quem Deo ſerviendum in monachali habitu ſecum ſuſceperint. Hanc donationem apud Gerendoniam, preſenti omni conventu ceteriſque perſonis legalibus, fide & juramento confirmavimus.

P. 9. a. Reginald the ſon of Reginald gives ſex ſeliones de feudo meo in campo de Ibſtokâ, cum prato quod ad eaſdem ſeliones pertinet, que ſeliones jacent apud Meneford propinquiores terre ipſorum monachorum; & unam foreram ſuper Gratthornehull, in quo Brocfurlong extenditur.

Ibid. Henry ſon of Richard de Burton, for the health of his own ſoul, his father Richard's, &c. confirms to the monks elemoſinas & donationes Reginaldi filii Ingenulfi, & Reginaldi filii ipſius Reginaldi; videlicet, totam grangiam ſuam de Ibſtokâ, & totum locum in quo eadem grangia ſita eſt; & totam clauſuram in curiâ ejuſdem grangie & berchariarum ſuarum ibidem conſtructarum; & quatuor carucatas terre & XVII acras terre in campis de Ibſtokâ, & quicquid habent in remanentiâ de feudo meo, & quicquid idem monachi fregerint de brueriâ in campis de Ibſtokâ uſque ad annum nonum coronationis regis Johannis. Preterea dedi dimidiam carucatam terre de dominico meo in campis de Ibſtokâ.

9. b. William ſon of Richard de Burton confirms the grants of his grandfather Robert and father Richard, and alſo of Ingenulf and his ſon Reginald, of the ſite of Ibſtock Grange; and four carucates and a half and XIII acres of land, & quicquid monachi fregerint de bruerià, ita ut non ampliùs fregant, nec excedant diviſas XXV anno coronationis regis Henrici III^{di} conſtitutas.

10. a. Reginald ſon of Ingenulf of Ibſtock confirms omnes donationes Roberti patris mei, & Ricardi filii ejus, & Willielmi filii Ricardi domini mei, & Ingenulfi patris mei; viz. ſedem grangie ſue de Ibſtocâ, &c. omnium dominiorum & barchariarum ſuarum, &c.

10. b. and 11. a. The ſame Reginald, by two ſeparate deeds, again confirms his father's grants; and adds XIII acres of land, part of his own demeſne, in Ibſtock field. In retributione autem hujus donationis & confirmationis dederunt mihi predicti monachi pullos duos, diverſi gruis, & duodecim agnos, & vaccam unam cum vitulo, & ſcrofam unam.

11. b. Henry ſon of Richard of Burton confirms the grants of his father, grandfather, &c. of the ſite of Swynefen grange (printed in p. 823.)

12. a. G. Camerarius de Clintonâ, &c. (printed in p. 805.)

12. a. b. Two grants of William Beauchamp earl of Warwick; both printed in p. 805; but this copy gives the names of abbot Turſtin and Henry de Caldrai.

13. a. A quitclaim from Walter Peverel to the monks of Gerendon of all right which he or Ada his wife might have to that cultura terre que vocatur Hethwong, cum cheveſcia, que extenditur à viâ de Ibſtoc uſque ad ſycham verſus Nelſton.

A like quitclaim of the ſame cultura from John de Sadington and Amicia his wife.

13. b. A like quitclaim from Felicia daughter of Reginald ſon of Reginald of Ibſtock, of the ſame cultura, unde contentio & placitum fuit inter eoſdem monachos & Walterum Peverel & Johannem de Sadington, maritos ſororum mearum, videlicet, Ade & Amicie.

14. a. Two ſimilar quitclaims from Reginald le ſire de Ibſtock and Amicia his daughter.

14. b. Reginald Bartein of Ibſtock releaſes to the monks of Garendon all claim to any of their lands, meadows, paſtures, &c. tam in Magnâ Ibſtoc, quam in Parvâ Ibſtoc, nunc Otherton vulgariter nuncupatâ, & ubique alibi ad grangiam ſuam de Swinfen qualitercunque ſpectantibus vel adjacentibus.

A like releaſe to the monks, from the ſame Reginald, concerning common of paſture in Ibſtock field.

15. a. An imperfect grant relative to common of paſture, in campis de Altonâ. Predicte oves numerabuntur per majorem centenarium, ſcilicet, per ſexcies. Et ſciendum quod predicti monachi ſimiliter potuerint predictas toftas & croftas & predictas quinque acras terre claudere vel foſſare, & barcharias & alias domos ibidem conſtruere, & quicquid voluerint exinde facere.

Roger de Crafte gave 3*s. annual rent, which* Bartholomew de Ravenſton uſed to pay him for a virgate of land in territorio de Alton.

Bartholomew de Ravenſton gave the toft and croft in Alton, which he held of Roger de Crafte.

Hugo de Hardeberewe, filius Rogeri de Hardeberewe, dedit manerium ſuum de Ravenſton, abſque ullo retenemento, quod habuit ex hereditate Iſabelle matris ſue, & quicquid habuit, vel habere potuit, in eadem villâ, occaſione hereditatis, cum omnibus eſchaetis, wardis, & releviis, ad ſe vel ad heredes ſuos pertinentibus. Dedit etiam homagia & ſervicia omnium liberorum hominum ſuorum de ſe & heredibus ſuis tenentium, in villâ de Ravenſton, cum omnibus eſcheatis, wardis, & releviis, ad ſe vel ad heredes ſuos pertinentibus.

15. b. Rogerus le Zouch dedit omnes terras & tenementa quas habuit in Altonâ.

Henry ſon and heir of Roger le Waleys of Ravenſton gave a moiety of two tofts and a moiety of two virgates of land in Ravenſton, whenever they ſhould devolve to him jure hereditario; one of the tofts and one of the virgates being at that time held in dower.

The ſame Henry gave two parts of two virgates of land and one meſſuage in Ravenſton, which Walter le Gras formerly held; and another meſſuage there, in the tenure of Henry le Brun.

16. a. Henry ſon of Bartholomew de Ravenſton gave half an acre of land, in territorio de Ravenſton, que jacet ſuper Overton hill, inter terram Roberti le Waleys & terram Reginaldi de Hodſton, & extenditur in longitudine a viâ de Overton uſque in Korwelle ſike.

Bartholomew de Ravenſton gave a virgate of land in Alton, held de Rogero de Crafte, domino ſuo.

William Baſſet gave locum in quo grangia de Alton ſita eſt, & clauſuram & curiam ejuſdem grangie, cum omnibus domibus ſuis, & duas virgatas terre de feudo ſuo in eadem villâ, cum toftis & croftis, & pratis & paſcuis, & cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, in villâ & extra villam.

Ralph Baſſet, ſon of William, gave all that land in Alton and Ravenſton which he held in fee, of the gift of Hugh ſon of Roger de Herdeberew.

Robert le Gras of Ravenſton is noticed, but not his benefaction.

16. b. Henry ſon and heir of Roger le Waleys of Ravenſton gave two virgates of land and one meſſuage in Ravenſton, which Walter le Gras had formerly held, and which meſſuage, with one third of the land, was then held by Henry le Brun.

William Borarde, of Ravenſton, renounced all claim to half an acre of land, of his fee, in territorio de Ravenſton, ſuper Litelehou, inter terram Willielmi de Rakedale & terram Rogeri le Machun, & abbuttat ſuper Corwelle ſike & viam de Overton.

Per breve de privato ſigillo.

THE HERMITAGE JUXTA CREPELGATE.

THE abbot and convent of Garendon had an hermitage, or cell, called St. James in the Wall, near Crepelgate, in the city of London; where certain monks of their houſe were the chaplains; whence the well belonging to the hermitage was called Monks-well; and the ſtreet, from the well, Monks-well ſtreet [1].

This hermitage, having been originally founded by king Henry III. for Robert de St. Laurence, chaplain, the preſentation was for ſome time veſted in the Crown.

By a deed, dated in 1253, Lawrence de Frowick granted to Richard of Clerkenwell, chaplain, all his lands [2], &c. in Mugwell (or Monkwell) ſtreet, in the pariſh of St. Olave, Silver-ſtreet, for an annual rent of 20*s.*; and on condition of finding one wax candle of a pound weight, for the church of St. Olave, on St. Thomas's day; and another wax taper of three quarters of a pound weight, for the chapel (de incluſorio) within the cloſe or cloiſter within Cripelgate [3]."

In 1275, the chalices, books, ornaments, goods, and lands, of this hermitage having been frequently embezzled for want of good government and regulation; king Edward I. as patron thereof, out of his piety, committed it to the care and government of the lord-mayor of London for the time being, by the following patent, to prevent the like embezzlement in future:

" Rex omnibus, &c. ſalutem. Quia calices, libri, veſtimenta, imagines, campane, & alia ornamenta & bona heremitagii juxta Crippelgate, quod eſt de advocatione noſtrâ, & quod celebris memorie dominus Henricus rex, pater noſter, Roberto de Sancto Laurentio capellano, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, dedit ad inhabitandum quoad vixerit, poſt deceſſum heremitarum heremitagii illius, tempore vacationis ejuſdem, tam per viros eccleſiaſticos quam laicos ſubtrahi & aſportari ſolent, pro eo quod heremitagium illud non fuit tunc ſub certâ cuſtodiâ & protectione alicujus: Nos, ad hujuſmodi dampna & pericula ibidem in poſterum evitanda remedium adhibere volentes, majorem noſtrum Londonie, qui pro tempore fuerit, ejuſdem heremitagii, nomine noſtro, quamdiu nobis placuerit, cuſtodem deputavimus & protectorem, ut ipſe heremitagium illud inhabitantes, & redditus, & omnia alia ad illud pertinentia, de cetero nomine noſtro protegat & defendat. Et ſi quid eis foriſfactum fuerit, id eis ſine dilatione faciat remedium. In cujus, &c. Teſte Rege, apud Kenynton, 12° die Julii [4]."

The lord-mayor of London in 1274 was Henry Wallis; who appears to have held that high office till the year 1284 incluſive, and again in 1298. Whether the care of this ſmall hermitage was incompatible with his other important duties, or to whatever cauſe it was owing, a ſecond patent was iſſued in 1281, by which the cuſtody of the hermitage was thus granted to the conſtable of the Tower for the time being:

" Rex omnibus ballivis & fidelibus ſuis ad quos, &c. ſalutem. Quia redditus, calices, libri, veſtimenta, imagines, campane, reliquie, carte, munimenta regia, privilegia apoſtolica, utenſilia, & alia bona heremitagii juxta Cripelgate, &c. (as above) ſubtrahi & aſportari ſolent, ut dicitur, pro eo quod heremitagium illud non fuerit tunc ſub certâ cuſtodiâ: Nos, ad hujuſmodi dampna & pericula ibidem in poſterum evitanda remedium adhibere volentes in hâc parte, Conſtabularium Turris noſtre Londonie, qui pro tempore fuerit, ejuſdem heremitagii, nomine noſtro, quamdiu nobis placuerit, cuſtodem deputavimus, ut ipſe heremitagium, &c. (as above.) Teſte Rege, apud Weſtm', 12° die Julii [5]."

In 1299, this hermitage is recognized as belonging to Garendon abbey [6].

In 1311, Ralph de Baldock being then biſhop of London, Thomas de Wyreford, an hermit of this cell, (a preſumptuous, troubleſome man, it ſeems,) took upon him to hear confeſſions of people of the neighbouring pariſhes, to enjoin penances, to grant indulgences for 500 days to ſuch as frequented his Hermitage, and the like, having no lawful authority ſo to do. For which offences, he was judicially proceeded againſt by the biſhop, and pronounced guilty, and to be a tranſgreſſor of the canons; whereupon he was admoniſhed to make ſatisfaction for the ſame within 15 days, and inhibited to do the like; as alſo were the people warned not to follow, or to be ſeduced by him, under pain of excommunication [7].

Sept. 16, 1315, the cuſtody of this hermitage was committed to Walter Kemeſey [8].

In 1344, William Lyons was hermit here [9].

" The abbey of Garendon," ſays Mr. Burton, " had an hermitage, or cell, in the corner of Monkſwell ſtreet, belonging unto it; whither the abbot and convent ſent two chaplains of their houſe and order to celebrate divine ſervice for the ſouls of Audemar de Valence earl of Pembroke, and the lady Mary his wife [10]."

My ſituation in the City of London having given me a right to ſearch the Corporation Records, I have thence quoted, in p. 795, the original grant of the lady Mary de St. Pol, counteſs of Pembroke, to the abbot and convent of Garendon, in 1347, of ten tenements in Fleet-ſtreet, for the purpoſe of this endowment.

In 1382, biſhop Tanner notices a patent concerning this hermitage [11].

The form of a preſentation to this chantry, in 1399, is now firſt printed [12]:

" Venerabili viro majori civitatis Londonie, pater Johannes abbas monaſterii beate Marie de Gerendoniâ, ordinis Ciſtertienſis, Lincolnie dioc', ſalutem cum honore. Ad cantariam pro animâ Adomari de Valenciâ, comitis Penebrochie, a venerabiliſſimâ dominâ Mariâ de Sancto Paulo comitiſſâ Penebrochie, uxore ejuſdem, in heremitagio juxta Cripulgate, Londonie, ordinatam, & ad noſtram preſentationem ſpectantem; dilectum nobis in Chriſto fratrem Johem de Rither, commonachum noſtrum & ſacerdotem, veſtre reverentie preſentamus per preſentes. In cujus rei teſtimonium, ſigillum preſentibus appoſuimus. Dat' in monaſterio de Gerendoniâ predicto, in feſto Sancti Michaelis, anno Dñi millo ccc° nonageſimo nono. Virtute cujus preſentationis, predictus Johes de Rithere admiſſus fuit ad cantariam predictam per Thomam Knolles majorem Londonie, &c."

This chapel of St. James, with its appurtenances, was granted by Henry VIII. March 13, 1543, to William Lambe; and, it is ſuppoſed, confirmed by (though Stowe [13] ſays, purchaſed from) Edward VI. to the ſaid William Lambe, one of the gentlemen of the king's chapel, citizen and clothworker of London; from whom it hath been ſince generally called Lambe's Chapel.

Edward VI. April 1, 1550, among other peculiars and pretended exempts in the dioceſe of London, ſubjected this chapel to the juriſdiction of the biſhop [14]; which was confirmed by Queen Mary in 1553 [15].

Mr. Lambe died (ſaith Stowe) in 1577; which muſt be a miſtake; for his will, proved in the Prerogative office, bears date March 10, 1579, and a codicil annexed to it, April 1, 1580, both which were proved, June 2, 1580; ſo that it is plain he died between the firſt of April and the beginning of June, that year. Stowe likewiſe tells us, that then (1577) he gave this chapel to the Clothworkers of London; but Mr. Newcourt ſuggeſts, that it was about two or three years before that time[1]. He was buried in the church of St. Faith under St. Paul's; and near his grave a braſs plate on a pillar was thus inſcribed:

[2] By the deſcription of this land, which was bounded by the land of the Fryers of the new Hoſpital in the North, and by the city wall on the Weſt, it is plain that it was the ground now called Lamb's chapel-yard.

"William Lambe, ſo ſometimes was my name,
Whiles alive dyd run my mortal race,
Serving a prince of moſt immortall fame
Henry the Eight, who, of his princely grace,
In his chapell allowed me a place.
By whoſe favour, from gentleman to eſquire
I was preferr'd, with worſhip for my hire.
With wives three I joyned wedlock band,
Which (all alive) true lovers were to me,
Joane, Alice, and Joane; for ſo they came to hand,
What needeth prayſe regarding their degree,
In wively truth none ſtedfaſt more could be,
Who though in earth Death's force did once diſſever,
Heaven yet, I truſt, ſhall joyn us altogether.
O Lambe of God, which ſinne didſt take away;
And as a Lambe was offred up for ſinne,
Where I (poor Lambe) went from thy flock aſtray,
Yet thou, good Lord, vouchſafe thy Lambe to winne
Home to thy folde, and holde thy Lambe therein;
That at the day, when lambes and goates ſhall ſever,
Of thy choice lambes, Lambe may be one for ever.
I pray you all, that receive bread and pence,
To ſay the Lord's Prayer before ye go hence."

Lambe's chapel is in length from Eaſt to Weſt 39 feet; in breadth from North to South 15. It contains a fine old buſt of the founder in his livery gown, placed here in 1612, with a purſe in one hand, and his gloves in the other; engraved in Plate CXVI; with four ſmall paintings on glaſs, of St. James the Apoſtle, St. Peter, St. Matthew, and St. Matthias[2].

The miniſter of this chapel had formerly the privilege of baptiſms, marriages, and burials. The font, which is of ſtone, ſtill remains; and a bell.

A few grave-ſtones are alſo ſtill preſerved; but from ſome of them the braſs plates are loſt.

The only inſcriptions now legible are, one to Henry and Elizabeth Weldon, of Swinſcombe[3], in Kent 1595; and another to Katharine Hird, daughter of Nicholas Beſt of Gray's Inn, 1609. On a third is a ſmall braſs plate, a lion rampant in a lozenge.

From a regular regiſter of this chapel the following extracts were taken by the induſtrious John Bagford:

"Upon the 8th of July, 1625, I Arthur Jackſon, rector of St. Michael Hogen-lane, Wood-ſtreet, was choſen by the worſhipful Company of Clothworkers to be miniſter of this church or chapel of St. James on the Wall, commonly called Lambes Chapel.

"Marriages. Aug. 18, 1586, Nicholas Beſtney, of Gray's Inn in Holborn, in the county of Middleſex, eſq. and Bridget Mitchel, ſole daughter and heir of John Mitchel, of Warham, in the county of Suſſex.

"The 28th of July, 1608, Henry Hudſon, of the Inner Temple, London, gent. and Sibyll Beſtney, &c.

"Thus far theſe marriages were taken out of ſeveral paper-regiſters by me, Arthur Jackſon."

Then, from this Mr. Jackſon's Regiſter-book, were entered the marriages in that chapel celebrated till the year 1632, and no farther.

Burials entered in the ſame Regiſter:

1592, Eleanor Beſtney, daughter of Nicholas Beſtney and Bridget his wife.

1604, May 29, Katharine Beſtney, daughter of Nicholas Beſtney, eſq. and Bridget his wife.

Aug. 29, Urſula Beſtney, daughter of the ſaid Nicholas and Bridget, &c.

1692, March 22, Mrs. Bridget Beſtney, widow, late wife of Mr. Nicholas Beſtney, eſq."

The chapel is at preſent decently fitted up, with a neat pulpit, and convenient ſeats and benches for the Company of Clothworkers; an armed chair for the maſter being placed immediately under the founder's buſt; and before him is a table reſembling a merchant's deſk.

Two Corinthian painted inter-columniations contain the Lord's Prayer and Creed.

At the Weſt end are the King's arms.

At the Eaſt end, on each ſide of the windows:

"Y^{e} worſhipfull John Crayle, eſq. maſter.
Mr. William Andrews, Mr. Walter Ryan, wardens.
Mr. Lancelott Skynner, Mr. Evan Pugh, wardens.
Anno Domini 1709."

Four ſermons are preached here on the four principal feſtivals; the feaſt of the Annunciation of the Bleſſed Virgin, March 25; the feaſt of St. John Baptiſt, June 24; the feaſt of St. Michael the Archangel, Sept. 29; and that of St. Thomas the Apoſtle, Dec. 21; on which days the maſter, wardens, and livery of the company, in conformity to Mr. Lambe's will, attend in their gowns; and, after the ſervice, relieve twelve poor men and as many women, by giving 1*s*. to each; and every Michaelmas they give to each a frieze gown, a lockram ſhift, and a good pair of winter ſhoes.

The following articles relate to Garendon abbey.

HATHERN,

antiently written Avederne and Hawtherne, is a conſiderable village, three miles diſtant from Loughborough, on the high road leading to Derby, about a mile and three quarters long, and a mile and a quarter broad; bounded by the river Soar on the Eaſt, Long Whatton on the North, Shepeſhed on the Weſt, and Diſhley on the South. In the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, it is within the deanry of Akeley.

At the time of the general ſurvey, three ploughlands in Avederne and Diſhley are deſcribed as dependant on the manor of Loughborough. They contained twenty acres of meadow, and a wood three furlongs and a half long, and one broad [1].

This manor belonged to Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter at his death in 1168; and deſcended to his ſon Robert Blanchmains, and grandſon Robert Parnell; who dying without iſſue in 1205, this lordſhip, on the partition of his lands, fell to Margaret wife of Saher de Quincy earl of Winton; which Margaret gave the toll of her mill here to the abbey of Leiceſter; and Roger de Quincy, her ſon, gave ſeveral meſſuages to the abbey of Garendon [2].

In the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about 1240, Hathern is not noticed.

In 1254, Mathew le Venour, at his death, held 10 virgates and a half of land in Hawtherne, of the honour of Winton; and 12*s.* rent, in the ſame town, of the land of Robert le Venour and his ſon Roger [3].

In 1270, it was found that Roger de Quincy, earl of Winton, deceaſed, was ſeiſed of half a knight's fee in Houton and Hathern, value 10 marks a year; that Eleanor de Vaus, relict of the ſaid Roger earl of Winton, held the ſame in dower; and that Simon Mallore and Hugh Nauntell, or Nauncell, held the ſame under her, and the heirs of the ſaid earl [4].

In 1278, Robert Fitz Alan and William Nauntell held lands here of the honour of Wincheſter.

In the Itinerary of 1280, Hathern and Shepeſhed anſwered collectively as one vill.

In 1297, it was found that Edmund earl of Lancaſter, the king's brother, at his deceaſe, held divers lands at Hathern [5].

In 1321, it was found that Robert de Hauſted ſenior, deceaſed, and Margery his wife, held 4*s.* rent in Hathern, of the fee of Winton; and that Robert de Hauſted, his ſon, was the next heir of the aforeſaid Robert and Margery [6].

In the Chartulary of the Honour of Segrave, the following deeds are entered relative to Hauthyrne, which is there ſtated to be a member of Diſeworth [7]:

1. A grant, from Richard de la Haye, to Edward ſon of Ankitell de Segrave and his heirs, of two virgates of land, with a croft and 17 ſelions of land, in Hathern, to be held by homage, and the ſervice of one pound of cumin and one penny a year.

2. A grant, from Robert de Stanton to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of the ſame land and croft, on the ſame terms.

3. A grant from Robert de Haya, ſon of Alan de Humberſtan, to the ſame Stephen and his heirs, of one virgate of land in Hathern, which Geoffrey ſon of Ede held of him, together with the ſaid Geoffrey, his chattels and ſequel; to be held of the ſaid Robert and his heirs by the ſervice of a pair of white gloves at Eaſter, in full for all ſervice except foreign ſervice.

4. A confirmation grant from Robert de Haya, ſon of Robert de Haya of Humberſton, of all his right in the three virgates and croft above-mentioned.

5. A grant from Henry de Naſſord, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, of ten virgates and a half of land in Hathern, to be held of the ſaid Henry and Maud his wife, and their heirs, by homage, and the ſervice of one ſparrow-hawk (ſpernarium ſorum), or 2*s.* on the feaſt of the Aſſumption of the Bleſſed Mary; for all the ſervice, except foreign ſervice, belonging to a third part of a knight's fee.

6. A grant, from Maud de Mentemer, wife to the aforeſaid Henry, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, of the above-mentioned ten virgates and a half.

7. A grant, from Robert ſon of Roger, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, of one virgate of land in Hathern, which William ſon of Turkill held of him, together with the ſaid William and all his ſequel; to be held of the ſaid Robert and his heirs by the ſervice of a pair of white gloves at Eaſter, in lieu of all other ſervice [8].

In 1325, it was found that John de Segrave, deceaſed, and Chriſtian his wife, held 8*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* of the bond tenants in Hathern; and that John de Segrave, ſon and heir of Stephen de Segrave, couſin of the aforeſaid John de Segrave ſenior, was his next heir [9].

In 1340, it was found that Henry de Beaumont earl of Bogan, deceaſed, held a quarter of one knight's fee in Hathern of the king in capite, as of the right of Alice his wife [10].

In the ſame year, in an exemplification of the various grants to the abbot and monks of Garendon, are noted the donations of land, &c. there, by William ſon of Adam de Watton; Brian de Watton, formerly foreſter to Saher earl of Winton; Roger ſon of Brian de Watton; maſter Richard de Stapelton, lately rector of Hathern; William de Peco, of Loughborough; Robert Naunetell; Robert ſon of Robert Venator, of Kereby; Adam ſon of William Coll; Richard le Fraunceis; and John Frankelyn.

In 1343, it was found that Henry de Ferrars, deceaſed, held the moiety of one knight's fee, with the appurtenances, in Hathern, which Robert Fitz-Adam lately held [11].

In 1346, Robert de la Hay and John de Hotoft (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the King's eldeſt ſon) were aſſeſſed 5*s.* for an eighth part of one knight's fee in Hathern; Thomas de Thorpe 12*s.* for a fortieth part of one knight's fee there; John de Segrave and John Nauntell 5*s.* for half a quarter of one knight's fee there; Thomas de Schulton was aſſeſſed 2*s.* for a twentieth part of one knight's fee there; and the abbot of Garendon 2*s.* for a twentieth part of one knight's fee there; all parcel of the honor of Winton [12].

July 16, 1361, it was found that Henry Plantagenet, duke of Lancaſter, deceaſed, was ſeiſed of a twentieth part of one knight's fee in Hatherne, which Thomas de Thorpe held [13].

In 1369, it was found that Henry de Beaumont, deceaſed, held a quarter of one knight's fee in Hathern of the king in capite, which John Nauntell held [14].

In 1371, it was found that William de Ferrers of Groby, deceaſed, and the heir of Robert Fitz-Adam, held half a knight's fee in Hathern [15].

In 1387, it was found that Henry de Ferrers of Groby, knt. deceaſed, held half a knight's fee in Hatherne, which the heirs of Robert Adam held [16].

In 1396, it was found that John de Beaumont, knt. deceaſed, was ſeiſed of a quarter of one knight's fee in Hathern, which Thomas Allen and Katharine his wife held [17].

Dec. 21, 1406, Robert Gryſt of Hathern granted to ſir Walter Covyntre, rector of Hathern, John Chamberlayne, and William Powle, of the ſame place, and to their heirs, three roods of arable land, with their appurtenances, in Hathern, to be held for and under the capital lord, on the accuſtomed tenure.

In 1413, it was found that Henry de Beaumont, knt. deceaſed, was ſeiſed of a quarter of one knight's fee in Hatherne, which John Nauntell held[1].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Hathern was rated at 4*l.* 17*s.* and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 2*l.* 12*s.*

In 1444, it was found that William de Ferrers of Groby, knt. deceaſed, was ſeiſed of half a knight's fee in Hathern, which the heirs of Robert Fitz-Adam held of the ſaid William by the ſervice of half a knight's fee; alſo of a third part of one knight's fee there, which the heirs of Ralph Baſſet of Sapcote held[2].

In 1457, it was found that Edward de Grey, knt. Lord Ferrers of Groby, deceaſed, was ſeiſed of half a knight's fee in Hathern, which the heirs of Robert Fitz-Adam held of the ſame Edward; alſo of a third part of one knight's fee there, which the heirs of Ralph Baſſet of Sapcote held of the ſame Edward[3].

May 16, 1462, King Edward IV. granted a meſſuage and a virgate of land in Hathern, (late parcel of the poſſeſſions of John Beaumont, eſq.) to Richard Haſtings, eſq. and his heirs male[4].

In 1464, it was found that John Beaumont, eſq. attainted of high treaſon, was ſeiſed of one virgate of land, and three acres of meadow, with their appurtenances, in Hatherne[5]; and on the 8th of November that year, king Edward IV. granted one meſſuage, one virgate of land, and three acres of meadow at Hathern (late parcel of the forfeited poſſeſſions of John Beaumont) to Richard Haſtings and his heirs[6].

In 1472, Thomas Hotofte, brother and heir of Richard Hotofte, eſq. releaſed all his right in all his lands and tenements in Hathern to John Staunton, eſq.[7]

John Bothe, ſon of Henry, and grandſon of William Bothe, died July 8, 1531, ſeiſed of five meſſuages and five bovates of land, 40 acres of meadow, 100 of paſture, five acres of wood, and one cottage, in Hathern; one meſſuage in Loughborough; certain lands at Knight thorpe, alias Bothe-thorpe, under the manor of Loughborough; and lands at Whatton under Chriſt's college, Cambridge. He left, by Jane daughter of Henry Sacheverell, Henry his ſon and heir, aged 10 years[8].

Several particulars relative to individual inhabitants of Hathern are detailed in the Chartularies of Garendon abbey[9]; to which a conſiderable part of this townſhip belonged; and which was given in 1540 to Thomas Manners earl of Rutland.

The nuns of Gracedieu alſo poſſeſſed lands here[10].

Lands called Cow-land, in this pariſh, were under leaſe to Thomas Marſhall, by the abbot and convent of Garendon, at the time of the diſſolution[11].

Ralph Marſhall died 10 May, 1542, died ſeiſed of 3 meſſuages, 6 virgates and 25 acres of land, at Hathern, held under Henry marquis of Dorſet, as of the manor of Shepeſhed, by the ſervice of a fourth part of a knight's fee, and worth 66*s.* 8*d.*; two cottages in Rothley, held under the prior of St. John of Jeruſalem, as of the manor of Rothley ſoke, worth 7*s.*; two meſſuages, and two virgates of land, at Barrow ſuper Sore, worth 12*s.* held of the earl of Huntingdon, but by what ſervice was unknown; and Thomas, his ſon and heir, was then aged 16[12].

The following requeſt of an inhabitant of Hathern occurs about the year 1559.

"To the right worſhipſul Sir George Haſtings, knt.

"Moſt humblie beſeching ſheweth unto your worſhip your poore orator William Crowſon, of Hathern, in the countie of Leyceſter, huſbandman;

"That, whereas our late ſovereign lord and ladie King Philip and Queen Mary, the ſecond daie of November, and in the fourthe and fiveth yeares of their raigne, did conſtitute and appoint one Francis Cave, of Bagrave, in the countie aforeſaid, eſquire, to take up certain ſomes of money, by way of lone, of their ſubjects within the ſaid countie of Leyceſter; youre ſaid poore ſuppliaunt, amongſt others, did lend unto their ſaid maieſties the ſome of ten pounds of lawful Engliſh money, to be repaid unto the ſaid William Crowſon at a certain day then enſuing, as by their letters of privie ſeal to your ſaid poore oratour, directed and ready heare to be ſhewed unto your worſhip, more plainly appeareth; which ten poundes ſo lent and not reſtored was then and yet is a great detriment and hindraunce to him, his poore wife, children, and family: and yet, nevertheleſs, your ſaid poore orator, being hardly hable to releeve his ſaid chardge, is now eftſoones called upon to lend to her maieſtie other ten pounds; a thinge, which albeit he would gladlie do if any wayes he were hable, yet being compelled thereto he ſhould be driven to great extremitie, to the utter ſubverſion of him and all his for ever: in conſideration whereof, and for that he is a man of fourſcore year old and upwardes, and paſt all labour and induſtry to gaine by, it may pleaſe your wourſhip of your accuſtomed clemency to be a meane that your ſuppliaunt may be diſcharged of this ſecond loane, and to vouchſafe your favour in his behalf to ſoch her highnes officers as it concerneth, as theareby they ceaſe to deale anny further with him therein. And he and his will dailie praie to God to reward your worſhip with longe life and deſired health in this world, and eternal felicitie in the life to come.

Your poore orator, WILLIAM CROWSON[13]."

In 1565, there were 42 families in Hathern.

John Aylmer biſhop of London died at Fulham, June 5, 1594, ſeiſed of the advowſon of Hathern church, held of the king, as of the manor of Eaſt Greenwich, in libero ſervitio; Samuel Aylmer, eſq. his ſon and heir being then 28 years old and upwards[14]. When, or how, this learned prelate became poſſeſſed of the advowſon, we do not learn. He has already been noticed, under Bradgate, p. 667, as the tutor of lady Jane Grey; and as "the only preacher in Leiceſterſhire, where he effectually fixed the Proteſtant religion." He obtained from queen Elizabeth, in 1591, a grant of divers lands in Middleſex and other counties; but whether this extended to Leiceſterſhire I am not able to aſcertain. He made large purchaſes alſo in London, Lincolnſhire, and Eſſex, and probably alſo in Leiceſterſhire, where we find his eldeſt ſon Samuel a landholder[15]. The biſhop was buried in his cathedral of St. Paul, before St. George's chapel, under a fair ſtone of grey marble, with the following inſcription; which is here preſerved, as the ſtone on which it was engraven was deſtroyed by the fanaticks of the ſeventeenth century:

"Hic jacet certiſſimam expectans reſurrectionem ſuæ carnis D.
Johannes Aylmer, D. Epiſcopus
Londini, qui obiit diem ſuum an. Dom. 1594, ætat. ſuæ 73.
Ter ſenos annos præſul; ſemel exul, & idem
Bis pugil in cauſâ Religionis erat."

In a ſubſidy of 1627 is this entry:

"Hathern. Richard Palmer in terris 7*l.*"

The freeholders here in 1630 were, Simon Walmſley, Thomas Chawner, Richard Palmer, Edward Hatherby.

In 1665, there was collected in Hathern, for the relief of the Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of 2*l.*

The property of the earl of Rutland at Hathern paſſed in marriage with lady Catharine Manners, only daughter and heir of Francis the ſixth earl, to George Villiers the firſt duke of Buckingham; and was ſold in 1683, by the ſecond duke, to ſir Ambroſe Phillipps.

The following notices of leaſes at Hathern, of lands, &c. belonging to Wigſton's Hoſpital, were taken by Mr. Carte from the archives of that excellent foundation.

A leaſe, dated Oct. 12, 1663, made to Anthony Croſon, of Hathern, yeoman, Thomas Bowley, junior, one of the ſons of Thomas Bowley, ſenior, of Long Whatton, and John Bowley, one other of the ſons of Thomas Bowley, ſenior, of a meſſuage or tenement in Hathern, in the tenure of Anthony Croſon, and of thoſe ſeveral parcels and pieces of land, arable, meadow, and paſture, in Hathern, containing two yardlands in the tenure of Anthony Croſon (except all timber trees); habend' to Anthony Croſon, Thomas Bowley, jun. John Bowley, for the lives of the ſaid Anthony Croſon, Thomas Bowley, and John Bowley, and the longer liver of them, reddend' yearly, £1. at Lady-day and Michaelmas, and one couple of fat capons, or two ſhillings in money, on New year's day; with a clauſe of re-entry on non-payment of rent at 20 days, and a covenant to bring a load of coals to the hoſpital; worth per annum £14.

Aug. 30, 1686, this leaſe was ſurrendered, and a new leaſe granted to Thomas Bowley of the ſame land (except as in the former leaſe is excepted); habend' to him and his heirs, for the life of himſelf and of his two ſons, William and John Bowley, junior; the ſaid William aged 12 years, and John four years. Rent as in the former leaſe.

A leaſe, dated Sept. 6, 1660, made to John Savage the elder, of the meſſuage and tenement in Hathern, in the tenure of John Savage the elder; and of the ſeveral pieces of land, arable, meadow, paſture, and commons, containing two yard-lands, to the ſaid meſſuage uſually belonging, in the tenure of the ſaid John Savage the elder (except all timber trees), habend' to John Savage the elder, for the lives of the ſaid John and Anne his wife, and John Savage, jun. ſon and heir apparent of John Savage the elder; the ſaid John Savage the younger being of the age of 18 years; reddend' £2. 5*s*. at Michaelmas and Lady day, and one couple of fat capons, or two ſhillings in money. Dec. 22, a covenant to bring a load of coals to the hoſpital; provided, that if the ſaid John Savage the elder ſhould not duly pay the rent, and truly obſerve and perform the covenants, then the leaſe to be void.

A leaſe, dated Sept. 6, 1660, made to John Throne, of one meſſuage and four yard-lands in Hathern, in the tenure of John Throne (except all timber trees); habend' to the ſaid John Throne, during the lives of himſelf and Rachel his wife, and Thomas Throne, eldeſt ſon of the ſaid John Throne, the ſaid Thomas Throne being about four years of age; reddend' £4. 10*s*. per annum at Michaelmas and Lady day, and a couple of fat capons, or elſe two ſhillings in money. Sept. 22, a covenant to bring a load of coals to the hoſpital; provided, that if the ſaid John Throne ſhall not duly pay the rent, and perform the covenants, the leaſe to be void. Worth per annum £25.

A leaſe, July 22, 1672, made to Nicholas Lowe and his aſſigns, of one meſſuage and two yard-lands in Hathern, in the tenure of Nicholas Lowe (except all timber trees); habend' to Nicholas Lowe and his heirs, for the lives of himſelf and Anne his wife, and Nicholas Lowe, jun. ſon and heir apparent of Nicholas Lowe, party to the ſaid leaſe, Nicholas Lowe, jun. being of the age of 24 years; reddend' yearly 30*s*. at Michaelmas and Lady day; and a clauſe of re-entry for non-payment of rent at the end of 20 days, &c. Worth per annum £12.

In 1722, 28 freeholders polled from this pariſh; and in 1775, we find 43 names.

On the death of Samuel Phillipps, eſq. in 1774, Hathern was brought by his widow in marriage, in 1776, to ſir William Gordon, knight of the Bath.

In 1777, an act was paſſed, for dividing and incloſing, within the lordſhip or liberty and pariſh of Hathern, ſeveral open fields, meadows, paſtures, and parcels of common or waſte ground, computed to contain in the whole about 1300 acres. In this act ſir William Gordon, knight of the Bath, is deſcribed (in right of dame Mary Gordon his wife) as lord of the manor and patron of the rectory of Hathern; the Rev. William Middleton, clerk, as rector of the ſaid rectory, and entitled to certain glebe lands and common right in the ſaid open fields, meadows, paſtures, commons, or waſte grounds, to a piece of land called The Tithe Piece, to a cottage with common right belonging thereto, and to all the great and ſmall tithes belonging to the ſaid rectory, except to the tithe of hay of ſome part of the ſaid meadows; the Rev. Joſeph Smith, clerk, as curate of the chapel of Oſmaſton, co. Derby, and entitled to certain lands and right of common within the ſaid lordſhip and pariſh of Hathern, belonging to the ſaid chapel and curacy of Oſmaſton; the maſter, fellows, and ſcholars of Chriſt's College, Cambridge, as entitled to certain lands within the ſaid lordſhip of Hathern; Richard Cheſlyn, eſq. as leſſee thereof under the ſaid maſter, fellows, and ſcholars; and Thomas Exon, John Exon, Thomas Harriman, Samuel Bowley, Samuel Smith, John Wale, William Martin, and others, as ſub-leſſees or under-tenants of the ſame lands to the ſaid Richard Cheſlyn; the chaplains and poor of William Wigſton's Hoſpital at Leiceſter, as entitled to certain lands in the ſaid lordſhip of Hathern; and William Martin, Thomas Exon, Joſeph Halford, Samuel Smith, and Alice Lowe, widow, as leſſees thereof under the ſaid chaplains and poor of the ſaid hoſpital; and Francis earl of Huntingdon, the ſaid ſir William Gordon, Joſeph Halford, Alice Lowe, Thomas Bowley, Samuel Bowley, William Boyer, and others, are deſcribed as owners and proprietors of the reſidue of the ſaid open fields, meadows, paſtures, commons, or waſte grounds, intended by this act to be divided and incloſed. An allotment is firſt directed to be made to the vicar as a compenſation for his glebe; and one-ſeventh of the reſidue of the common field, and as much as ſhall be equal in value to one-tenth of the old incloſures, in lieu of all tithes and eccleſiaſtical demands, except mortuaries, Eaſter dues, and ſurplice fees. To the lord of the manor, a manor freeboard of as many yards, by the ſide of Oakley Wood, as the commiſſioners ſhould think proper, for his right on the ſoil of the common field. Two acres to be allotted for the repair of the highways; an equivalent to the curate of Oſmaſton and his ſucceſſors for ſuch right as they poſſeſſed in the open fields; and the reſidue in equal proportions among the ſeveral proprietors.

In 1793, the number of houſes was 164; inhabitants 984. A bridge was that year built at Hathern, over the river Soar, at the joint expence of the counties of Leiceſter and Nottingham.

In 1798, this lordſhip came, with Garendon, under the will of Samuel Phillipps, eſq. to Thomas March-Phillipps, eſq. the preſent owner.

The inhabitants are principally frame-work knitters. Labourers 1*s*. 2*d*.; carpenters 2*s*.; land, on an average, 23*s*. per acre; pit-coal 7*d*. a hundred.

The lands conſiſt of arable, paſture, and meadow; chiefly clay; part flat, and part hilly.

A ſchool here is ſupported by the Garendon family. Here is alſo a Methodiſt meeting-houſe.

The town croſs is given in Plate CXVI. fig. 2.

The return made to the Houſe of Commons in 1786, in anſwer to an enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in this pariſh, may be ſeen in vol. I. p. 64.

The CHURCH, (Plate CXVI.)

dedicated to St. Peter, conſiſts of a tower (in which are five bells [1]); a nave, chancel, and two ailes, ſeparated by four arches. The length of the church is 47 feet; the breadth 44 feet.

Here is an old round font, with twiſted wreaths, fig. 3; and the arch of a piſcina, fig. 4.

In the church Mr. Burton noticed theſe arms:

In the Eaſt window of the chancel ſtand the arms of Hugh Ducket, rector of the church in 1298; who glazed that window; Quarterly, Argent and Sable, a bend Gules; fig. 5.

In a North window of the church:

Sable, ſix annulets Or; fig. 6.

Argent, on a chevron engrailed Sable five annulets Or; fig. 7. Under which was written:

"Orate pro animabus Willi'mi Bonington et Matildis uxoris ejus, qui hanc feneſtram fieri fecerunt."

In the Matriculus of 1220 [2], Hathern is deſcribed to be under the patronage of the abbey of Leiceſter; Richard the then rector having been inſtituted by Hugh biſhop of Lincoln, and paying to that abbey a penſion of three marks and a ſtone of wax.

The Valor of Pope Nicholas, 1290, rates it at 12*l.*

In 1344, the procurations were, 7*s.* 6¾*d.*; the rectory was taxed at 18 marks, and paid 2*s.* for Peter-pence. The abbot of Leiceſter held it to his own uſe, with the penſion of 40*s.*

The Regiſter of the abbey of Leiceſter thus ſtates the particulars of their right to the penſion:

"Hatharn. Habuimus quondam ibidem advocationem eccleſie, ut unum de ſochâ de Schepiſheyd, ex dono fundatoris noſtri; tamen recipimus ibi per manus rectoris annuam pencionem, ſcil', xl s̃. & 1 petram cere. Unde habemus confirmationes Hugonis epiſcopi Linc', & regum Henrici II. &c.

"Omnibus Chriſti fidelibus ad quos preſens ſcriptum pervenerit. Hugo, Dei gratiâ, Linc' epus ſalutem. Ad univerſitatis veſtre notitiam volumus pervenire nos, ad preſentationem Pauli abbatis & conventûs Leyc', dilectum filium noſtrum magiſtrum T. ſuſcepiſſe in perpetuam memoriam eccleſie de Hatharn, ſalvâ pencione xl s̃. & 1 petre cere, quos predictus T. predicto conventui tenetur ſolvere annuatim; quod ut rectum habeatur & firmum, preſenti ſcripto & ſigilli noſtri patrocinio duximus confirmandum.

"Huic concordat matriculus epiſcopi:

"Eccleſie de Hatharn patronus abbas Leyc'; perſona Ricardus, inſtitutus per H. Linc' epiſcopum, ſolvens dicto abbati xl s̃. & 1 petram cere.'

"Mem' quod conceſſimus advocationem eccleſie de Hathern ſacriſte & canonicis eccleſie Sc̃e Marie de Caſtro Leyc', ſalvâ nobis annuâ pencione xl s̃. & ſub conditione quod nunquam eam alienaverint. Et ad hoc obligantur in obligatione quingentarum marcarum factâ abbati Leyc' & conventui ejuſdem, &c.

"Mem' quod pencio eccleſie de Hathurn, ſcil' xl s̃. & unius petre cere, recuperata fuit per ſententiam datam coram judice ordinario; cum condemnatione domini Hugonis Ducket, tunc rectoris ibidem, anno Domini M°CC° nonogeſimo octavo, ut patet in condemnatione ejuſdem domini Hugonis. Nota taxationem decimarum & ſententias diffinitivas pro dictâ pencione [3]."

In 1534-5, the procurations and ſynodals were 11*s.* 0¾*d.*, the abbot of Leiceſter's penſion 2*l.* 4*s.*; and the value of the rectory was 18*l.*—4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* was paid towards the repairs of the church; and 13*s.* 4*d.* to the church of Kegworth.

In 1552, the commiſſioners reported that the church of Hathern contained,

"In primis, a challice.
Itm̃, thre veſtmentes.
Itm̃, a cope of ſatyn of Burges.
Itm̃, three belles and tow hand-belles.
Itm̃, a croſſe."

In 1642, Henry Skipwith, eſq. was patron of this church; and in 1647, Simon Rugeley [4], eſq. who married the daughter and heir of the ſaid Henry Skipwith. His arms were, Argent, a chevron between three roſes barbed Vert; fig. 8.

In 1650, the rectory was returned worth 66*l.*; and the incumbent as ſufficient.

The preſent value in the King's books is 12*l.*

The epiſcopal procurations 3*s.* 9½*d.*; the archidiaconal 11*s.* 1*d.*

Two other ſtones for rectors, not now legible.

In a pew under the clerk's ſeat is an old ſtone, with the figures of a man and his wife in a praying poſture, fig. 10, inſcribed,

"Hic jacent Henricus Hughley et Elizabetha uxor ejus, quorum animabꝫ ꝓpicietur Deus. Amen."

On a braſs plate on a marble ſlab:

"HERE LYES THE BODY OF NATHANIEL PALMER, GENT. WHO MARRIED CATHARINE, THE DAUGHTER OF MR. WILLIAM HAWLEY, OF LOUGHBOROUGH; BY WHOM HE HAD FOUR CHILDREN; THREE DAUGHTERS, CATHARINE, MARY, AND ELIZABETH; AND ONE SON, NAMED NATHANIEL. HE DECEASED ON THE XIITH DAY OF DECEMBER, IN THE YEAR OF OUR LORD MDCXCI; OF HIS AGE XXVII."

A large ſlab in the South aile has an inſcription, almoſt wholly hid by pews, for Ralph Marſhall and Elizabeth his wife, 1542, as mentioned by Mr. Burton.

Another in the North aile for William Benington and Maud his wife, who gave the window there.

In the church-yard.
On an altar-tomb, with iron rails:
"Here lie the remains of Nicholas Loe,

He departed this life,
Sept. 3, 1761, aged 70.
In him was loſt, by a ſudden ſtroke,
a peaceable neighbour, and a tender, indulgent huſband."
[His wife is buried there, without an inſcription.]

In the church of Caledon, co. Warwick:

"Here lieth the body of Mary, relict of Thomas Aſſop, late rector of Hatherne, in the county of Leiceſter, daughter of Samuel Harware, of Stoke, in the liberty of Coventry, gent. who departed this life the 31ſt of January, anno Domini 1688, in the 71ſt year of her age [1]."

Benefactions.

1. An houſe and ſeveral bays of building with one yard land in this pariſh; and a little cloſe, called the Hoak, for the uſe and behoof of this church, veſted in truſtees.

2. An annuity of 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* left by the laſt will of Ralph Pratt, of London, to the poor of this pariſh, charged on a piece of land in Bermondſey, in the county of Surrey, and due at the feaſt of All Saints, now in poſſeſſion of Thomas Tyers, eſq.

3. An annuity of 1*l.* 4*s.* left by the laſt will of the Rev. Thomas Allſop, rector of this church, to the poor of this pariſh, charged upon an eſtate of his in the pariſh of Boylſton, now in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Chawner, and due at Lady day, to be diſtributed as follows: ſix penny loaves every Lord's day, eight penny loaves on Chriſtmas day, eight on the 29th day of May, and eight on the 5th day of November.

4. Mr. Richard Allſop, of Burton upon Trent, gave the ſum of ten pounds, the intereſt of which is to buy ten twelve-penny loaves of bolted bread, to be given to ten of the pooreſt families of this pariſh on Chriſtmas eve, at the diſcretion of the miniſter for the time being, eſpecially to thoſe poor who frequent divine ordinances the moſt.

5. Mr. Benſkin, by his laſt will, left the ſum of 15 pounds to the poor of this pariſh, the intereſt of which is to be diſtributed to the poor at the diſcretion of the miniſter.

James Attenbrow, the clerk in 1793, had then been clerk 12 years, and ſchoolmaſter 29.

The number of inhabited houſes in Hatherne in 1801, as returned to parliament, was 196; uninhabited 5. The number of males, 505; females 451; total, 956; of whom 241 were chiefly employed in agriculture, and 689 in trade, manufactures, or handicrafts.

Biographical Notices.

ANDREW GLEN [2], of Jeſus College, Cambridge, took the degree of B. A. 1683, and M. A. 1687; but was afterwards a fellow of St. John's. He was the friend and acquaintance of Mr. Ray, and acquired ſome taſte for thoſe purſuits which diſtinguiſhed that eminent man, probably from having intercourſe with him at the ſeat of his illuſtrious friend Mr. Willoughby, at Wollaton hall, near Nottingham. This appears by his having left an Herbarium, which bears date 1685, and contains upwards of 700 indigenous, and 200 exotic plants. Some of theſe were collected in a tour on the Continent. He afterwards travelled into Sweden and Italy, and reſided ſome time at Turin, where he began another collection, which is dated 1692, but contained not more than 200 ſpecimens. This Herbarium, all circumſtances conſidered, was not mean for the time in which it was made. He was inducted into the rectory of Hathern, in Leiceſterſhire, June 25, 1694; and after that period does not appear to have paid much attention to botany. He publiſhed an aſſize ſermon in 1707; and died Sept. 1, 1732, in the 67th year of his age.

Elizabeth his wife died Oct. 31, 1705, æt. 34; having been the mother of three daughters.

Elizabeth, the eldeſt, married Mr. Thomas Allſop, an attorney at Loughborough, who died March 4, 1757, aged 57; as did his widow, June 18, 1782, aged 83. Their daughter married, firſt, the late Samuel Phillipps, eſq. of Garendon Park; and, after his death, ſir William Gordon, K. B. She died Aug. 5, 1796.

Mary, the ſecond daughter, died March 19, 1788, aged 88. She was the relict of Caleb Lowdham, M. A. who died in 1781, rector of Diſeworth, co. Leiceſter, which living he had held about 50 years, and was alſo rector of Stony Staunton in that county.

Margaret, the youngeſt daughter, died unmarried July 3, 1785, aged 81.

"GEORGE TOMLINSON was deſcended from a family of that name ſeated at Gateſide, or Gateſhead, a ſuburb of the town of Newcaſtle, in the principality of Durham, as appears by a patent ſtill extant, granted to

[2] For this and the biographical article next following it, I am indebted to my late excellent friend Dr. Pulteney, of whom alſo ſome memoirs will be found in p. 848.

William Tomlinſon by Robert Cook, Clarenceux king of arms, July 4, 1560, with a blazon of the arms; per pale, Argent and Vert, three greyhounds counterchanged; a chief engrailed Or; fig. 5.

His immediate anceſtors had poſſeſſed a ſmall freehold eſtate in the pariſh of Hathern, which had been purchaſed in the beginning of the 17th century, and had deſcended to Joſeph, his father, who reſided in London, where George, the ſubject of this memoir, was born Auguſt 8, 1696. He was educated at a ſchool of repute in that city, and was deſigned for a liberal profeſſion; but adverſe occurrences having finally occaſioned the removal of the family into Leiceſterſhire, theſe intentions were fruſtrated, and he was obliged to aſſiſt his father, who was engaged in a branch of the woollen manufactory.

The knowledge he had acquired of the Greek and Latin languages, and his application to reading, had, however, in ſo great a meaſure diſqualified him for his father's buſineſs, that he not only gave up his leiſure hours to the purſuit of learning, and the cultivation, more immediately, of his taſte for Natural Hiſtory, which he had very early imbibed, but, on his father's deceaſe in 1728, finding his fortune equal, as he hoped, to the moderate views of his mind, he no longer made buſineſs an object, but ſpent the remainder of his life in a retirement, happy in himſelf, and as far as his abilities extended, not unuſeful to his neighbours. An extreme modeſty of diſpoſition and great diffidence of himſelf rendered him known to very few. By ſuch as knew him intimately he was regarded with that eſteem, which modeſt worth never fails to attract, and conſidered as an inſtance of merit and talents, worthy of a more conſpicuous ſtation in life. It is true, that ſome attempts were made by his friends in London, after his father's deceaſe, to draw him from this obſcurity, and fix him in a ſtation more conſonant to his worth and abilities in that city. But his natural diffidence, the conſideration of his being paſt the moſt active ſeaſon of life for enterprize, united with habits naturally induced by leiſure, by retirement in a country village, and his fondneſs for the objects of Natural Hiſtory, which ſuch a ſituation afforded, rendered ineffectual all propoſals of this nature. To which muſt be added, what he mentioned as one of the moſt cogent reaſons, an unwillingneſs, by his abſence, to riſk the welfare and peace of mind of an aged mother, who lived with him and laboured under a total deprivation of ſight for 22 years before her deceaſe, and over whom he watched with the moſt exemplary filial regard and affection.

His early thirſt after knowledge was manifeſted by a collection of extracts, made occaſionally from books, and the periodical publications of the time. Theſe "Miſcellanies," as he entitled them, conſiſt of three volumes in 12mo, and comprehend facts in Natural Hiſtory, antiquities, biographical anecdotes, inſtances of longevity, poetical and other belles lettres extracts, and variety of information on other ſubjects. He very early acquired a reliſh for biographical literature, having made a ſeparate collection of memoirs and anecdotes of eminent and illuſtrious men, in two volumes; the firſt in 8vo, which bears date as being finiſhed in 1720, pp. 439; the ſecond, in 4to, pp. 472. This collection was drawn from a variety of ſources, ſince he ſeldom omitted to profit, as in other branches of knowledge, by the communication of books from friends. For this kind of reading he preſerved throughout life the ſtrongeſt attachment.

But the moſt permanent ſource of his pleaſures and amuſements ſprung from Natural Hiſtory; in which all his acquirements were made wholly without aſſiſtance, except what was derived from books. Theſe were not ſmall when it is recollected, that they were made too at a period in which purſuits of that nature, ſo far from being popular, were, if not generally deſpiſed, at leaſt held in low eſtimation. He was early acquainted with the writings of Mr. Ray, and, poſſeſſing the greater part of them, had ſtudied them with all that attention, which naturally flowed from the prevailing bias of his mind. The age of Linnæus was not yet come; with his writings he was wholly unacquainted, until the latter ſtage of his life, when two or three of that author's productions fell into his hands. Yet he ſo far overcame the diſadvantages of the narrowed ſituation in which he was placed, as to gain an intimate knowledge of the productions of his own neighbourhood; not in Botany alone, but to a conſiderable extent in Zoology, more particularly relating to birds and inſects.

The memorials he left of theſe attainments indicate a bent of mind and a portion of diligence, the fruits of which, in a more favourable ſituation, muſt have yielded the poſſeſſor no mean ſhare of reputation. He cultivated principally with his own hand a ſmall garden, elegant for its neatneſs, and rich in the variety it contained; not of tender exotics, for his abilities would not allow the indulgence of ſtoves and conſervatories, but of indigenous plants; having from time to time at different ſeaſons introduced into it moſt of the rare plants of the environs.

Not content with ſeeing them in the growing ſtate, he exerciſed himſelf in drawing and painting a great number of the Engliſh plants, having left two 4to volumes under the title of Botanologia, or a Deſcription of Britiſh Plants. The firſt contains the figures and deſcriptions of 204 Engliſh plants, pp. 479, begun in the year 1728; the ſecond the figures and deſcriptions of 270, begun about the year 1738. In the deſcriptions he introduces the etymology of the names, the claſs, according to Ray, and ſubjoins an account of the virtues from the ſame author, or ſuch others as his moderate collection of books enabled him to conſult. Theſe productions are not mentioned as exhibiting any remarkable ſkill, conſidered as drawings, for in this point they are deficient; but as proofs of his ſtrong taſte for the ſtudy, and his diligence in the purſuit of it.

It was not to Botany alone that he confined his exertions: Zoology, as has been before noticed, in all its branches, engaged his attention; and more eſpecially the ornithological ſubjects. With the Engliſh birds of the neighbourhood he was well acquainted, and delighted in exhibiting them with his pencil. He left one volume, in 4to, pp. 378, of zoological papers, containing upwards of 200 drawings of various animals in each claſs, copied from a variety of ſources, with the deſcriptions annexed, and miſcellaneous information relating to them, extracted from various authors. As he wrote a very ſmall hand, and in very cloſe lines, all theſe volumes contain an extraordinary quantity of matter. Late in life he began a Hortus Siccus, chiefly of Engliſh plants. It conſiſts of two volumes, containing near 1000 ſpecies.

The works above mentioned comprehend almoſt wholly materials extracted from books. He left, however, ſeveral compoſitions, both in proſe and verſe, on a variety of ſubjects; and, I believe, communicated ſeveral papers to the Gentleman's Magazine; but he could never be prevailed upon to diſcloſe them. He ſtrictly enjoined, that theſe manuſcripts ſhould be deſtroyed; and this his requeſt was faithfully, though reluctantly, complied with after his deceaſe.

His parents were Diſſenters, and he himſelf was educated in the principles of Calviniſm; having, however, been induced in his younger days to read no ſmall portion of polemical divinity, he was early led to diveſt himſelf of the peculiar doctrines of that ſect; and, without deviating into any laxity of opinion that ſhook his faith in revelation, he imbibed a liberality of thinking on religious ſubjects, which taught him to view with equal candour good men of all perſuaſions.

A regular uſe of exerciſe, joined to the ſtricteſt habits of temperance, contributed to ſecure to him an uniformly good ſtate of health, which he enjoyed throughout the greater part of his life. But it began to decline in the autumn of 1759, and he died Feb. 10, 1760.

Mr. Tomlinſon was never married. He was the youngeſt of three ſons, the two elder having died, the one in his childhood, and the other at the age of 24 without iſſue.

Thoſe who remember and intimately knew the ſubject of this memoir will not, it is believed, judge it otherwiſe than impartial; though, confeſſedly, a tribute from his neareſt relative; one who reveres his memory with the trueſt affection, who through the early ſtage of life received from him, as from a father, the genuine dictates of wiſdom, virtue, and religion; all of which were truly exemplified in his own conduct throughout the whole of life."

Dr. RICHARD PULTENEY was born at Loughborough in 1730; but his name does not appear in the pariſh regiſter (which I have ſearched), as his parents were of the perſuaſion called Old Anabaptiſts, and regular attenders at the Shepeſhed meeting-houſe. His father was a taylor, in eaſy circumſtances; having houſes and lands, which the ſon inherited, and held till his death. After an education in the old free-ſchool of his native town, young Pulteney was apprenticed to Mr. Harris, at that time an apothecary at Loughborough, who afterwards removed to Mountſorell. During his apprenticeſhip he was accounted a handſome young man, very good tempered, remarkably neat in his dreſs, and always ſeemed deſirous of getting forward in the world. He firſt entered into buſineſs[1] on his own account, as a ſurgeon and apothecary, in the town of Leiceſter; where he ſaved ſome money, which he regulary inveſted in the public funds. On taking the degree of doctor of phyſic at Edinburgh, which he did in a way ſingularly honourable to himſelf, in 1764, he was admitted an extra licentiate of the Royal College of Phyſicians of London, and F.R.S. and commenced practice as a phyſician at Blandford in Dorſetſhire, where he accumulated, with unuſual reſpect, a conſiderable fortune; and died of a peripneumony, Oct. 12, 1801, whilſt this ſheet was preparing for the preſs, after having actually reviſed the two preceding biographical articles, which he had contributed. Dr. P. had for nearly 50 years been a valuable botanical correſpondent to the Gentleman's Magazine. See a ſeries of his letters on the poiſonous plants of this country, vol. XXV. pp. 69, 104, 159, 210, 270, 393, 450, 491; his diſſertation upon Fungi in general, and concerning the poiſonous faculty of ſome ſpecies in particular, ibid. pp. 542, 585; his "Abſtract of a Latin Treatiſe, publiſhed by Linnæus, and entitled Somnus Plantarum," vol. "Hiſtorical and biographical Sketches of the Progreſs of Botany in England, from its Origin to the Introduction of the Linnæan Syſtem, 1790," 2 vols. 8vo. In 1795 he reviſed and conſiderably improved his Account of the Leiceſterſhire Plants, inſerted in the firſt volume of this Hiſtory. He communicated to the ſecond edition of Mr. Hutchins's Hiſtory of Dorſet, 1799, a catalogue of birds, ſhells, and plants, obſerved in Dorſetſhire; and, during his laſt illneſs, had under reviſal a plate of Dorſetſhire foſſils communicated by himſelf.

The following character of Dr. Pulteney, written by Dr. J. Reed, phyſician in Eaſt-ſtreet, Red Lion Square, was inſerted as a tribute of reſpect to his memory in the Weekly Entertainer, of Monday, January 18, 1802, printed at Sherborne, p. 44: "His works in natural hiſtory were neither numerous, or of an unwieldy magnitude; but they were the valuable reſult of laborious and long-continued reſearch, and evidenced a mind ſtimulated by an ardent paſſion for the purſuit of phyſical ſcience; and that was, in an eminent degree, adapted, both by original genius and habitual activity, for promoting its diffuſion and advancement amongſt mankind. The conſcientious, attentive, and cautious manner in which, during a long, uſeful, and highly reputable career, he diſcharged the important duties of a moſt awfully reſponſible profeſſion, excited and permanently ſecured to him the confidence and regard of all who from their local reſidence were ſo fortunate as to be within convenient reach of his medical aſſiſtance and advice. A young phyſician might have learned equally from the excellence of his precepts, and the purity of his example. Dr. Pulteney's uncommon merit was not reſtricted to the practice of phyſic, or to the proſecution of ſcience; it ſhone equally conſpicuous in every ſcene and department of his life. The moſt amiable, at leaſt, if not the moſt ſplendid, part of his character was unfolded in ſocial, and more eſpecial in domeſtic and familiar intercourſe. No perſon could be in his company without, for the time, being rendered not only the happier, but alſo the wiſer and the better for it. By the mild gaiety, and well-regulated playfulneſs of his fancy, he amuſed and delighted; he inſtructed by the ſolidity of his judgement; and there was a commanding ſomething in his preſence and demeanour, which, even from the hearts of the moſt obdurately depraved, could not fail to extort at leaſt a temporary veneration for virtue. That for ſo conſiderable a portion of his long life, a man of Dr. Pulteney's ſuperior caſt, ſhould have exiſted in a ſtate of almoſt complete exile from the intellectual world, and ſo long have ſubmitted to the drearineſs and mental ſolitude of an obſcure provincial ſituation, muſt afford no ſmall matter of wonder and of regret to thoſe who are capable of appreciating the value of extraordinary talents, or of enjoying the exerciſe and exhibition of them, in an improved and highly cultivated ſociety."

He was buried at Langton near Blandford, where a monument is to be erected to him.

His hortus ſiccus and collections of other ſubjects of Natural Hiſtory he has bequeathed to the Linnæan Society, inſtituted in 1788; and a number of legacies among philoſophical, medical, and charitable inſtitutions, and to ſeveral individuals reſpectable for their talents and attainments. His Botanical MSS. are given to his friend Dr. Maton; who has undertaken to publiſh a new edition of the "View of the Writings of Linnæus," from his lateſt corrections; to which will be prefixed ſome memoirs of Dr. Pulteney, with an original portrait.

His valuable library, including a matchleſs collection of books on botanical ſubjects, was ſold, by Meſſrs. Leigh and Sotheby, April 26—May 3, 1802.

KEGWORTH,

antiently written Cogeworðe, is a conſiderable village in the North angle of the ſhire, on the borders of Nottinghamſhire and Derbyſhire, on the high road, from London to Mancheſter; 6 miles North-weſt-weſt from Loughborough; 11 from Derby; 115 miles from London. It is bounded by Lockington on the North; by the river Soar on the Eaſt; by Long Whatton on the South; and by Diſeworth on the Weſt; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Akeley.

"The ſoil," ſays Mr. Burton, "is exceeding fruitful either for corn or graſs, and affordeth much pleaſure and delight;" and Mr. Wyrley adds, "Kegworth is pleaſantly placed Southward of the Trent, and watered with the river Soar, which, paſſing by Ratcliffe in Nottinghamſhire, preſently drowneth himſelf in the Trent."

The appearance of the country is as pleaſant as can be imagined, being hills and fertile valleys: and below the town runs the Soar, which is navigable from Loughborough to the Trent. The town ſtands on a kind of free-ſtone rock.

Fifteen ploughlands in Cogeƿoꞃðe (the Saxon ð being uſually miſtaken for a ꝺ by the Saxon tranſcribers), which in the time of king Edward had been held by earl Harold (who was after king of England, and was ſlain at the battle of Haſtings by William duke of Normandy), were at the general ſurvey held by Robert under earl Hugo, as parcel of his manor of Loughborough. He had there five ploughs in the demeſne, with one bondman and two bondwomen; and twenty-five villans, with thirteen bordars, had ten ploughs[1]. Earl Hugo had alſo ſix houſes in the borough of Leiceſter belonging to Kegworth[2].

In the reign of king Henry II. this lordſhip was the property of William Fitz Patrick[3], who married the heireſs of one moiety of the barony of Malpas in Cheſhire (the other moiety of which belonged to Gilbert Clark); and from this marriage he probably alſo acquired Kegworth; for both Patrick and Clark occur in a deed about the time of Henry II; by which William Patrick gave a rent out of his mill of Sutton ſuper Soar to the priory of Calk. He, with the earl of Cheſter and Haſtulph de Hillario, &c. took part with the young king againſt Henry II.[4]

"Sciant preſentes & futuri, quod ego Robertus Patricius, dominus de Kegworth, conceſſi, &c. Deo & Sancte Trinitatis eccleſie de Rependon, & eccleſie Sancti Egidii de Calc, & priori & canonicis in eiſdem Deo ſervientibus, pro ſalute anime mee, totam terram quam habuit de feodo meo in villis de Sutton & Boninton, de dono Roberti de Nottingham, & de dono Thome Baſſett, & de dono Thome Maillard, &c. ſalvis mihi & heredibus meis ſcutagio quando currit ſecundum conſiderationem regni Anglie, & wardâ de Maupas tempore pacis & guerre, ſecundum portionem terrarum quas tenent, &c.; & quod quieti ſint a ſectâ curie mee & heredum meorum. His teſtibus: Roberto de Meinell, Willielmo de Haweſlade, Roberto filio Yvonis, Philippo & Galfrido de Kynaſton, Willielmo filio Stephani de eadem villâ, Johanne le Vygraes de Weſtele, Willielmo de Hertiſhorn, & aliis[5]."

In 1216, the following deed occurs,

"Hec eſt conventio facta inter priorem & conventum de Repindon ex unâ parte, & dominum Willielmum Patric[5] de Keggworth ex alterâ parte, quod cum dicti prior & conventus convenirent dictum Willielmum in capitulo de Acle, de annuo redditûs 6 s̄.; idem Willielmus comparuit in capitulo, coram magiſtro Roberto de Willeby, tunc officiale Leic', & domino Gilberto vicario de Turkedeſton, tunc decano, & diligenter confeſſ' dictum redd', &c. Teſtibus; Johanne Maylord, Willielmo de Strevig', Galfrido de Melton, Stephano de Sikenhale[6]."

In 1230, Gilbert lord Segrave, having married Annabella the daughter and coheir of Robert de Chacombe, procured a grant, or rather a confirmation (for Stephen his father had it) from Simon de Montfort earl of Leiceſter, of the whole town of Kegworth[7].

In the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about the year 1240, Kegworth is deſcribed as conſiſting of ſix ploughlands; and in the "Feoda Domini Regis" of that year is entered, "In Kegworth dim' feodum, quod Robertus Patricius tenet de domino rege in capite."

In the Segrave Chartulary, the following deeds are noticed relative to Kegworth, which is there ſtated to be a member of Diſeworth[8].

1. A grant from Ranulph earl of Cheſter to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of all his land in Kegworth, within the fee of Robert Fitz Nigell; namely, the ſervice of eight virgates of land in that vill, with the appurtenances, inter alia, except the advowſon of the church; to be held of the ſaid earl and his heirs, by ſuch foreign ſervice as belonged to the lord; which was 3*s*. wherever one knight's fee paid 20*s*. for ſcutage.

2. A quit-claim from William de Hauſtede, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, of all his right in the ſaid land, which is there called two ploughlands in Kegworth inter alia.

3. A grant, from Ranulph earl of Cheſter, to Ralph de Vernon, clerk, of the whole church of Kegworth, with the appurtenances, to be held in pure and perpetual alms.

4. A grant, from the ſaid earl, to Richard de Kegworth, of a moiety of the ſaid church, which the aforeſaid Ralph had conveyed to the ſame Richard, to be held agreeably to the grant of the ſaid Ralph.

5. A grant of the ſaid earl, to Stephen de Segrave, of the advowſon of the ſaid church, which belonged to the land of Robert Fitz Nigell in that vill; the ſaid land and advowſon to be held of him and his heirs, in augmentation of his tenement in Segrave, by the ſervice of a fourth part of a knight's fee.

6. A confirmation by king Henry, inter alia, of the aforeſaid advowſon.

7. A permiſſion, from the ſaid earl, to Richard de Kegworth, to have Stephen de Segrave for his patron.

8. A grant, from William Patryk, to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of the homage and ſervice of Peter Hoſtriciarius and his heirs, for one virgate of land in Kegworth, for which he had been accuſtomed to pay 6*d*. a year to the ſaid William for foreign ſervice; together with the advowſon of a moiety of the church of Kegworth; to be held of the ſaid William and his heirs by the ſervice of a pair of white gloves at Eaſter, in lieu of all other ſervice.

9. A charter, from the ſaid William, to Ralph de Verdun, rector of the church, de eſſendo intendens to the ſaid Stephen.

10. A charter, from the ſaid Ralph, to the rector of the church, that he ſhould receive the ſaid Stephen as his patron.

11. A grant from Robert Patrick, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, of one bovate of land in Kegworth, with a moiety of a toft and croft adjoining, to be held by homage and foreign ſervice.

12. A quit-claim from Ranulph earl of Cheſter and Lincoln, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, and to their homagers reſident on the above-mentioned two ploughlands, and one bovate of his fee in Kegworth, inter

13. A grant from Simon de Montfort, earl of Leiceſter, to Gilbert ſon of Stephen Segrave, and his heirs, of all the vill of Kegworth, with the appurtenances, except Thomas de Cemeterio and his lord, namely, half a virgate and its ſervice, to be held of the ſaid Thomas by the ſervice of one ſore hawk, or one mark, at Michaelmas, in lieu of all other ſervice.

14. A confirmation from king Henry III. to the ſaid Gilbert and his heirs, of all the ſaid vill, with its appurtenances, except as above excepted.

15. Duplicate of a fine, between William de Hawſtede petent, and Gilbert de Segrave tenant, of a moiety of the advowſon of the church of Kegworth, granted to the ſaid Gilbert and his heirs, by the ſervice of a pair of white gloves yearly at Eaſter, in lieu of all other ſervice.

16. A quit-claim, from Peter le Oſtrier, to the ſaid Gilbert and his heirs, of one bovate of land in Kegworth, which he held of William Patrick, and of his right of depaſturing four animals in the paſture of the ſaid Gilbert.

17. A quit-claim from Robert de Keneſton, to Nicholas de Segrave and his heirs, of the rent of one halfpenny from Peter en le Voro, one halfpenny from Walter de Lacy, one halfpenny from Richard Gamel, one farthing from William ſon of Richard Gamel, one farthing from Thomas Gamel, one halfpenny from Richard Roiſte, one penny from the widow Mabel, one penny from Robert de Athelandeſhe, one halfpenny from Roger ſon of the Smith, one farthing from William Nemoy, one halfpenny from Richard le Wys, and one halfpenny from John the ſon of Cecilia; with their ſeveral homages, ſervices, and eſcheats, for the land which they held of the fee of the ſaid Nicholas; the whole to be held freely.

18. A quit-claim from Maud relict of Peter le Hauker, of all her right of dowry in one virgate of land in Kegworth, made to the ſaid Nicholas de Segrave and his heirs.

19. A grant from Roger ſon of Peter le Hanker, to the ſaid Nicholas and his heirs, of the ſame virgate of land, with the appurtenances, and of paſture for three animals, in the free paſture of William Patric.

30. A grant from the prioreſs and convent of Langley, to Nicholas de Segrave and his heirs, of 27*s*. rent to be paid yearly at Eaſter and Michaelmas, for 30 acres in the aſſart of Kegworth wood[1].

In the Itinerary of 1280, Kegworth and Iſley Walton anſwered collectively as one vill.

May 16, 1289, king Edward I. granted to Robert de Hauſted and Margery his wife, and their heirs, a market on Tueſdays; and two fairs, viz. one on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Margaret the Virgin; and the other, on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Andrew the Apoſtle, at Kegworth. "Hiis teſtibus; venerabilibus patribus J. Cantuar' archiep', totius Anglie primate; R. Bath & Wells; R. Dunelm; & Tho. Meneven. Epiſcopis; Edmundo, fratre noſtro; Willielmo de Valencia, avunculo noſtro; Gilb' de Clare, comite Glouc' & Hertford; Edmund, com' Cornub'; Henr' de Lacy, com' Linc'; Rogero le Bigod, com' Norf', & mareſcallo Anglie; Humf' de Bohun, com' Heref' & Eſſex; Ottone de Grandiſono; Petro de Chaumpnent; & aliis. Dat' per manum noſtram, apud Weſtm', xvi die Maii[2]."

Hugh de Sutton, by marriage with Elizabeth daughter and heir to William Patrick, obtained a moiety of the manor of Malpas[3]; and in 1307 it was found that Richard de Sutton, ſon of Hugh, held the manor of Kegworth, parcel of the inheritance of Iſabel his wife, daughter and ſole heir of Rotberie ſon of Griffin; and that it was held of the king in capite, but by what ſervice they knew not[4].

In 1315, it was found that Henry de Sutton, parſon of the church of Leke, left £10. and 12 oaks, and divers other matters, towards the repair of Kegworth bridge; which was performed by eſpecial licence from the king[5].

Between the years 1316 and 1318, three different writs occur, concerning the "pontagium pro ponte & villâ de Kegworth[6]."

In 1321, it was found that Robert de Hauſted, ſenior, deceaſed, and Margery his wife, held a certain manor in Kegworth of the earl of Arundel, by the ſervice of a quarter of a knight's fee; and that Robert Hauſted, his ſon, was the next heir of the aforeſaid Robert and Margery[7].

In 1325, it was found that John de Segrave, deceaſed, and Chriſtiana his wife, held 32*s*. 4*d*. rent of the free tenants in Kegworth; alſo the advowſon of the church there; and that John de Segrave (ſon and heir of Stephen de Segrave, couſin of the aforeſaid John de Segrave, ſenior) was his next heir[8].

In 1327, it was found that Henry de Nottingham, deceaſed, held £8. 3*s*. 8*d*. rent, ariſing out of divers free tenements in Kegworth, payable at Hockeday and Michaelmas; which rents he held of Agnes de Sutton, lady of Kegworth, by knight's ſervice and 10½*d*. rent, to be paid at the terms aforeſaid; alſo that he held 10*s*. rent, ariſing out of divers tenements in Kegworth, and Kingſton, co. Nottingham, of the prior of Durham, and ſir Robert de Hauſted, by knight's ſervice and 8*d*. rent at the terms aforeſaid[9].

In 1346, Robert Patrick (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 10*s*. for a quarter of one knight's fee in Kegworth, parcel of the fee of Cheſter and Huntingdon[10].

In 1353, it was found that John de Segrave, deceaſed, held the advowſon of the church of Kegworth[11].

In 1355, William de Sutton, parſon of Whitwell, releaſed all his right in the manor of Kegworth, which Robert de Sutton, brother of the ſaid William, ſometime held, to Henry Greene and his heirs[12].

In 1369, it was found that ſir Henry Greene, knt. one of the juſtices of the common pleas, deceaſed, held the manor of Kegworth of the earl of Cheſter, by knight's ſervice; and that John Greene, his ſon and heir, was then aged 25 years[13].

"This Judge Greene," ſays Mr. Burton, "is buried in Boughton pariſh in Northampton; where, upon a monument, his proportion is cut in ſtone, lying in a ſhort gown, and a ſerjeant's coif on his head[14].

In 1391, it was found that ſir Thomas Greene, knt. long before he died, enfeoffed William Thorning, Richard Dolleſon, parſon of Norton, and others, in the manor of Kegworth; and that Thomas Green was his ſon and heir[15].

In 1399, it was found that Thomas Mowbray, late duke of Norfolk, was ſeiſed of the advowſon of the church of Kegworth, value £10.[16]

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Kegworth was rated at £5. 2*s*.; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 17*s*. 4*d*.; Walton Iſley, £1. 8*s*. 6*d*.; and 8*s*. 10*d*. abated.

In 1417, it was found that Thomas Greene, knt. died ſeiſed of the manor of Kegworth, together with one market there held on Tueſdays; and that they were held of the king, as of his principality of the honour of Cheſter, by knight's ſervice[17].

The day before the death of ſir Thomas Greene, knt. John Vampage, . . . Wolaſhall, William Ralegh, John Rous, Thomas Throckmorton, and John Throckmorton, eſqrs. were ſeiſed of the manor of Kegworth, with the appurtenances; and, being ſo ſeiſed thereof, by a certain feoffment, ſealed with their ſeals, and bearing date in 1432, they gave the ſame to Thomas Greene, eſq. and to Thomas Greene, his ſon, who were afterward ſucceſſively ſeiſed thereof; and held it of the king, as of his honour of Cheſter, by the ſervice of a third part of one knight's fee[18].

Thomas Greene, died without iſſue, 22 Hen. VIII.

Anne, ſecond wife to ſir Nicholas Vaux, who, April 27, 1554, was created baron Vaux of Harrowden[1].

Joan, died without iſſue.

In 1432, it was found that John duke of Norfolk died ſeiſed of the advowſon of the church of Kegworth[2].

In 1464, it was found, that ſir Thomas Greene, knt. died ſeiſed of the manor of Kegworth under the laſt-mentioned feoffment; leaving iſſue Maud, the wife of ſir Thomas Parre, of Kendall, knt. and Anne, married to Nicholas firſt lord Vaux of Harrowden, his daughters and coheireſſes[3]; and in the diviſion of their father's property, this lordſhip fell to the ſhare of Maud.

In 1483, after the death of Henry Stafford duke of Buckingham, who was beheaded the ſame year at Saliſbury, the king gave to ſir Gervaſe Clifton, knt. of Clifton, co. Nottingham, all the lands which belonged to the ſaid Henry in Kegworth and Ratcliff upon Soar[4].

In 1506, it was found that . . . . . Higford died ſeiſed of the manor of Kegworth, and that it was held of the king in capite by knight's ſervice[5].

By an inquiſition taken at Leiceſter, Jan. 22, 1518, before John Anderne, eſcheator, it was found that John Parre died ſeiſed of five meſſuages, 40 acres of land, four acres of meadow, and ſix acres of paſture, with the appurtenances, in Kegworth; that they were held of Maud Parre, as of her manor of Kegworth; that the ſaid Thomas died Nov. 12 laſt; and that William Parre was his ſon and heir, and then aged ſix years and upwards[6].

Maud Parre held this manor in copartition; and died ſeiſed of it Sept. 1, 1532, William Parre, her ſon and heir, being then 20 years of age[7]; which William was firſt created in 1540 baron Parre of Kendall; afterwards, in 1544, was advanced to the title of earl of Eſſex, in right of Anne his wife, daughter and heir of Henry Bourchier earl of Eſſex; and laſtly, in 1547, was created marquis of Northampton.

Nov. 10, 1540, the ſaid marquis, by the name of William lord Parre, ſon and heir of ſir Thomas Parre, deceaſed, gave to Robert Palmer, gent. LL. B. the office of bailiff of the aforeſaid manor; and Nov. 18, 1542, by the ſame name, gave him an annuity; and 4 July, 1544, by the name of William earl of Eſſex, gave him the office of general ſupervisor and receiver of all his lands, in the counties of Leiceſter, Nottingham, Lincoln, Derby, Stafford, York, Weſtmoreland, and Lancaſter[8].

William Parre marquis of Northampton died Oct. 28, 1570, ſ. p. poſſeſſed of this manor, and was buried at Warwick; after whoſe death (as appears by the inquiſition) it reverted to the crown; the ſaid marquis having long before paſſed the whole manor of Kegworth, in com' Leic' & Nott', cum ſuis juribus & membris; and dying without any legitimate heir[9].

In 1564, there were 68 families in Kegworth, and 7 in Iſley Walton.

In 1575, the free-ſchool at Kegworth was eſtabliſhed under the following decree:

"Michaelmas Term, 17 Eliz. Nov. 8.

"Leiceſterſhire. Memorandum, that whereas certain lands and tenements, parcel of the manor of Kegworth, in the county of Leiceſter, of the yearly rent of £4. 4*s*; and alſo one hermitage, with the appurtenances, in Kegworth aforeſaid, of the yearly rent of £4. 7*s*.; and alſo certain lands and tenements, called Dragwell Rents, ſometime uſed to the maintenance of a prieſt, called a "Lady Maſs Prieſt," ſerving in the church of Kegworth aforeſaid, of the yearly rent of 2*s*. and certain lands uſed to the maintenance of incenſe in the church of Kegworth aforeſaid, of 6*d*.; amounting in the whole to the ſum of £8. 13*s*. 6*d*. are found and certified to be concealed and wrongfully detained from our ſovereign lady the queen's majeſty that now is, by a ſurvey taken of the premiſes, by Edmund Hunt, gentleman, the queen's majeſty's receiver of the ſaid county of Leiceſter, and William Raven, gentleman, her grace's ſurveyor of the ſaid county, by virtue of a commiſſion to them and others directed, out of her Highneſs' court of Exchequer at Weſtminſter, bearing date the 6th day of February, in the 17th year of her Highneſs' reign, as by the records of the ſaid court of Exchequer may plainly appear; and where alſo it appeareth, by certificate under the hand of the auditor of the ſaid county of Leiceſter, that the rents and profits of the ſaid lands called Dragwell Rents, and the moors in Kegworth aforeſaid, have been heretofore long ſince employed and beſtowed to the maintenance of a ſchoolmaſter aforeſaid; and for that the ſituation of the place itſelf is thought to be very apt and convenient for ſuch purpoſe, and alſo ſomewhat far of and diſtant from any other free-ſchool, by reaſon whereof the children in the county thereabouts remain utterly void of good education and learning: It is therefore this 8th day of November, in the 17th year of the reign of our Sovereign Lady the Queen's Majeſty, ordered and decreed, by the right honourable William lord Burghley, lord high treaſurer of England, ſir Walter Mildmay, knight, chancellor and under-treaſurer of her Highneſs' Court of Exchequer, and the barons of the ſame Court, for the maintaining, eſtabliſhing, and confirming of a free-ſchool in Kegworth aforeſaid; that the ſaid yearly rent and ſum of £8. 13*s*. 6*d*. ſhall be allowed and paid to a ſufficient ſchool-maſter, that ſhall give his perſonal attendance, and employ his travail, for the good inſtruction and education of ſcholars in the ſaid ſchool; the ſaid ſchool-maſter to be named and appointed from time to time, and as often as occaſion ſhall ſerve, by the maſter of Chriſt's College in Cambridge for the time being; and further, that the ſaid yearly rent of £8. 13*s.* 6*d.* ſhall be paid, from time to time, to the ſaid ſchool-maſter, by the receiver or bailiff of the ſaid lands, at two ſeveral times of the year; that is to ſay, at the feaſt of the Annunciation of our Lady the Virgin, and St. Michael the Archangel, by even portions; and that the ſaid ſchool at Kegworth aforeſaid ſhall be continued, ratified, and eſtabliſhed; and the ſaid ſtipend, or yearly rent of £8. 13*s.* 6*d.* by this order and decree therefore appointed as aboveſaid, to endure until the Queen's Majeſty or this court of Exchequer ſhall otherwiſe alter, order, or tranſpoſe the ſame, and no longer; and that this preſent order, or the enrolment thereof, ſhall be a ſufficient warrant and diſcharge, as well to the receiver or bailiff of the ſaid rents for the time being, as to the auditor of the ſaid county, and all other officers, for allowing and paying the ſaid yearly rent without any further or other warrant[1]."

[1] "Sir Nicholas Vaux was educated at Oxford, and was diſtinguiſhed by his talents as a poet and hiſtorian. At the marriage of prince Arthur in the 17th year of Henry VII. he wore a purple velvet gown plaited with maſſy gold, valued at a thouſand pounds, and a collar of SS. which weighed eight hundred pounds in nobles. He was of a generous, liberal, feſtive diſpoſition, and equally fitted for the camp or the court. Many poetical pieces aſcribed to him are printed in the Paradiſe of dainty Devices, 4to, London, 1678. By his laſt will he directed his body, if he died in Northamptonſhire, to be buried at Harwedon; if in London, at the Black Friers; and if at Guiſnes, at the church there: appointing a chauntry for one prieſt in Harrowden church, to ſing maſs for his ſoul, his two wives and children, for his father, mother, grandfather, and other anceſtors, and that £100. ſhould be diſtributed among prieſts, clerks, and the poor at his funeral." In 1584, a leaſe of the ſite of the manor of Kegworth, with the fiſhery, was granted for 21 years, to John Gee, at an annual rent of £10. At the ſame time lands and tenements in Kegworth were let to Chriſtopher Cowper and others, for 21 years, at the yearly rent of £4. 1*s.* 4*d.*;—other lands and tenements to Francis Major and others, for 21 years, at the yearly rent of £4. 15*s.*;—and certain lands and tenements called Dragwell Rents, and a hermitage at Kegworth, to John Howford, Margaret Howford, and Anne their daughter, for three lives; at the rent of £4. 2*s.* 6*d.*[2]

About 1590, Mr. Wyrley ſays, "John Palmer, eſq. hath a houſe ſweetly ſeated on the Weſt bank of Soar, with a fine proſpect to the meadows."

In 1604, the following order was iſſued:

"Eaſter Term, 2 James I. May 10.

"Leiceſterſhire. Whereas humble ſuit hath been made unto this honourable Court, this preſent term, by the inhabitants of the town of Kegworth, in the county of Leiceſter, for the continuing of the payment of the yearly ſtipend and ſum of £8. 13*s.* 6*d.* to the maſter of the free-ſchool of Kegworth for the time being, which hath been yearly paid unto the precedent ſchoolmaſters there, from time to time, by virtue of an order made in this Court the 8th day of November, in the 17th year of the reign of our late Sovereign Lady Elizabeth, reciting, 'That whereas certain lands, &c.' (as above): Now, for that it appeareth that the decree formerly made for the payment of the ſaid rent of £8. 13*s.* 6*d.* was granted upon good conſideration, and to a good uſe, and hath been long time, for many years together, well and profitably employed to the good of all the youth of the ſaid town and country thereabouts; and the ſame is confirmed both by the certificate of the auditor of the ſaid county, and by other good and ſufficient teſtimony: For the continuing of the ſaid ſtipend, it is therefore ordered and decreed, by the right honourable Thomas earl of Dorſet, lord high treaſurer of England, ſir William Peryam, knight, lord chief baron, and the reſt of the barons, that the ſaid former decree be ratified and confirmed, and do ſtand in full force and virtue; and that the ſaid rent of £8. 13*s.* 6*d.* iſſuing out of the land mentioned in the ſaid decree, be likewiſe paid unto the ſaid ſchool-maſter of Kegworth aforeſaid, for the time being, for the uſes and purpoſes expreſſed in the ſaid decree, in ſuch manner and form as it hath formerly been, and continued to be payable ever ſince the making of the ſaid decree, according to the true meaning thereof, until the King's Highneſs or this Court of Exchequer ſhall otherwiſe order, alter, or tranſpoſe the ſame, as in the former decree is expreſſed; and that this order, or the enrolment thereof, ſhall be a ſufficient warrant and diſcharge, as well to the receiver or bailiff of the ſaid rents, for the time being, as to the auditor of the ſaid county, and all other officers, for allowing and paying the ſaid yearly rent of £8. 13*s.* 6*d.* without any further or other warrant[3]."

25 June, 1609. Indenture between Francis Morris of the city of Weſtminſter, eſq. and Francis Philips of London, gent. of the one part; and Chriſtopher Walton, of Kegworth, in the county of Leiceſter, gent. of the other part; the ſaid Francis Morris and Francis Phillips, in conſideration of a ſum of money (not mentioned how much) to them paid by the ſaid Chriſtopher Walton, did grant, bargain, ſell, and confirm, unto the ſaid Chriſtopher, his heirs and aſſigns, all thoſe tenements, meſſuages, and cottages, with their appurtenances, ſituate in Kegworth aforeſaid, and then or late in the ſeveral occupations of Thomas Litherland, W. Shaw, W. Barrow, J. Townſhend, W. Strete, J. Uſten, E. Squire, Marg. Dutton, Alice Smith, T. Smith, J. Morris, W. Carter, and Kath. Callis, or their aſſigns, and called or known by the name or names of The Dragwell rents, and thentofore given for the maintenance of a prieſt, called "A Lady Maſſe Prieſt," to celebrate in the church of Kegworth; and all that hermitage, with its appendages, called or known by the name of The Hermitage, ſituate and being in Kegworth aforeſaid, and then or late in the occupation of Robert Palmer, or his aſſigns; alſo all thoſe lands and paſtures called or known by the name or names of The Sence Acre, lying and being in Kegworth aforeſaid, and then or late in the occupation of John Hawford, or his aſſigns, and thentofore given for the ſupport of the incence (pro manuten' incenſûs) to be uſed in the church of Kegworth aforeſaid; and which ſaid premiſes were then extended together at the annual rent or value of £4. 6*s.* 6*d.* and were granted (inter alia) to the ſaid Morice and Philips by the king's letters patents dated at Weſtminſter the 24th day of May then laſt paſt; to hold the ſame unto and to the uſe of the ſaid Chriſtopher Walton, his heirs and aſſigns for ever, of the king, his heirs and ſucceſſors, as of the manor of Eaſt Greenwich in Kent, by fealty only, and in free and common ſocage; paying therefore yearly to the king, &c. the ſeveral rents for different parts of the ſaid premiſes therein partly mentioned, but too long and tedious to be copied[4].

In a ſubſidy of 1627, is this entry:

"Kegworth. Sir Henry Morris, knt. in terris £3."

The freeholders here in 1630 were, Lawrence Hartſhorne, John Smith, Robert Jowell, John Olderſhaw, William Randen, William Olderſhaw, Robert Sutton.

Sir Harry Mackworth, of Normanton in Rutland, bart. died ſeiſed of lands here Aug. 24, 1646[5].

In 1655, there was collected in Kegworth, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of £2. 16*s.*; and at Iſley Walton, 4*s.* 4*d*

In 1667, Richard Gibſon was committed to priſon for tithes, and detained there ſeveral years, at the ſuit of Dr. Honywood, then rector of Kegworth[6].

The ſchool-houſe of Kegworth ſtands in the church-yard, and ought to be kept in repair by the churchwardens at the town charge. In the year 1675, for want of due and timely repairing, it was much gone to decay, and in danger of falling; and was then repaired by the voluntary contribution of ſeveral perſons, at the requeſt and by the procurement of the then ſchool-maſter and curate of Kegworth. The chambers over it, together with the chimney, for the better accommodation of the maſter and ſcholars, were then built. The money given towards it was £29. 19*s.* 6*d.* of which Dr. Honywood, gave £20.; the reſt by ſeveral of the inhabitants of Kegworth. The whole charge of the repairs, £34. 5*s.* 10*d.* The overplus, being £4. 12*s.* 4*d.* was paid by the then curate.

[3] I ſhould have been glad to have here ſubjoined (had I known where to obtain it) a terrier of theſe lands and tenements. The ſtipend of £8. 13*s.* 6*d.* is very inadequate. The lands, &c. muſt now be let for a much greater ſum. Q. How is the ſurplus diſpoſed of?

The preſent market was eſtabliſhed in 1699.

"His Majeſty has been graciouſly pleaſed, by his letters patent under the great ſeal, to grant to William Bainbrigge, eſq. a market in the town of Kegworth, in Leiceſterſhire, upon Wedneſday in every week, for buying and ſelling all manner of goods; and two fairs yearly; one to be held upon every Monday and Tueſday in Eaſter Week, and the other on the 29th and 30th days of September, for buying and ſelling of corn, cattle, and all manner of goods and merchandize whatſoever[5]."

"July 8, 1756, ſome labourers, employed by the pariſhioners of Kegworth in Leiceſterſhire, to get ſome gravel in a cloſe near the high road, in order to mend the ſame, were this day agreeably ſurprized with the ſight of a large earthen veſſel, about two feet below the ſurface, which might contain about two gallons. This pot all aſſiſted in removing to the bankſide, big with the expectation of finding a treaſure ſuppoſed to be hid in the civil wars; but the pot, as ſoon as landed, dropped immediately to pieces, and, inſtead of exhibiting pieces of gold and ſilver, nothing was to be ſeen but ſmall human bones, intermixed with a black kind of earth. This affair ſoon brought together a number of perſons; whoſe attention was ſoon diverted by the diſcovery of another pot, and preſently after nine other veſſels, of different dimenſions and forms, all containing the bones of children. They were all found placed in a ſtreight line within an inch of each another; and, on being removed out of their places, dropped into a thouſand pieces. This ſpot was probably the burying-place of the Romans, who had a legion ſtationed in theſe parts[6]."

In 1778, an act was paſſed for incloſing, within the pariſh of Kegworth, ſeveral open arable fields, open meadows, common paſtures, and common grounds, containing about 2000 acres; in which the owners of meſſuages, cottages, or lands, within the ſaid pariſh, are deſcribed as having a right of common paſtures and common grounds, and at certain ſeaſons of the year, upon the ſaid open arable fields and meadows; Mary Bainbrigge and Elizabeth Bainbrigge, ſpinſters, as ladies of the manor of Kegworth; the maſter, fellows, and ſcholars of Chriſt's College, in Cambridge (connectedly with Frederick-Auguſtus earl of Berkeley, under certain reſtrictions), as patrons of the rectory of Kegworth; the Rev. John Willey, clerk, as rector, and entitled to certain glebe-lands and common right in the ſaid open grounds, and to all the great tithes ariſing within the pariſh of Kegworth; the maſter, fellows, and ſcholars of Chriſt's College, Cambridge, entitled to certain lands in the ſaid pariſh; and Richard Cheſlyn, eſq. their leſſee; and Robert Sutton[7], and others, as ſub-leſſees; and the ſaid Mary Bainbrigge, and Elizabeth Bainbrigge, ſir William Gordon, knight of the Bath, Edward Dawſon, eſq. John Clifford, Thomas Aſtey, John Ebourne, William Mansfield, Richard Sutton, and others, owners and proprietors of the reſidue of the open fields intended to be divided. Four acres to be ſet out for repair of roads. A compenſation to be made to the vicar for his glebe; and a further allotment of a ſeventh part of the common field, and a tenth for old incloſures, which, with 13*s*. 4*d*. an old payment from Kegworth mill, to be in lieu of all tithes and payments, except mortuaries, Eaſter offerings, and ſurplice fees; reſerving to the rector his right of ſuch tithes as he was entitled to from the hamlet of Iſley Walton, in the county of Leiceſter; or from Kingſton meadow, the Great Holme, and the Poor Holme, in the county of Nottingham. And the rector is reſtrained from exchanging the preſent rectory-houſe, or the garden or orchard thereto belonging.

[1] Entered at Loughborough, Sept. 11, 1682, by John Barwell. No arms were exhibited.

[2] William Barwell, a merchant, was buried at Enfield in 1743.
The wife of R. Barwell, eſq. of Bread-ſtreet, died Dec. 13, 1765.
There was a Governor Richard Barwell, afterwards an Eaſt India director, of Eſher in Surrey, was ſheriff of that county in 1768.
Roger Barwell, eſq. of Argyle Lodge, died June 16, 1772.
Richard Barwell, eſq. firſt in council at Madras, married May, 1777, Miſs Sanderſon, of the ſame place.

[3] Mr. Charles Barwell lived abroad (it is ſuppoſed in the Eaſt Indies). His ſon Charles practiſed as an attorney at Leiceſter.

[4] This gentleman was bred to the law; ſettled at Leiceſter; and kept the courts of the manor of Beaumanor for William Herrick, eſq. grandfather of the preſent owner, for ſeveral years during the reigns of queen Anne and king George I.

[6] From a Letter from Derby ſent to the Gentleman's Magazine, and printed in vol. XXVI. p. 407. This diſcovery, in a catchpenny folio ſheet, was magnified into "A moſt ſurprizing account of the manner of finding the bodies of eleven innocent children, at Kegworth, in the county of Leiceſter, the 8th of July, 1756; who were buried in earthen pots, and ſuppoſed to be murdered by their cruel and inhuman parents."

[7] A reſpectable grazier, who poſſeſſes the largeſt farm in Kegworth.

In 1722, 26 freeholders polled from Kegworth, and four from Iſley Walton; and in 1775, we find 52 names, and two from Iſley Walton.

Kegworth is a large well-built town.

The number of houſes in 1789 was 250: of inhabitants nearly 1000.

By the return made to parliament in 1801, the number of inhabited houſes was 250, in which were 272 families; the uninhabited houſes 12; the number of males was 697, of females 663; total, 1360; of whom 119 were chiefly employed in agriculture; and 278 in trade, manufactures, or handicraft.

Several hands are employed in frame-work knitting; and the poor-rates are moderate.

Here is a charter for a market on Wedneſdays; and two fairs, one on Eaſter Monday and Tueſday, and St. Michael and the day following; both for cattle and merchandize; but the market is almoſt diſuſed.

There are two meeting-houſes in this pariſh; one a Methodiſt, the other for General Baptiſts.

The ſalary for the maſter of the free-ſchool at Kegworth was granted by queen Elizabeth by a fee-farm rent of £6. 13*s.* 4*d.*; and one third of a cloſe in Kingſton has ſince been given by James Olderſhaw, formerly of Kegworth; making together about £9.

Here is alſo a boarding-ſchool for young ladies; and a Sunday ſchool, begun in the year 1790, in which are about 150 ſcholars.

A view of Zouch Bridge, near Kegworth, built in 1793, is given in Plate CVII.

"Mem. That the 25th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1692, being Saturday, there happened at Kegworth a flood, which brake down the Mill-cauſey in ſeveral places, and overflowed the common and Nether-field. It came up above Richard Burton's door, and to the croſs-hedge which divides the lower garden belonging to the parſonage from the kitchen-garden. The water was four inches deep in the ſtable next the coach-houſe, and carried away moſt of the pales about the dove-houſe cloſe.

The CHURCH (ſee Plate CXVII.)

dedicated to St. Andrew, is ſpacious, light, and elegant; and has a plain ſpire, on a handſome tower in which are five bells. It is built in the form of a croſs, with tranſepts; and the nave is divided from the ailes by two rows of round cluſtered columns with ring capitals ſupporting five arches in each row, four pointed, and the fifth or Eaſtern ſurbaſed.

A South chapel has in the Eaſt wall a niche and piſcina, and in its windows various ſaints.

In the other windows are many fragments of painted glaſs; in the North croſs St. Sebaſtian and St. Auguſtine; and in the North aile the betraying of Chriſt, the taking down from the croſs, and ſeveral others.

On each ſide of the Eaſt window are carved and painted France and England, in a bordure chequé, Argent and Azure; fig. 3. And, Gules, a chevron between ten croſſes patée Argent; fig. 4. Berkeley.

On the South ſide of the chancel are three ſtalls level with the wall under arches and pinacles highly ornamented, fig. 5; and at ſome diſtance Eaſt of them a flowered piſcina, with a ſmall locker and ſhelf for holding the cruets in the wall.

The octagon font is engraved, fig. 6.

Part of the chancel is neatly pewed.

Mr. Burton deſcribes theſe arms in this church:

Quarterly, 1. and 4. Argent, a maunch Sable, Haſtings; 2. and 3. Barry of ſix, Argent and Azure, an orle of martlets Gules, Valance; fig. 7.

Azure, a croſs patonce between four martlets Or, King Edward the Elder; impaling, Gules, three lions paſſant guardant in pale Or, a file of five points Argent, King Edward the Firſt; fig. 8.

Gules, three lions paſſant guardant in pale Or, a file of five points Argent, King Edward the Firſt; fig. 9.

Sable, a lion rampant Argent, crowned Or, Segrave; fig. 10.

Argent, a ſaltire Gules, fretty Or, Cropbull; impaling, Gules, a chief cheque Or and Azure, Haulſted; fig. 11.

Greene; impaling, Vaire, Or and Gules, Ferrars; fig. 13.

Greene; impaling, Gules, a chevron within a border Or; fig. 14.

In the Matriculus of 1220, Kegworth is deſcribed to be under the patronage of Stephen de Segrave; and the then rector had been inſtituted by Hugh biſhop of Lincoln. It had a chapel in Bonington, which was ſerved by a reſident chaplain from the mother church; and another chapel at Walton, which was to be ſerved two days in the week by the mother church [2].

Pope Nicholas's Valor of 1290, after ſtating that Kegworth was taxed at 50 marks, adds, "Nec plus valet his diebus, quia capella de Bonyngton, nuper pertinens ad eandem, nunc matrix eccleſia effecta eſt in dioceſ' Ebor', & ibi taxatur." We find it accordingly in that record, under the title of "Eccleſia de Bonington," and taxed at £10. 13*s.* 4*d.*—In the king's books, the rectory of St. Anne in Sutton Bonington is rated at £4. 17*s.* 6*d.*; clear yearly value, £80. [3]

In 1344, the procurations were, 7*s.* 6¾*d.*; the rectory was taxed at 50 marks, and paid 4*s.* for Peterpence. The then patron was John lord de Segrave.

In 1507, Maurice lord Berkeley died ſeiſed of the advowſon of the church here[1]; from whom it came by deſcent to Charles lord Berkeley, who was the patron in 1640; "whoſe anceſtor," ſays Mr. Burton, "as I have heard, gave unto Chriſt's College in Cambridge licence to nominate and tender to the lord Berkeley then being, two ſufficient clerks of the ſame college; and he to make choice of one of them, and to preſent him to the ſaid church[2]."

In 1534-5, the procurations and ſynodals were 11*s.* 1*d.*; and the value of the rectory £22.

In 1552, the commiſſioners reported that the church of Kegworth contained,

In primis, on chalis parſal gylt.

It̃m, tow veſtementes, the one golde bawdkyne wythe blewe croſs, the other of green bawdkyne.

It̃m, two copes of grene damaſke.

It̃m, foore great belles in the ſteple."

In Cardinal Pole's Archiepiſcopal Viſitation of the dioceſe of Lincoln, 1556, the following report is made concerning Dr. Hawford, then rector of the church of Kegworth: "Rector non reſidens. Trahit moram apud Cantabrigiam. Decernitur vocandum ad reſidentiam ſuam ſub penâ privationis[3]."

"January 21, 1646. Upon conſideration had of the petition of the pariſhioners of Kegworth, in the county of Leiceſter, complaining, that Mr. Michael Honywood, incumbent there, hath deſerted the cure of the ſaid church: Now, upon examination of the ſaid buſineſs, finding that the ſaid Mr. Honywood is beyond the ſeas in foreign parts by licence from the Parliament; and, upon the leaving of this kingdom, did take care for the providing of an able man to officiate in the ſaid place during his abſence, who of late hath taken other preferment, and ſo by that occaſion the place is deſtitute for the preſent: And whereas ſir Thomas Honywood, brother to the ſaid Mr. Honywood, hath now, before this Committee, engaged himſelf to procure an able orthodox Divine, ſuch as ſhall be approved of by this Committee, to take charge of the ſaid place during the abſence of the ſaid Mr. Honywood, and to allow him £100. a year out of the profits for his maintenance: Therefore this Committee conceived it reaſonable to allow the ſaid ſir Thomas Honywood two months time to provide for the ſaid place as aforeſaid; and the inhabitants and pariſhioners of Kegworth aforeſaid are hereby required to pay their tithes as formerly they have done, together with all the arrears now due."

"Martii 17, 1646. Whereas ſir Thomas Honywood hath, in purſuance of the order of the 24th of January laſt, recommended Mr. —— Cox, miniſter of the Word, to this Committee, to the end that he may be ſettled in the cure of the pariſh church of Kegworth, in the county of Leiceſter, and authorized to officiate the ſame till the return of Mr. Michael Honeywood, rector thereof, from his travel beyond the ſeas, for which he hath licence from the Parliament: It is ordered that the ſaid Mr. Cox do accordingly officiate the ſaid cure, and preach diligently to the ſaid pariſhioners, until the ſaid Mr. Honywood his ſaid return; who ſhall have for his ſaid ſervice the yearly ſum of £100. to be paid him out of the tithes and profits of the ſaid rectory."

The church of Kegworth had an annual payment of 13*s.* 4*d.* from the rector of Hathern.

In 1650 the rectory was returned to be worth £200. and the preacher as "ſufficient."

The preſent value in the king's books is 25*l.* 15*s.* 7½*d.*; and the epiſcopal procurations are 10*s.*; the archidiaconal, 11*s.* 1*d.*

The rectory, together with Iſley Walton, a hamlet belonging thereto, is now worth about £620.

To the North-eaſt corner of the church is attached a ſmall building uſed for a veſtry.

Over the South porch:

THOMAS ASHLEY, JAMES BUTLER, CHURCHWARDENS;
THOMAS CRANES, SIDESMAN; 1728."

On a black marble ſtone in the rectorial-houſe are theſe lines:

"Nunc mea, mox hujus, tum poſtea neſcio cujus:
Non mea, non hujus; Deus hanc tibi, nec ſcio cujus.
Gulielmus More, A. D. 1649."

[8] A gentleman of a very conſiderable family, brother to ſir Thomas and ſir Peter Honywood, of Lenham in Kent. He was ſon of Robert Honywood, eſq. of Lenham, who purchaſed Marks-hall in Eſſex in 1606, and removing thither from Kent, made Marks-hall his principal reſidence; pulled down part of the old houſe there, and built a handſome front, which was finiſhed about 1609, as appears from an inſcription on the chimney in the great hall. Michael was educated at Chriſt's College in Cambridge; where he was ſucceſſively ſcholar, fellow, taxor in 1623, and incorporated M. A. at Oxford in the year 1621; proctor in 1628, B. D. 1636; and at length a benefactor. He was elected to the rectory of Kegworth in 1640; but, being very ill uſed in the time of the Rebellion, he went beyond the ſeas about 1643, and lived at Utrecht during the perſecution. He was inſtalled dean of Lincoln, Oct. 12, 1660; and dying Dec. 7, 1681, in the 85th year of his age, was buried in the Cathedral, to which he had been a benefactor. (See his epitaph, p. 858.) He was an holy and humble man, a living library for learning; of great charity, munificence, and probity. He re-edified part of the cloiſters at Lincoln; over which he placed a library, repleniſhed with many rare books, which he bought at Frankfort; and at the entrance into the library over the door is his three-quarter length portrait. He gave alſo £100. to St. Paul's cathedral.

[13] Of Chriſt's College, Cambridge; M. A. 1769; B. D. 1772; archdeacon of Huntingdon 1794; D. D. 1795; and prebendary of Chiſwick in St. Paul's cathedral 1798.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

Mr. Wyrley in 1590 noticed a monument, not now to be found, of "Margeria de Hauſted et Nicolaus de Cropbull maritus ejus."

On this laſt were the arms of Cropbull and Hauſted, as in fig. 11; and Cropbull ſingle.

Mural monuments on the North ſide of the chancel:

1. "Near this place reſt the remains of the Rev. Mr. Joſias Cockſhutt, rector of this pariſh, and Mary his wife,
who was daughter of the
Rev. Mr. Thomas Twiſleton, late rector of Widdington in Eſſex.
Mr. Cockſhutt died Dec. 28, 1760, aged 72.
Mrs. Cockſhutt died Aug. 7, 1760, aged 59."

2. "Near this place was interred the body of Mrs. Sarah Yorke, wife of Samuel Yorke[1], gent. and third daughter of the late Rev. Mr. Thomas Twiſleton and Anne his wife; who, in the time of health being chearful and innocent, in ſickneſs patient and reſigned, ended a well-ſpent life Aug. 7, 1754, N. S.
aged 48 years and 2 days."

3. "Here lieth the body of Martha Knight, who departed this life Oct. 31, 1621.
Alſo Gilbert Knight, ſon of the ſaid Martha,
who died Nov. 7, 1691.
Alſo Elizabeth Knight, daughter of Gilbert Knight, deceaſed Jan. 27, 1692."

On the South ſide:

"Near this place reſt the remains of the Rev. Thomas Cockſhutt Twiſleton, of Quorndon in this county, ſon of the Rev. Mr. Cockſhutt, late of this pariſh, and nephew to John Twiſleton, eſq. late of Rowcliff in Yorkſhire.
His good diſpoſition and humane behaviour gained him the eſteem of all his relations and acquaintance. He was an indulgent huſband, a kind maſter, and a ſincere friend;
and his death was generally lamented.
He married, February 3, 1761, Dorothy, eldeſt daughter of John Davys, of Loughborough, gent.
in this county; and departed this life
July 24, 1764, aged 32."

On flat ſtones:

1. On a white ſtone on the floor is pourtrayed the figure of a prieſt in a doctor's gown and cap, his hands elevated on his breaſt as repreſented in Plate CXVII. fig. 15; with the following inſcription round the ledge; the figure and letters cut deep, and filled with pitch.

"HIC JACET JOHANNES IRETON[2],
SACRÆ THEOLOGIÆ BACCALAUREUS,
ET RECTOR ECCLESIÆ DE KEGWORTH, QUI OBIIT 28 JUNII, ANNO DOMINI 1600."

rector of Widdington, in the county of Eſſex, and third ſon of Philip Twiſleton, late of Drax, in the county of York, eſq.
She was daughter of Charles Glaſcock,
late citizen of London;
and died on the 5th of October, 1728,
in the 65th year of her age.
She left iſſue one ſon, named John;
and three daughters, viz. Anne, Mary, and Sarah.
Here alſo lies the body of John Cockſhutt, ſon of the Rev. Mr. Joſias Cockſhutt
and Mary his wife, who died in the 17th week of his age, A. D. 1731."

5. "Anne Barwell, wife of John Barwell;

[4] Luke Cranwell, M. A. of Chriſt College, Cambridge, was a native of Loughborough; and obtained, during the Protectorate, the vicarage of St. Peter's at Derby. He is repreſented as a wiſe, courageous, zealous, and upright man; not very ready in elocution; but very ſcriptural, ſolid, and ſubſtantial in his diſcourſes. He was active in promoting the Reſtoration; but, as a Nonconformiſt, was ejected in 1662; when, having acquired ſome competent ſkill in phyſic, and being no longer allowed to exerciſe his miniſtry publickly, he reſolved to try what he could do in the other faculty; and, proving very ſkilful and ſucceſsful, maintained his family comfortably. He was very hoſpitable and benevolent; as readily attending his brethren and poor neighbours, from whom he expected no recompence, as he did the rich and great. He had a good invention; and found out many happy and effectual medicines. He was a cheerful man, and to all appearance ſtrong, but at laſt declined very ſpeedily. That he might be out of the reach of the Oxford act, he went to Kegworth, where he died on Sunday Nov. 11, 1683. Nonconformiſts' Memorial, vol. I. p. 315.

5. “Sacred to the memory of Thomas Dalby, ſurgeon, late vicar of Caſtle Donington.

He departed this life March 15, 1787, aged 43 years.
He bore a long and painful illneſs with fortitude and reſignation.
Alſo three of his children, who died infants.”

6. On two large Swithland ſtones:

“John Willey, M.A.
died Sept. 19, 1789, aged 68.”

“Joyce Willey, died May 27, 1774,
aged 79.”

7. “Here lie the remains of Mr. William Hardy, who died Feb. 14, 1785, aged 66 years.
Here alſo reſt the remains of Mrs. Anne Hardy, widow of the above Mr. William Hardy.
She died Dec. 2, 1796, aged 83 years.”

On other flat ſtones:

Richard Sutton, baker, died April 21, 1777, aged 50.
Elizabeth, late wife of Benjamin Sutton, died March 5, 1783, aged 50.
John Clifford, died April 26, 1789, aged 79.
Dorothy Clifford, died June 9, 1783, aged 73.

On a flat ſtone in the South aile:

“THRICE HAPPY PALMER, I TO THY RICH SHRINE
OFFER THIS TRIBUTE . . . . MINE,
DOE NOT . . . . . . FREE MY WEAK SENSE,
IN DARING TO DESCRIBE THY EXCELLENCE.
THOU WAST RELIGIOUS, TEMPERATE, JUST, WISE,
FIRME, WITTIE, CHASTE, THE MUSES' EXERCISE:
WHOSE CHARITIES THY BOUNTY NE'ER CONFIN'D, FRAUGHT WITH ALL GRACES OF AN HONEST MIND.
OH, THOU A PALMER WAST; BUT IN TRUE WEEDE THOU DIDST ALL OTHER PALMERS FAR EXCEED.
EYED LIKE AN EAGLE IN THE LIGHT OF FAITH,
A HEART THAT FEARED GOD, AND SCORNED DEATH.
WING'D WITH THESE GRACES THEN MOUNT HEAVEN'S BLISS: EARTH WAS NOT WORTHY OF THEE; HEAVEN IS.
WHICH JOHN PALMER, ESQ. DIED THE 14TH DAY OF FEBRUARY 1614.”

On a flat ſtone in the North aile:

On a grave-ſtone on the ground, this:

“Here lyeth the body of MICHAEL HONYWOOD, D. D. who was grandchild and one of the 367 perſons that MARY [1], the wife of ROBERT HONYWOOD, eſq.
did ſee, before ſhe died, lawfully deſcended from her;
that is, 16 of her own body, 114 grandchildren, 228 of the third generation, and 9 of the fourth.”

[1] Mrs. Mary Honywood, born at Lenham in Kent in 1527, was married in 1543, at 16 years of age, to her only huſband Robert Honywood, of Charing in Kent. She died, in the 93d year of her age, and the 44th of her widowhood, in May 1620; and was buried near her huſband in Lenham church, though an honorary monument at Marks-hall in Eſſex is thus inſcribed:

“Here lieth the body of Mary Waters, the daughter and coheir of Robert Waters, of Lenham in Kent, eſq. wife of Robert Honywood, of Charing in Kent, eſq. her only huſband, who had at her deceaſe, lawfully deſcended from her, three hundred ſixty ſeven children; ſixteen of her own body, one hundred and fourteen grand-children, two hundred twenty-eight in the third generation, and nine in the fourth. She lived a moſt pious life, and in a Chriſtian manner died here at Markeſhall in the ninety-third year of her age, and in the forty-fourth year of her widowhood, the 11th of May, 1620.”

This memorable lady could have ſaid the ſame as a diſtich that was made of the family of the Dalburghs in Baſil:

“[1]Mater ait [2]natæ, dic' [3]natæ, filia [4]nata, Et moneat [5]natæ plangere [6]filiolam.”

“Riſe [1] up, [2] daughter, and go to thy [3] daughter, for her [4] daughter's [5] daughter hath a [6] daughter.”—She was a very pious woman, but afflicted in her declining age with deſpair *. In the dining-room at Marks-hall is an original portrait of her, in a widow's habit, with a book in her hand; inſcribed, on the right, ÆTATIS SUÆ 70; on the other ſide, ANNO D'NI 1597.

* “Mrs. Waters (in 1662) was much out-ſtript, in point of fruitfulneſs, by one then ſurviving [Dame Heſter Temple]; and therefore this worthy matron (in my mind) is more memorable on another account, viz. for patient weathering out the tempeſt of a troubled conſcience, whereon a remarkable ſtory dependeth: being much afflicted in mind, many miniſters repaired to her, and amongſt the reſt, the Rev. Mr. John Fox, than whom no more happy an inſtrument to ſet the joints of a broken ſpirit. All his counſels proved ineffectual; inſomuch, that in the agony of her ſoul, having a Venice-glaſs in her hand, ſhe brake forth into this expreſſion, ‘I am as ſurely damn'd as this glaſs is broken,’ which ſhe immediately threw with violence to the ground. Here happened a wonder: the glaſs rebounded again; and was taken up whole and entire. I confeſs it is poſſible (though difficult) ſo caſually to throw as brittle a ſubſtance, that, lighting on the edges, it may be preſerved; but, happening immediately in that juncture of time, it ſeemed little leſs than miraculous. However, the gentlewoman took no comfort thereat (as ſome have reported, and more have believed) but continued a great time after (ſhort is long to people in pain) in her former diſconſolate condition without any amendment; until at laſt, God, the great Clock-keeper of Time, who findeth out the fitteſt minutes for his own mercies, ſuddenly ſhot comfort like lightning into her ſoul; which, once entered, ever remained therein; (God doth not palliate cures, what he heals it holds:) ſo that ſhe led the remainder of her life in ſpiritual gladneſs. This ſhe herſelf told to the reverend father Thomas Morton biſhop of Dureſme, from whoſe mouth I have received this relation. In the days of queen Mary ſhe uſed to viſit the priſons, and to comfort and relieve the confeſſors therein. She was preſent at the burning of Mr. Bradford in Smithfield, and reſolved to ſee the end of his ſuffering, though ſo great the preſs of people, that her ſhoes were trodden off, and ſhe forced thereby to go barefoot from Smithfield to St. Martin's, before ſhe could furniſh herſelf with a new pair for her money.” Fuller's Worthies, Kent, p. 85; and ſee Haſted's Kent, vol. II. p. 170.—In the church of Lenham is a monument for Robert Thomſon, eſq. her grandſon.

By the ſide of the grave-ſtone of John Olderſhaw and Urſula his wife, in the nave of Kegworth church, (as printed in p. 857) are two others of a different ſort of ſtone; on which only ſome fragments of the inſcriptions remain; and cloſe to thoſe two ſtones is one with the following lines:

"God, to prevent my youth's approaching crimes,
Nature my nurſe, made me to ſleep betimes.
Ellin Oulderſhaw, daughter of John and Urſula, [di]ed the 12th
[of JU]LY, anno 1678."

In the nave alſo, and on the ſame line with the foregoing, is the epitaph of Peter Olderſhaw and his deſcendants, as printed in p. 857.

William Olderſhaw, ſon of James, mentioned in the ſaid epitaph, was alſo buried at Kegworth.

Over the chancel door:

"James Olderſhaw, church-warden,
1684."

There are two old ſtones in one of the ailes, whoſe inſcriptions are worn out. When the two foregoing were laid down, theſe were taken up, and laid by till they wanted ſome pavement in the church; then they were placed where they now are. [This was ſtated in 1771 by the then clerk of the pariſh, whoſe name was Hardy, aged 72.]

Among the benefactors of the town of Kegworth is Mr. James Olderſhaw; who gave one piece of meadow, called Little Holme, worth 100*l.*; one-third part of the rent to the ſchool, and two-thirds to the poor. Mr. Peter Olderſhaw alſo gave 20*l.* to buy land; the rent to be given to twenty houſekeepers the 7th of April.

John Olderſhaw, of Loughborough Park in Leiceſterſhire, married, in the year 1654, Urſula daughter and co-heireſs of William Fettiplace, fourth ſon of Sir Edmond Fettiplace, Bart. of Swinbrook in Oxfordſhire.

The firſt Fettiplace in England was gentleman uſher to William the Conqueror, and came over with him. John Fettiplace, a deſcendant of his, in the reign of Henry VI. married Beatrix (natural daughter of John king of Portugal), relict firſt of Thomas earl of Arundel, and ſecondly of Gilbert, brother of John Talbot earl of Shrewſbury, general of the Engliſh in the wars with France, and of John Holland duke of Exeter, who died in 1448.

William Fettiplace, grandſon of John and Beatrix, gave a conſiderable eſtate to Queen's College, Oxford, which the provoſt and fellows now enjoy. He alſo founded the free ſchool at Childry in Berkſhire, in which church he was buried. This family removed their ſeat from Childry, upwards of 200 years ago, to Swinbrook in Oxfordſhire, as may be ſeen by the tombs of ſeven generations buried in Swinbrook church. From theſe anceſtors deſcended John Fettiplace, eſq.; who, in conſideration of ſervices and ſufferings for Charles I. was created a baronet March 30, 1664.

[1] The arms and creſt of Fullwood were confirmed in 1579, by R. Cook Clarencieux, to George Fullwood of Fulwood-ſtreet, Holborn, ſon of John Fullwood of Middleton, and deviſee of his uncle Henry Fullwood, of Hogneſton, co. Derby. By Anne, daughter and ſole heir of Thomas Bentley of Holbourn, he had a ſon Chriſtopher, of Grays Inn, who was living in 1611.

WALTON ISLEY,

commonly called Iſley or Eaſeley Walton, is a ſmall hamlet, ſeven miles North-weſt from Loughborough, and about the ſame diſtance North-eaſt from Aſhby de la Zouch, to which town a turnpike-road paſſes through it from Nottingham. Though the village ſtands low, there are ſome good proſpects on the neighbouring hills. The ſoil is a ſtrong clay.

Lettice de Ferrariis and Robert the ſon of Nigell gave the greateſt part of this village to the Knights Templars; which was alſo confirmed to them by king[1] John. After their ſuppreſſion, it came to the Knights Hoſpitallers; and in 1208, the following cauſe occurs:

"Aſſiſa venit recognitura ſi Robertus filius Nigelli, advunculus Willielmi de Halſted, ſeiſitus fuit in dominico ſuo, ut de feodo, de unâ carucatâ terre in Waleton; quam terram magiſter Hoſpitalis London venit & dicit quod prior eſt caput Hoſpitalis in Angliâ, & quod plures magiſtri ſunt ſub eo, & nullus eorum poteſt perdere vel lucrare ſine eo, & omnes poteſt amovere ad placitum ſuum; & ideo non vult reſpondere niſi conſideratione curie. Judicium quod querat aliud breve ſi voluerit ſuper priorem, & eſt in miſericordiâ pro ſtulto brevi impetrato[2]."

In 1346, the prior of the hoſpital of St. John of Jeruſalem in England (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock) was aſſeſſed 5*s*. for half a quarter of one knight's fee in Walton Iſley, parcel of the fee of Cheſter and Huntingdon[3].

May 16, 1462, king Edward IV. granted one meſſuage and one virgate of land in Iſley Walton (late parcel of the poſſeſſions of John Beaumont, eſq.) to Richard Haſtings, eſq. and his heirs male[4].

In 1464, John Beaumont, eſq. attainted of high treaſon, was ſeiſed of one virgate and two acres of meadow, with the appurtenances, in Iſley Walton[5].

Nov. 8, 1464, king Edward IV. granted one meſſuage, one virgate of land, and two acres of meadow, at Iſley Walton (parcel of the forfeited poſſeſſions of John Beaumont) to Richard Haſtings and his heirs[6].

In 1564, there were ſeven families in Iſley Walton.

By an inquiſition taken at Leiceſter, Oct. 4, 1600, it appeared that Francis Whiſtones died ſeiſed of the manor of Iſley Walton; alſo of ſix meſſuages, ſix cottages, 300 acres of land, 40 acres of meadow, and 20 acres of paſture, in Iſley Walton; alſo of a free rent of 20*s*. ariſing out of divers lands and tenements in Iſley Walton and Oſgathorpe; that they were held of the queen, as of the honour of Eaſt Greenwich in Kent, by the ſervice of a twentieth part of one knight's fee; that he died April 1, 1598; and that Francis Whiſtones was his ſon and heir, and was then aged 20 years and 10 months[7].

Sept. 30, 1583, Clement Saunders, gent. died ſeiſed of three virgates of land in Iſley Walton, held of the queen, as of her manor of Eaſt Greenwich in Kent, by the ſervice of a twentieth part of one knight's fee[8].

In 1621, Francis Whiſtones held the manor of Iſeley Walton of the king, as of his manor of Eaſt Greenwich; and William Sanders at the ſame time held lands within the lordſhip, by knight's ſervice.

Mr. Burton, in 1640, ſays, "All Oſgathorpe, ſaving three tenements, appears at the court of this manor. This town (as I am informed) belongeth now to the Company of Bowyers in London; not long ſince given to them by one Wood, a chandler in London[9]."

In 1722, four freeholders polled from Iſley Walton; and two in 1775.

The ſite of the manor of Iſley Walton[10] was advertized, Oct. 1801, to be let for 21 years by the Company of Bowyers, containing, with the dwelling-houſe, barns, cottages, out-houſes, &c. 327 acres, more or leſs, in the occupation of Elizabeth Bulſtrode.

Iſley Walton is not a part of the pariſh of Kegworth; but a diſtinct pariſh, appointing its own officers and ſupporting its own poor; to whom the ſum of £4. 10*s*. is annually given, ariſing from the benefactions of Francis Horton in 1692; and of John and William Cranlee in 1757.

This lordſhip was not incloſed under the act for incloſing the pariſh of Kegworth. It ſtill lies in an open-field ſtate, all except about 11 acres, though a great deal more is incloſed, and has the appearance of old incloſure. This was done, within a few years laſt paſt, for mutual accommodation, by the tenants, without the conſent or even knowledge of the land-owners. Should an incloſure take place ſome years hence, the above fact may be unknown, and the then rector will loſe a part of his property. This fact, therefore, is here ſtated on the authority of the preſent learned and benevolent incumbent.

The CHAPEL (ſee Plate CXVII.)

dedicated to All Saints, is ſmall; with an open tower, in which are two bells.

The octagon font is engraved, fig. 18; and in fig. 19. the arms of the Bowyers Company, Argent, on a chevron between three floats Or, as many mullets of the firſt. Creſt, on a wreath, three long bows, one erect, and two in ſaltire, Gules.

By the Matriculus of 1220, this chapel was to be ſerved two days in the week by the mother church.

In 1552, the commiſſioners reported that the chapel of Iſley Walton contained,

"In primis, one challice of ſylver ſumwhat gylted wyth gold.
Itm, two belles (ſmale) in the ſteple.
Itm, one veſtemente.
Itm, one ſurples."

In 1650, the chapel of Iſley Walton was returned as having "no preacher."

At preſent either the rector of Kegworth or his curate officiates, as the chapel is a member of that rectory. The tithes are ſaid to be worth £80. a year.

This chapel was repaired in 1720.

"William Jolly, Maſter.
John Townſhend, Nicholas Green, Renter-wardens."

There is no burial ground in this hamlet.

In the anti-chapel of Chriſt's College, Cambridge:
Arms: Azure, a lion rampant Argent; fig. 17.

"Lector! hic ſepultas habes,

[11] John Covel, ſon of William Covel, was born at Horningſhearth, Suffolk, in 1638; educated at Bury; and admitted March 31, 1654, of Chriſt's College, Cambridge; B. A. 1658; M. A. 1661; and fellow of that college. He went in 1670 to Conſtantinople as chaplain to ſir Daniel Harvey, with whom and his ſucceſſor ſir John Finch he continued ſeven years; and on his return, in 1679, was created D. D. by mandamus, and elected lady Margaret's preacher in Divinity; inſtituted to the ſinecure rectory of Littlebury in Eſſex March 5, 1680; preſented to Kegworth, by his college, Oct. 31, 1681; inſtalled chancellor of York Nov 9, 1687, an honour conferred on him by the king during the vacancy of the ſee; elected maſter of his college July 7, 1688; and, dying Dec. 19, 1722, aged 85, was buried in the college chapel. Not long before his death, he publiſhed "Some Account of the preſent Greek Church, with Reflections on their preſent Doctrine and Diſcipline; particularly on the Euchariſt, and the reſt of their ſeven pretended Sacraments, compared with Jac. Goar's Notes upon the Greek Ritual, or Εὐχολόγιον. Cambridge, 1722," folio. Mr. T. Baker ſtyles him "a perſon noted for polite and curious learning, ſingular humanity, and knowledge of the World."

LANGLEY,

a beautifully ſequeſtered lordſhip[1], not mentioned in Domeſday, wholly extra-parochial, in extent 552 acres, is ſituated about 7 miles from Aſhby de la Zouch, 8 from Loughborough, 11 from Derby, and 12 from Nottingham; with all which places it has an eaſy communication by a good turnpike-road. It is bounded on the North by Caſtle Donington and Iſeley Walton; on the Weſt by Tonge; on the South by Bredon; and on the Eaſt by Diſeworth; the church of which, with a third part of the townſhip, was formerly the property of the prioreſs and convent of Langley. In the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, it is within the deanry of Akeley.

"At this place," ſays Mr. Burton, "William Pantulf, in the reign of king Canutus the Dane, founded a ſmall monaſtery for nuns, dedicated to the Virgin Mary."—Biſhop Tanner, without noticing this early date, ſays, "William Pantulf and Burgia his wife, in the beginning of the reign of king Henry II. or before, built a priory for Benedictine nuns here, to the honour of the bleſſed Virgin Mary."

The fact is, that the nunnery was founded by a lineal deſcendant of William Pantulf, companion to the Conqueror, beyond whoſe time ſir William Dugdale does not trace him, and from whom he had 29 lordſhips in Salop; and who was appointed by king Henry I. to be governor of Stafford caſtle. He was the founder of the abbey of St. Peter at Norum in Normandy[2], in the cloiſter of which he was buried. His poſſeſſions in England he gave to his ſecond ſon Robert; whoſe ſon Hugh and grandſon Ivo ſucceſſively enjoyed them.

Ivo was a liberal benefactor to ſeveral religious houſes; as was alſo his ſon and ſucceſſor William Pantulf, lord of Bredon; who, with his wife Burgia, founded a priory at Langley for Benedictine nuns; and, for the health of his ſoul, and the ſouls of his anceſtors, gave to the nuns of that houſe the church of Little Dalby, with ſix oxgangs of land; as alſo the church of Somerby, with one yard land, and the tofts and crofts thereto belonging. He gave them alſo the whole of Langley-wood, with four bovates of land in that lordſhip; and the ſite of the water-mill[3].

The habit of one of the nuns of Langley may be ſeen in Plate CXVIII.

William de Ferrariis earl of Nottingham and Derby[4], about 1180, confirmed to the nuns of Langley (who, as appears by his charter, were brought thither from the priory of Fagherwella [Fairweld][5] in Staffordſhire) the ſite of their nunnery, and all that was given them by William Pantulf. Teſtibus; Roberto de Ferrers avunculo comitis, & Henrico fratre ſuo, & Hugone fratre comitis, cum multis aliis[6].

By a reference from pope Alexander III. about 1185, to John abbot of Gerendon and R. prior of Kenelworth, it appears that the nuns of Langley had theretofore enjoyed the privileges of the Ciſtercian order, of being exempt from tithes for lands, &c. in their own cultivation; which the referees confirmed[7].

Hubert archbiſhop of Canterbury (1193—1207) recites and confirms the ſeveral donations made to this houſe, inter alia, "ex dono Burge uxoris Willielmi Pantulph de Bredon[8]."

William Pantulf was ſucceeded by his ſon, another William (whom ſir William Dugdale has not diſtinguiſhed from the father); who, taking part with the rebellious barons, was one of thoſe who held Belvoir caſtle againſt king John; but, afterwards, returning to due obedience, was received into the king's protection[9]. By Iſolda Pantulph, daughter of the laſt-mentioned William, the patronage of this houſe came by marriage to Robert lord Tateſhall, the ſecond of that name, who died ſeiſed of it about 1213; leaving Robert his ſon and heir, then under age.

In 1217, Iſolda Pantulf[10], who had married a ſecond huſband, Walter de Baſkervile, and had again become a widow, confirmed to the nuns of Langley all that her grandfather William had given them, particularly the whole of Langley wood; the water-mill at Tonge (which, with about nine acres of land attached to it, though ſurrounded by Tonge and Bredon, having formerly been the property of the nuns of Langley, has always been conſidered as extra-parochial); with four bovates of land there, and free common in the wood and paſture adjoining that lordſhip; and one virgate of land in Kettleby, the gift of her grandmother Burgia[11].

In the Matriculus of 1220, it is ſtated that Robert de Tateſhall was then patron of Langley priory.

It alſo appears that the nuns at that time poſſeſſed to their own uſe the church of Diſeworth, which had been given them by Benedict de Diſeworth; and that they received from Robert of Leiceſter, whom they had in 1209 preſented to the rectory of Little Dalby, an annual acknowledgement of two ſhillings; which, it is obſerved, was de novo, and with the knowledge and conſent of the biſhop of Lincoln; and in 1220, the church of Dalby being then appropriated to the nunnery, the firſt vicar, Ralph of Lincoln, by the conſent of the prioreſs and convent, was preſented by the rector[12].

William Pate gave them four acres of land between Wartoft and the priory mill; and this donation was confirmed by Robert Fitz Nigel[13].

About the year 1230, an agreement was made between Roeſia prioreſs of Langley and Gervaſe prior of Bredon, concerning tithes poſſeſſed by this priory in Bredon; and alſo that all the ſecular ſervants of the nunnery ſhould be ſubject, as to ſpiritualities, to the mother church of Bredon[14]; all which was confirmed by John prior of St. Oſwald of Noſtell[15].

From Robert Groſſeteſte biſhop of Lincoln the prioreſs and convent obtained, about 1235, a confirmation in frank almoigne of their two churches of Somerby and Little Dalby[16].

Langley does not occur either in the Teſta de Nevill of 1240, or in the Itinerary of 1280.

Jan. 17, 1246, Robert Mulcher, of Tonge, releaſed to this priory all his right of common in Langley wood[17].

A ſimilar releaſe was alſo given by Walter Diſpenſer, William Fitz Nevill, Hugh le Veneur, John Aungein, and John le Bokland, all of Tonge; and another, May 22, 1252, by William Talun, ſon of John Talun, of Wynelſton, and Gervaſe the Cook of Bredon[18].

In 1251, Iſabella prioreſs of Langley demiſed to Henry de Schipton, for a term of 20 years, a toft at Belgrave, at an annual rent of 20*s.*[19]

An ordination or award was made, in 1258, by Walter rector of Belgrave, dean of Leiceſter, an arbiter mutually choſen between the nuns of Langley and the perpetual vicar of Somerby, concerning land claimed by the vicar as belonging to his vicarage;

A BENEDICTINE NUN OF LANGLEY.

LANGLEY HALL, the Seat of RICHARD CHESLYN Esq.^r^ each party ſwearing to the other to conform to the decree of the arbiter[1].

A compoſition, or decree, by the abbots of Stoneley, Coventry, and Kenilworth, delegated by the pope, between the nuns of Langley, and the canons of Bredon, concerning the tithes of Wiveleſton, Tong, and Bredon, confirmed by the mutual oath of the parties contending, has been already noticed[2].

The lady Baſilia de Holmiâ[3] gave to God and St. Mary, and to the nuns of Langley, 500 eels, from her fiſhery of Stockes; or, in lieu of the eels, a payment of 3*s.* yearly[4]; and Ralph de Holme granted them a yearly rent of 4*s.* part of the dower of his wife Agnes, on veiling his daughter in that priory.

Stephen de Segrave gave them 27 acres of land in Schorte Langley, at a rent of 15*s.* 9*d.*; and Nicholas de Segrave releaſed to them 15*s.* 9*d.* rent, which they had been uſed to pay for that land to his father Gilbert. He alſo gave them four cultures of land in Kegworth wood, ſituate between Langley wood and Donington field[5].

In the Chartulary of that antient and noble family, the following deeds occur, relative to Langley:

1. A grant from Ranulph earl of Cheſter, to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of all that he poſſeſſed in Langley field, with the appurtenances, to be held, inter alia, by the ſervice ſpecified in N° 1. among the evidences under Kegworth[6].

2. A grant from Richard Kegworth, clerk, the ſon of Thomas, to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, of a rent of 10*s.* a year, by four quarterly payments, for 16 acres of land in Short Langley, given to the ſaid Richard and his heirs by the ſame Stephen.

3. A quit-claim from William de Haſtede, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, of his right in the land called Short Langley, between the lands of the canons of Waniſtoft (Wartoft Grange), and the path called Nunneſei, as well in arable land as in common paſture, to be held of the ſaid William by homage, and a pound of pepper annually, at Midlent, for all ſervices.

4. A quit-claim from the prior and brethren of St. John of Jeruſalem in England, with the aſſent of their homagers in Whatton, of all their right of common of paſture in Short Langley Field, as well on the arable as on the common paſture; from the territory of Wartoft Grange, to the boundary which leads from the head of the ditch next Nunneſey, and extends from Whatton field to the grove of the nuns of Langley. This was in return for a quit-claim, made by the ſaid Stephen to the prior and brethren and their homagers, of all the land lying between the ſaid hedge and Tonge field.

5. A quit-claim from Robert Patric, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, of his right in Short Langley field, from the territory of Wartoft, to the fartheſt part towards the Eaſt, called Nonneſei; except one plot which the father of the ſaid Robert had given to the nuns of Langley; to be held of the ſaid Robert and his heirs by the ſervice of one pound of pepper, annually, on the feaſt of the Nativity, for all ſervices.

6. A grant from the prioreſs and convent of Langley, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, of a rent of 15*s.* 9*d.* payable to him annually; 4*s.* at Eaſter; 5*s.* on St. John's day; 4*s.* at Michaelmas; and 3*s.* 9*d.* at the feaſt of the Nativity, for 47 acres of land in Short Langley, given to them by the ſaid Stephen.

7. A grant from William Cogayn, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, of a rent of 2*s.* payable to him annually for four acres in Short Langley.

8. A grant from Peter de Ciſy, to the ſaid Stephen and his heirs, of a rent of 3*s.* payable to him annually for 6 acres in Short Langley, given and granted by the ſaid Stephen to the ſaid Peter and his heirs.

9. A quit-claim from John Punchardin, to Nicholas de Segrave and his heirs, of all that tenement in Short Langley, which the ſaid Nicholas once held[7]."

Robert de Ros, lord of Beauver, about 1280, gave to the priory of Langley juxta Bredon nine virgates of land at Barkby and Thorpe, with the appurtenances, which they held of his fee, as of the honour of Barkby, by the gift of ſir Peter de Lincoln[8].

A compoſition between Chriſtiana prioreſs of Langley and Thomas prior of Bredon, concerning tithes, mortuaries, oblations, &c. has been already mentioned[9].

In the taxation of Pope Nicholas, about the year 1290, the temporalities of this priory were thus noticed:

Penſio prioriſſe de Langele in eccleſiâ de Parva Dalby — —				£.2 0 0
Bona temporalia prioriſſe de Langeley:
In decanatibus Leyceſtrie,	£0	2	9	17 8 9
Goſecote,	9	7	4
Frameland,	2	5	0
Akele,	4	10	8
Sparkenhoe,	1	3	0
In archidiaconatu Nottinghamie; in Wilweby, Nottingham, & Bolington,				2 12 0

In 1298, a certificate was given by Oliver Sutton biſhop of Lincoln, from his Regiſter, that Hugo de Crek had been regularly preſented by the nuns of Langley to the rectory of Little Dalby[10].

By an inquiſition taken in 1302, after the death of Robert de Tateſhall, it was found that he was the lawful patron of this religious houſe; and that it was then worth £20.[11]; but it is remarkable that, even at this period, neither the actual founder nor the preciſe time of its foundation were exactly known, as appears by a ſubſequent inquiſition in 1306[12].

In 1313, William de Ros de Hamelake releaſed to the prioreſs, and to her tenants in Barkby, the ſervice of attending his views of frankpledge[13].

In 1340, the prioreſs and convent of Langley had a grant of confirmation of their church of Little Dalby[14].

Some tenements in Diſeworth were given to this nunnery in 1346 by Ivo le Preſt[15].

An agreement was made in 1421, between William Herbury prior of Bredon, John Howdersfield prior of Noſtell, John vicar of Bredon, and Margaret Salbowe prioreſs of Langley; by which it was formally agreed that the nuns of Langley ſhould enjoy the tithes and all other the emoluments of Wilſton meadow; and alſo the tithes of Tonge-mill and the croft adjoining, and of certain other titheable places in their own occupation. They had alſo a grant of all ſacramental rites, and the privilege of ſepulture within their nunnery, on paying to the priory of Bredon a yearly compoſition of 4*s.* 4*d.* The ſervants of the nunnery, with their families, dwelling out of the bounds of their houſe, were to perform all ſacramental rites at the mother church of Bredon, and to pay there all oblations, mortuaries, and parochial dues[16].

The nuns of Langley had in 1464 a farther confirmation of all their property from king Edward IV.[17]

"There was, many years ago, a nun of this houſe, as it goeth current by tradition, called Hawiſe de Colvile, of ſo pure virginity and rare chaſtity, that was ſo free from ſin of that kind, as that her thoughts were free from any ſuch paſſions, and whoſe face did diſcover ſo much by a ſhining radiance and brightneſs thereof. The like is reported of St. Frideſwide[18] of Oxford, whom William of Malmeſbury reporteth ſo much to triumph in her virginity, as that ſhe erected a monaſtery there in memorial thereof[19]."

On a vacancy, the nuns had the privilege of electing their own prioreſs, the permiſſion of the patron being firſt obtained; who, on ſuch occaſions, ſent a page with a white ſtaff, to guard the door of the priory till the election was made, for which, in right of his maſter, he was to have his diet, but nothing more.

Roeſia was prioreſs in 1230.

Siſter Iſabella de Lent, a nun of Langley, was elected prioreſs, by the king's licence, in 1236. She was living in 1260.

Siſter Juliana de Urſula was elected in 1268.

Chriſtiana was prioreſs in 1280.

"Alicia Gifford, electa in prioriſſam de Langeley, petitâ prius a domino Roberto de Tatteſhall patrono domûs eligendi licentiâ, 12 kal. Novembris 1302."

Another Roeſia occurs in 1333.

Margaret Salhowe was prioreſs in 1429.

The nunnery of Langley was returned by the commiſſioners to be worth, in ſpiritualities and temporalities, according to Dugdale, £29. 7*s.* 4½*d.*[2]; according to Speed, £34. 6*s.* 2*d.*; yet herein were maintained eight religious[3].

The ſite and demeſne lands of Langley nunnery were, at the diſſolution, of the yearly value of £7. 5*s.* 4½*d.*; and in 1535 they were demiſed, at the ſame rent, to Thomas Gray[4].

In 1555, there remained in charge a penſion of 40*s.* a year payable to Iſabella Seton, lately a nun of Langley[5].

In 1558, Thomas Gray, gentleman, had a diſcharge for £192. 10*s.* due from him to the crown for this priory, which he had bought of king Henry VIII.[6] He died at Caſtle Donington 22 Feb. 1564, ſeiſed of the ſite of the priory of Langley, worth £8. 4*s.* 4*d.* with lands and tenements there and in Bredon, held of the king in capite by the 30th part of a knight's fee[7].

His ſon and heir, Thomas Gray, gentleman, died 14 Jan. 1608-9, ſeiſed of the manor of Langley, called Gray's Langley, worth £10, held of the king in capite, by knight's ſervice; and alſo of a water-mill and certain meadows in Tonge (being part of Langley as already noticed), leaving Thomas his ſon and heir, ten years old in 1613[8]; who in 1630 was the only freeholder in Langley; after whoſe death (which happened March 19, 1662-3), an intricate caſe aroſe out of a ſettlement which had been by him made of this lordſhip.

Nov. 2, 1626, Thomas Gray, eſq. being ſeiſed in fee-tail of the manor of Langley, by his indenture covenants to levy a fine to Eyre and Browne, declaring the uſe thereof to himſelf and his heirs. But the fine was not levied, and ſo Thomas Gray continued ſeiſed in fee-tail ſtill; and had iſſue, Thomas his eldeſt ſon, George his ſecond ſon, and divers other ſons.

Oct. 29, 1652, Thomas the father, ſuppoſing himſelf to have power by the conveyance above-mentioned to ſettle his eſtate by feoffment, conveyed the manor to the uſe of himſelf for life; the remainder to his ſecond ſon George for life; the remainder to his firſt, ſecond, third, and fourth ſons, and their heirs, &c. with divers remainders over; with power of revocation. Afterwards, Jan. 24, 1661-2, Thomas Gray, by deed, revokes the former uſes; and declares the ſame to himſelf and his heirs. Afterwards, Jan. 16 and 17, 1662-3, by leaſe and releaſe, Thomas Gray conveys the manor to himſelf for life; the remainder to his ſecond ſon George, and the firſt, ſecond, third, and fourth ſons of his body, and the heirs males of the body of ſuch ſons, &c. with remainders over. This Thomas dies, and his ſecond ſon George enters. It being doubted whether the ſettlement upon George was good or not, in regard his father was tenant in tail, and that therefore the lands ought to have deſcended upon Thomas the eldeſt ſon and heir of the body of Thomas the father: To prevent ſcruple; George Gray the ſecond ſon and Thomas the heir at law, Sept. 16, 1663, by their indenture, covenant to levy a fine of the manor to Hood and Lilly; declaring the uſes thereof to enure, firſt, for the confirming of ſeveral annuities to younger brothers for life, with power to diſtrain for non-payment, &c.; and then to the uſe of George Gray for life, without impeachment of waſte; the remainder to the firſt, ſecond, third, fourth, &c. ſons of his body, and the heirs males of their bodies; the remainder to the daughters of George, and the heirs of their bodies, under a proviſo, that, upon payment of £1500. if but one, and £2000. if more, their eſtate to be void; the remainder to Thomas, and the firſt, ſecond, third, fourth, &c. ſons of his body, and the heirs male of their bodies, with ſeveral remainders over; proviſo, giving power to George to make a jointure to a wife of lands not exceeding £200. a year; proviſo for George to make leaſes for ſeven years at half rent; proviſo for Thomas; and ſo for the reſt of the remainder men, being in poſſeſſion, to make jointures, &c. not exceeding £.200. a year; proviſo for George, during the joint lives of him and Thomas, by the conſent of Thomas, by deed, &c. to revoke or alter any of the uſes (except his wife's jointure for life); and to releaſe any new uſes, &c.; ſeveral proviſos granting annuities to younger ſons for life; with power to diſtrain, &c. ſo as they claim no other annuities by any former grant from Thomas the father. The fine levied in Michaelmas 1663, in purſuance of the deed. George Gray, by virtue of the proviſo giving him power to make a jointure to a wife, made a jointure to Sarah his wife for life of lands not exceeding £200. a year[9].

By the advice of three learned counſellors, ſerjeants Ellis, Walker, and Willimot, in 1670, this family diſpute was amicably adjuſted.

The before-mentioned Thomas Gray had four ſons. He purchaſed at Sutton Bonington the houſe and ten yard-lands heretofore belonging to Repton priory; and three yards-lands and a half from old Mr. Tate of Sutton. He diſinherited his eldeſt ſon for matching againſt his conſent; ſo his two youngeſt ſhared with the eldeſt[10]. George Gray, the ſecond ſon, died in 1699; and John Gray, the fourth ſon, who ſettled at Caſtle Donington, in 1713.

Langley Priory, but now and long ſince called Langley Hall, was bought from the Grays, in Auguſt 1686, for £7769. 17*s*. 6*d*. by Richard Cheſlyn, eſq. an eminent founder in London; who projected the Whitechapel water-works. This gentleman (ſon of Oliver and Jane Cheſlyn) was born April 24, 1634, at Foleshill, in the county of Warwick. He was appointed high-ſheriff for the county of Leiceſter 1695; but, on account of his advanced age, the king was pleaſed to amend the appointment, by naming his ſon William Cheſlyn in his ſtead.

Of Mr. Richard Cheſlyn (who died in 1717) there is in the dining-room at Langley, in good preſervation, a half length portrait, in a large flowing wig.

He was ſucceeded by his ſon Robert; whoſe ſon Richard, born at Langley July 18, 1717, was a barriſter of the Middle Temple, where he had chambers in Crown-office row; and, Sept. 24, 1745, on the ſurrender of William Hamilton, eſq. and paying an alienation fee of £300. was appointed remembrancer of the City of London, and regiſter of the Orphans' ſtock; which offices he ſurrendered April 18, 1758, on receiving back £3,300. the ſum inſured on them; and was ſucceeded by Braſs Croſby, eſq. afterwards an alderman and lord-mayor of London [2]. About 1770, Mr. Cheſlyn married Katharine, daughter of Thomas Alicock, of Lambley, gent. and widow of Philip-Harley Bainbrigge, eſq. of Lockington [3]. About the ſame period he expended near £5000. in plantations, gardens, and pleaſure-grounds; and made conſiderable additions to his eſtates, by purchaſing lands in Diſeworth and Caſtle Donington. His lady died June 9, 1792, aged 77, and was buried by her firſt huſband in Lockington church; and Mr. Cheſlyn dying Dec. 18, 1787, aged 73, was buried in the family vault at Diſeworth. An excellent portrait of him, by Wrighte, three-quarters length, is preſerved at Langley-hall. By his laſt will, he bequeathed Langley to his nephew, Richard Cheſlyn [4], eſq. and to his eldeſt ſon (under ſtrict ſettlement). Mr. Richard Cheſlyn is accordingly the preſent owner of the whole of the lordſhip, in which there is not a ſingle houſe except Langley hall [5]. He was born Feb. 16, 1771; and married Anne Barber, niece of Dr. Samuel Hutchinſon (lord biſhop of Killala 17 9—1781).

On entering this lordſhip from Tonge, the eye is much attracted by numerous fine old oaks; and the whole evidently appears to have been a park. The land is moſtly clay and ſpringy, except about 50 acres; and is more adapted for grazing and feeding than for corn. Near the houſe are two excellent ſprings; the one of uncommonly clear and excellent water; the other peculiarly valuable for medicinal properties, ſimilar to that of Keddleſton in Derbyſhire, being ſtrongly impregnated with chalybeate and ſulphur.

[1] "This Henry lord Codnor, much affecting the ſtudy of chemiſtry, obtained in 1463 a licence from the king, to practiſe the tranſmutation of metals by his philoſophical ſkill. How he ſped therein I cannot ſay: but, in conſideration of his many and great ſervices to the king, he obtained in 1473 a grant of all thoſe lands in the North of Ireland, called Le Cale, and of all the caſtles and lordſhips therein, as alſo of all Arde in that part of Ireland, to hold for the term of 40 years freely, without rendering any account; in the next year was retained by indenture to ſerve the king for one whole year in his wars of Normandy, and other parts of France, with 20 ſpears and 160 archers; and in 1483 had a grant of the manors of Oakham, Langham, and Egeſton, co. Rutland, Hengrave, Haverell, and Herſham, co. Suffolk, to hold to himſelf, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten." Dugd. Bar. Angl. vol. I. p. 712.—But this gift ended with his life; as appears by the following document: "The 10th of September, anno Domini 1492, I Henry lord Gray make my laſt will and teſtament. I will my body to be buryed in the chauncel of Our Lady in the Fryers of Aylesford. I give to my wyf Katherine half of my moveables; ſhe to have for her jointure Aylesford and Hoo hundred, in Kent, Thurrock Grey in Eſſex, Bytham Park, Stoking, and South Witham, in Lincolnſhire, Sapcote, and 3 pounds in Staunton, in Leiceſterſhire, Langwynte Baſſets, in Darbyſhire; and that ſhe have the rule of my three ſonnes till they be 18 yeres old. I owe to my couſin ſir Thomas Barrow xx*l*.; I gyve to the White Fryers of Nottingham the rent of Barton milles, with the new fiſhe garte, to fynde a fryer or preſt to kepe a free-ſchole, and the ſame fryer or prieſt to pray for my ſoule after my deceaſe, and for the ſoule of Margaret that was my wyf, my father's ſoule, and mother's ſoule, and for the ſoule of Katherine that was my wyf, which was the ducheſſe of Norffolk's daughter, and for all my kynne's ſowles. Alſo I will that Richard Gray, my baſtard ſonne, have my mannor of Ratclyff upon Trent in Nottinghamſhire, to him and the heires of his body lawfully begotten; if he dy without heires of his body, I will that it go to the two Henries, my baſtardes, to have to theim and to the heires of their bodyes lawfully begotten for ever; alſo I will that the ſame two Henries, my baſtardes, have the mannors of Touton and Barton in Nottinghamſhire, to theim and to their heires of their bodyes lawfully begotten for ever. If it happen the t'one dye without heir of his body, then the other to have all the whole lordſhippes for evermore. Alſo I will that little Harry my baſtarde, which is Katherine Fynderne's ſonne, have Cicely Charleton to his wyf; and I will that my couſin ſir Thomas Barrow pay a hundred poundes to the marriage of Richard Grey and the greater Harry my baſtardes, or elſe that the land of his part ſtand ſtill in feoffees hands till two hundred marks be gy'ne and payd to the marriage of the ſaid two children. I will that my wife have the rule of my three ſonnes till they be 18 yeres of age. Alſo I will that my couſyn Zouche delyver his ſonne and heire, accordinge to his wrytinge which my wyf hath the bill of; or elſe to pay ſix hundred marks of money to me or myne executors, to go to the payment of my debtes. And to my buryal, and perfourmance of my will at Aylesford, I will that Lentall part, and Newpart parte of my land; and that echone of my houſhold ſearvantes have an annuitie, or yerely fee, or rent, for tearme of theire lyves, goeng out of thoſe two partes yerely, &c. And yf any of myne heires will not fulfill this my laſt will, that then I will that theire part ſhall ſtand ſtill in my feoffees' and executors' hands for tearme of 40 yeres, to fulfill this my laſt will. The reſidue of my goodes I bequeath to Katherine my wif, Thomas the archbiſhop of York, my couſyn ſir Thomas Barrow, ſir John Babington, knight, John abbot of Darley, prior Richard of Lenton, Thomas prior of Newſtead, Thomas Leak, &c. whome I mak and ordeyne myne executors; and they to garre mak a tomb over me, lyk my lord Beaumonde's tombe of Sempringham. In witneſſe whereof, &c." Probatum fuit hoc teſtamentum 28 Octobris, anno Domini 1496." Dogget, quatern. 34.

[3] Including her paternal eſtate at Lambley (about £300. a year) this lady brought to Mr. Cheſlyn a fortune of £30,000. The Lambley eſtate, with moſt of her plate and perſonal property, ſhe left at her death to Mr. Dickens of Beverley, her next of kin, a power having been reſerved for that purpoſe in her ſettlement.

[4] Eldeſt ſon of Mr. Thomas Cheſlyn, now living at Diſeworth.

Langley-hall is ſituated on a very ſequeſtered ſpot, in a low ſituation; and has in the front of it a fine piece of water, with large pleaſure-grounds laid out in very good taſte by the late owner.

Plate CXVIII. ſhews the approach front, from a drawing taken by the Rev. Stebbing Shaw in 1801.

Moſt of the antient buildings are remaining, which belonged, no doubt, to the priory; but the middle part has been caſed over with ſtone about king William's time, and contains ſeveral good rooms, many family portraits, &c.; and on entering the houſe are obſerved other relicks of antient reſpectability.

"In a window of the tapeſtry room at Langley Hall ſtands the atchievement of William Pantulf; who for his coat-armour beareth Vert, two lions rampant, combatant, between five fleurs de lis Or, a bordure Sable, charged with entoyre of 12 bezants; enſigned with an eſquire-like helmet, mantled Gules, doubled Argent; and for his creſt, upon a crown Or, a leopard Argent paſſant, guardant, ſpotted Gules, Or and Azure, with flames iſſuing out of both corners of his mouth and both ears. To complete this atchievement, in a ſcroll underneath the ſhield, is this motto, GLORIA DEO. ALELVIA. VICTORIA. (Pl. CXVIII. fig. 2.) Underneath, in the ſame pane, theſe verſes, without points, falſe ſpelt, bad verſe, and barbarous Latin:

"Omnibus hoc notū cupio qui temporis hujus
Preſentis memores exiſtunt atque futuri,
Quod Williemis ego Pantulfus clarus in armis
Miles conceſſi Domino, Sanctæque Mariæ
De Langaleiâ, domuique ſuæ, pietatis amore,
Et domina Burga ſponſa mea, in cujus dota
Domus eſt fundata, concedit.
Omnia criſtata, galea, atque inſignia ſēper
Noſtra, ſicut ſoleant veteri de jure tenenda;
Rex dederat quæ olim Rogero muēre knowthus,
Pantulfo, qui miles erat, genitorque meorum,
Himanem gallum quod vicit cominus armis,
Rege et Gallorum paribus ſpectantibs illum,
Carta ut quam teneo nobis antiqua reliquit [1]."

Jan. 25, 1717-8, George Gray, of Caſtle Donington, filed a bill in Chancery, before lord chancellor Cowper, to recover this eſtate, under the ſettlement of his grand-father Thomas. A plea and anſwer was returned the 4th of November following. July 24, 1733, Mr. Bramſton, defendant's counſel, moved the court to diſmiſs the plaintiff's bill, he not having replied to the anſwer, or further proceeded in the cauſe; and it was thereon diſmiſſed with coſts accordingly.

At the aſſizes held at Leiceſter, Aug. 8, 1717, before Mr. Juſtice Tracey, a cauſe was tried; Robert Cheſlyn, eſq. plaintiff, againſt Thomas Bonſall and Joſeph Olderſhaw, defendants. The defendants, under authority of a warrant ſigned by ſir Thomas Parkyns and Thomas Hartopp, ſeized for payment to poors' levy; when, contrary to evidence and direction of the judge, a verdict was given for defendants; whereupon, on a motion for a new trial in the court of common pleas, it was granted; and, at the Lent aſſizes 1718, before a ſpecial jury, the cauſe was again tried, when a verdict was given for the plaintiff.

March 16, 1720, a deed was executed by the vicar and 24 of the principal inhabitants of Diſeworth, acknowledging Langley to be extraparochial; and ſtating it not to be liable to be aſſeſſed to poors' rates. Signed by John Swan, vicar, Thomas Bonſall, Joſeph Olderſhaw, Robert Mee, and 20 others.

The return to parliament in 1776, from Langley, reſpecting the poor, conſiſted only in one article:

"Expended in litigations, £1. 9*s*."

In 1783 the return was, "No aſſeſſment."

In 1786, Langley was returned "an extra-parochial place, having no charitable donations belonging to it."

This lordſhip is at preſent aſſeſſed to the land-tax £44. per annum; and few places have ſo much varied in this payment, as appears by the following warrants:

March 18, 1694, £36. Ambroſe Phillipps, William Tawling, Charles Farnham.

May 1699. A duplicate of the reſpective ſums, charged upon the different towns and hamlets within the hundred of Weſt Goſcote by act of parliament, Langley £36. John Wilſon, Thomas Babington.

1713. £22. J. Wilſon, Will. Phillipps, Henry Tate.

Univerſis ſancte eccleſie filiis J. Dei gratiâ dictus abbas de Geroldon, & R. eadem gratiâ prior de Kynelwrð eternum in Domino ſalutem. Diſcretioni veſtre ſignificamus nos mandatum domini pape Alexandri Tertii recepiſſe, in hec verba: "Alexander epiſcopus, ſervus ſervorum Dei, dilectis filiis abbati Geroldonie & priori de Kynelwrð ſalutem & apoſtolicam benedictionem. Ex tranſmiſſâ conqueſtione monialium de Langeleiâ noſtris inſonuit, quod canonici de Bredon prefatas moniales ordinis Ciſtertienſis profeſſas, exactione decimarum de terris quas propriis manibus & ſumptibus excolunt, contra tenorem privilegii Ciſtertienſis factam & prohibitionem noſtram, ſine ceſſatione fatigant; undequam non eſt a nobis in patientiâ tolerandum, ut privilegia fratribus Ciſtertienſibus ab apoſtolicâ ſede indulta temeritate qualibet violentur. Diſcretioni veſtre per apoſtolica ſcripta mandamus, quatenus, inquiſitâ diligentiùs veritate, niſi vobis conſtiterit quod moniales cum prefatis canonicis ſuper decimis quas requirunt ſpontè ac liberè compoſuerint, vel eas per xxx annos preſtiterint eiſdem canonicis, curetis, ex parte noſtrâ, arctiùs inhibere, ne prefatas mulieres ſuper hoc ulteriùs non fatigent; ceterum, ſi contra prohibitionem noſtram venire preſumpſerint, eos ſublato appellationis obſtaculo, cenſura eccleſiaſtica autoritate apoſtolicâ procellatis. Omnibus ſancte matris eccleſie filiis Iſolda Pantulf ſalutem. Noverit univerſitas veſtra me in viduitate conſtitutam, divine pietatis intuitu, pro ſalute anime mee, & anteceſſorum meorum, conceſſiſſe, & hac preſenti cartâ confirmâſſe, Deo & Sancte Marie, & monialibus de Langeleiâ, in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam, liberè & quietè ab omni ſeculari ſervicio, exactione, & impedimento, totum donum Willielmi Pantulf, avi mei, & aliorum anteceſſorum meorum dominorum de Langeleiâ collatum; viz. ex dono Willielmi Pantulf totum nemus de Langeleiâ, & quicquid idem Willielmus habebat a foſſato juxta fontem de Thoſtes uſque ad diviſam de Digeſworth & Edredeland, & quicquid inter predictos limites continetur, in boſco & plano, pratis, paſturis, conſuetudinibus, & libertatibus, & omnibus aiſiamentis; & quatuor bovatas terre in territorio de Tunge, & molendinum de Tunge, cum ſectâ & multurâ, & aliis pertinentiis, & communia totius nemoris & totius paſcue quod adjacet Tunge, & liberum pannagium propriis porcis ſuis; ſet & eccleſias de Sumerdebi & de Daleby, cum omnibus ad eaſdem eccleſias pertinentibus, & omnes alias libertates & res a predicto Willielmo predictis monialibus collatas; ex dono Burge avie mee, unam virgatam terre in Ketelby de dominico, cum thofto & omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, libera ab omni ſeculari exactione. Et, ut ego & heredes mei ſine dolo & machinatione aliqua predicta dona manuteneamus & defendamus, ego Iſolda Pantulf, ad honorem Dei & promotionem prefate domûs, pro me & heredibus meis, juravi in capitulo de Langeleiâ, pluribus ibi tunc preſentibus, me & heredes meos, pro poſſe noſtro, fideliter & firmiter hanc conceſſionem & confirmationem obſervaturos; & ego & heredes mei warantizabimus omnia predicta predictis ſanctemonialibus, contra omnes homines. Et, ut hac carta mea, donatio, & confirmatio, inconcuſſè permaneat, huic ſcripto munire & ſigillo meo roborare dignum duxi. Carta autem iſta facta fuit die Jovis prox' ante feſtum Sancte Margarete poſt mortem Walteri de Baſkervile domini mei, anno quo Ricardus de Mariſco conſecratus fuit in epiſcopum [2]. Hiis teſtibus; Ricardo de . . . . Hugone de Langeleiâ, Ricardo Pate, capellanis; Benedicto de Diſeworth, Johanne de Leſi, & Roberto Fregg, Petro de . . . . . Radulpho de . . . . Clemente de Grendale, & multis aliis.

Notum ſit omnibus tam preſentibus quam futuris, quod ego Willielmus Pate dono & concedo in perpetuam elemoſinam, pro ſalute anime mee & anime uxoris mee, & animarum patris & matris, & predeceſſorum meorum & infantium, & parentum & amicorum, Domino Deo, & Sancte Marie, & monialibus de Langeleiâ, id quod ad me pertinet de quadem parte terre, ſcilicet iiii acris, que conterminant ex unâ parte ad nemus earundem monialium, ſub molendino earundem, & ex aliâ parte conterminant ad campum de Wavertofte. His teſtibus; Ricardo Pate fratre ejus, canonico de Cale, Thomâ Pate fratre ſuo, Stephano de Richmund, Ricardo de Cubrei, Roberto Pate fratre domini, Willielmo Pate filio ejus, Thomâ fratre ejus, perſonâ de Donebri, dominâ Aliciâ uxore domini Willielmi Pate, Alredo prepoſito, magiſtro Rogero de Meſne Guarino, Willielmo de Podus, Hugone de Berewic, Radulpho filio Thome Pate, Henrico filio Gilberti Chriſt', Rogero ſacerdote de Wattone, Ranulfo fratre ejus, Radulfo Pellipario de Watton, & Ricardo filio Alredi.

Notum ſit omnibus tam preſentibus quam futuris, quod ego Robertus filius Nigelli dono & concedo in puram & perpetuam & liberam & quietam elemoſinam, pro ſalute anime mee, & animarum patris mei & matris, & parentum meorum, & amicorum & predeceſſorum, Sancte Marie & ſanctimonialibus de Langeleiâ, quantum ad me attinet, quandam particulam terre continentem quandam croftam in planicie, & partem dumecti quod inter illam croftam & nemus monialium; ex aliâ autem parte illam particulam terre ad ſicham de Wavertoft, ſub molendino ſanctimonialium; & continet iſta particula terre data eis iiii acras terre. His teſtibus; Willielmo Pate juvene, Roberto Pate avunculo, Rogero Pate, Punfrew, Simone filio Widonis, Ricardo de Biſelviâ, Willielmo de Grennullâ, Thomâ perſonâ de Donebri, Rogero de Menewarin, Rogero Piſcatore de Cuſinton, Rogero capellano de Waltonâ, Ranulfo fratre ejus, Henrico fratre ejuſdem.

Hec eſt compoſitio facta inter Gervaſium priorem perpetuum de Bredon & canonicos ibidem Deo ſervientes ex unâ parte, & Roeſiam prioriſſam de Langeleiâ & conventum ſanctemonialium ibidem Deo ſervientium ex aliâ; viz. quod dicti prior & canonici remiſere dictis prioriſſe & ſanctemonialibus omne jus & clameum omnium decimarum de terris, pratis, paſcuis, molendinis, nemoribus, hortis, nutrimentis ſuorum propriorum animalium, que tempore hujus compoſitionis habuerunt in parochiâ de Bredon. Si vero poſt tempus hujus compoſitionis aliquas adepte fuerint poſſeſſiones in eadem parochiâ, plenariè perſolvent matri eccleſie omnes decimas debitas & conſuetas, vel alio modo ſatisfacient, omni conſtitutione & appellatione remotis. Pro iſtâ vero remiſſione & quietâ clamatione dederunt prioriſſa & ſanctimoniales dictis priori & canonicis ſeptem marcas argenti, & unum toftum in Diṫheſworth, quod fuit Willielmi Both, cum unâ acrâ terre eidem tofto propinquiùs adjacente. Ut hec autem compoſitio robur optineat in perpetuum, ad inſtantiam partium, una cum ſigillo earum, domini Willielmus cancellarius Lincolnie eccleſie, & Robertus archidiaconus Leiceſtrie, huic ſcripto ſigna ſua appoſuerunt. Hiis teſtibus; Mattheo & Petro Dei gratiâ de Leiceſt' & de Oſelveſton abbatibus; Gaufrido decano Leiceſt' & Rogero Blundo capellanis, Alano Coſteyn, Roberto de Yolgrave, Thomâ de Crek, Roberto de Werebet, Simone de Colleſhull, clericis, & multis aliis.

Omnibus Chriſti fidelibus preſens ſcriptum viſuris vel audituris, Johannes prior & conventus Sancti Oſwaldi de Noſtel ſalutem in Domino. Noveritis nos ratam & gratam in perpetuum habere compoſitionem factam inter fratrem Gervaſium rectorem eccleſie noſtre de Bredonâ, concanonicum noſtrum, & fratres noſtros ibidem cum eo commorantes, ex unâ parte, & Royſiam prioriſſam & conventum de Langeleiâ ex aliâ, ſuper decimis ab eiſdem prioriſſâ & conventu per eundem Gervaſium exactis, prout continetur pleniùs in ſcriptis inter eaſdem confectis; &, in hujus rei teſtimonium, preſenti ſcripto ſigillum capituli noſtro appoſuimus. Actum anno Gratie mileſimo tricenteſimo viceſimo nono, apud Sanctum Oſwaldum. Teſte capitulo noſtro.

Robertus [3] Dei gratiâ Lincolnienſis epiſcopus univerſis catholice eccleſie filiis ſalutem. Cum ex fidelium Dei devotione, alique ancille Chriſti beneficia percipiunt, noſtre incumbit ſollicitudini, & eas in eiſdem fovere, & beneficia ipſa prout facultas ſuppetit immutilata conſervare: inde eſt quod dilectis filiabus noſtris, monialibus in nemore de Langaleiâ Omnipotentis obſequio mancipatis, eccleſiam de Sumerdeby, & eccleſiam de Dauby, cum ſuis pertinentiis, & totum nemus de Langaleiâ, ex dono & perpetuâ aſſignacione Willielmi Pratul [4] heredumque ſuorum, ad abbaciam in honore beatiſſime Virginis Marie conſtruendam, & illam partem dominii ſui de Langaleiâ quam ipſius Willielmi carta exprimit, cum iiii bovatis terre in Tungâ juxta prenominatum dominium; cum omnibus que in preſenciâ ex donatione jamdicti Willielmi optinuerunt, auctoritate quâ fungimur epiſcopali, in perpetuam eleemoſinam, ſicut carte advocatorum teſtantur, concedimus, confirmamus, & ſigilli noſtri atteſtatione communimus; ſalvâ in omnibus Lincolnienſis eccleſie dignitate. Teſtibus; Ricardo abbate Legreceſtrie, Roberto canonico fratre abbatis, magiſtro Bernardo, Willelmo capellano epiſcopi, Laurencio, Gunfrido ſacerdote, Radulfo preſbitero de Sancto Leonardo [1].

Sciant preſentes & futuri, quod ego Robertus Mulcher de Tungâ, anno Gratie MCCXLVI, die Januarii XVII, remiſi & quietum clamavi, pro me & heredibus meis, Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Langeleiâ juxta Bredonam, & monialibus ibidem Deo ſervientibus, totum jus quod habui, vel habere potui, in omni communiâ nemoris quod vocatur Langeley clauſi, foſſato ante predictum diem conjuncti curie dictarum monialium ex parte occidentali. Ego verò predictus Rogerus, pro me & heredibus meis, dicte domui iſtam meam quietam clamantiam & remiſam contra omnes mortales in perpetuum warrantizabimus & defendemus. Ad majorem hujus rei ſecuritatem, preſentem cartam ſigilli mei munimine roboravi. His teſtibus; Hugone de Dicheſworth, Willielmo de Threngeſton, Willielmo Taylebot, Rogero Brien, Roberto de Gurmund lv, Hugone Swen, Ricardo Parmentario de Beleton, Willielmo de Wyvelleſton, & Rogero de Wyvelleſton, Rogero le Granger de Dicheſworth, Roberto le Granger de Wavertoft, & multis aliis.

Univerſis Chriſti fidelibus hoc ſcriptum viſuris vel auditturis, Iſabella prioriſſa de Langeleiâ & ejuſdem loci conventus ſalutem in Domino. Noveritis nos dediſſe, conceſſiſſe, & hâc preſenti cartâ meâ confirmâſſe Henrico de Schypton toftum noſtrum in villâ de Bellegravâ, quod jacet juxta toftum domini Harnaldi de Boys, quod quidem toftum Robertus Preſt quondam tenuit, habendum & tenendum de domo noſtrâ dicto Henrico & heredibus ſuis ſive aſſignatis ſuis, exceptis viris religioſis & dominis feodi, liberè, quietè, benè & in pace, reddendo inde annuatim xxs̃. & ad Paſcha xiiđ. pro omni ſeculari ſervicio, actione, & demandâ. Nos vero dictum toftum dicto Henrico & heredibus ſuis, ſeu ſuis aſſignatis (ſicut prenominatum eſt) contra omnes gentes warrantizabimus & acquietabimus in perpetuum. Et, ut hec noſtra donatio, conceſſio, & confirmatio, rata & ſtabilis permaneat, in cujus teſtimonium huic ſcripto ſigillum noſtrum commune fecimus apponi. His teſtibus; Petro filio Rogeri de Leic', Willielmo Caſteleyn de Humberſton, Waltero filio domini de Bellegravâ, Willielmo le Strang' ejuſdem ville, & Laurentio domino ejuſdem ville, & aliis.

Univerſis Chriſti fidelibus hoc ſcriptum viſuris vel audituris, Iſabella de Langeleiâ & ejuſdem loci conventus ſalutem in Domino. Noveritis quod cum nos tradideremus Henrico de Schipton totam terram noſtram in territorio de Bellagravâ, cum omnibus pertinentiis ejuſdem terre infra villam & extra, habendam & tenendam eidem Henrico, a feſto Sancti Michaelis, anno Domini MCCLI, uſque in XX annos continuè completos, pro xxs̃. annuatim reddendo inde Rogero de Bellagravâ & heredibus ſuis, ſecundum tenorem contentorum in cyrographis confectis inde inter nos & predictum Henricum; nos, infra dictum terminum, ſcilicet, anno Domini MCCLX, dedimus, & per cartam noſtram confirmavimus, predicto Henrico unum toftum pertinentem ad predictam terram, quod ſcilicet toftum jacet in villâ de Bellegravâ, juxta toftum domini Ernaldi de Boys, pro duobus ſolidis inde annuatim reddendis nobis, ſecundum cartam quam nos inde fecimus predicto Henrico, & de prenominatis predicto Henrico ſingulis annis dictis terminis, a die quo dedimus eidem Henrico dictum toftum, decem & octo denarios; ita quod nos non poterimus neque debemus de cetero infra dictum terminum de prememoratis xxs̃. annuis habere vel exigere niſi tantum xvis̃. & viđ. annuatim; ſalvis nobis duobus ſolidis annui redditûs de predicto tofto ultra predict' xvis̃. viđ. annuatim nobis reddendis. In hujus rei teſtimonium huic ſcripto ſigillum noſtrum appoſuimus. His teſtibus; Petro filio Rogeri de Leic', Willielmo Caſtelleyn de Humberſtun, Waltero filio domini de Bellagravâ, Willielmo Serviente de eadem, Ricardo filio Symonis de eadem, Laurentio ad Aquam de eadem, & aliis.

Omnibus Chriſti fidelibus, N. abbas de Stonliâ, & M. de Coventre, & R. de Kenilworthe, priores, eternam in Domino ſalutem. Univerſitati veſtre notum eſſe volumus, quòd cauſam que vertebatur inter moniales de Langeleiâ & canonicos de Bredonâ, ſuper decimis unius carucate terre quam habent prefate moniales in Wiveleſtonâ, & ſuper violentâ manuum injectione in moniales, ut dicebant, factâ, de mandato ſupremi pontificis ſuſcepimus audiendam & fine canonico terminandam. Cùm igitur partes in preſentiâ noſtrâ eſſent conſtitute, tandem controverſia inter partes mota litteris ratihabicionis conventûs Sancti Oſwaldi de Noſtle, & litteris ratihabicionis conventûs de Langeliâ, nobis porrectis, hoc fine quievit. Quòd prefate moniales omnes decimas de dominio de Tungâ, quod Willielmus Pantul domûs de Langeliâ fundator eis contulit, liberè & quietè ſine omni contradictione canonicorum poſſidebunt. Similitèr de duobus toftis pertinentibus ad domum ſuam, quando eas propriis ſumptibus & laboribus excolent, eâdem libertate pacificè poſſidebunt. Canonici vero de Bredonâ decimas de carucatâ terre, quam predicte moniales habent in Wiveleſton, de quibus eciam controverſia mota fuit in preſentiâ, licet terram illam ſumptibus ſuis & laboribus moniales coluerint, liberè & plenariè ſine earum contradictione percipient. Similiter decimas de omnibus terris in parochiâ de Bredonâ conſtitutis, ſi fortè de cetero predicte moniales eas quocumque modo adquiſierint, non obſtante earundem privilegio, in perpetuum, exceptis novalibus, cum omni integritate percipient. Hec tranſactio utriuſque partis juramento eſt roborata; que ut perpetuam habeat firmitatem, nos eam ſigillorum noſtrorum appoſitione dignum duximus confirmare [2].

Sciant omnes tam preſentes qui futuri ſunt, quòd domina Baſilia de Holmiâ dedit & conceſſit Deo & Sancte Marie & monialibus de Langeleiâ, dimidiam millenam anguillarum, vel tres ſolidos annuatim perſolvendos de piſcaturâ ſuâ de Stoches, infra VIII dies prime ebdomade Quadrageſime. Hoc concedit Rogerius filius ejus primogenitûs; & mater dedit & conceſſit. His teſtibus; Roaldo de Kembeſtonâ, Roberto de Heighiajâ, Galfrido de Meringes, Roberto Haite, Walterio filio Ricardi filii Ulketel, Henrico de Spicheſvurhâ, Rogerio filio Galfridi de Geſſingues, Hervico capellano domûs, Godwino, Roberto cementario, Willielmo de Wiveleſtonâ, Haheno, Ranulfo clerico de Wattonâ [3].

Omnibus ad quos preſens ſcriptum pervenerit Stephanus de Segrave ſalutem. Noveritis me dediſſe, & hâc cartâ meâ confirmâſſe, Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Langeleiâ, & ſanctimonialibus ibidem Deo ſervientibus, viginti & ſeptem acras terre in Shorte Langeleiâ, menſuratas per perticam XVIII pedum & dimidie, que jacent juxta nemus predictarum ſanctimonialium, & quam prius habuerunt de feodo de . . . . . . uſque ad ſemitam que vocatur Nonneſtigh verſus Occidentem, reddendo inde annuatim mihi & heredibus meis xvs̃. & xiđ. ad IIII terminos, ſcilicet, IIIIs̃. ad Paſcha, & IIIIs̃. in Nativitate beati Johannis Baptiſte, & IIIIs̃. ad feſtum Sancti Michaelis, & IIIs̃. & IXđ. ad Natale Domini, pro omnibus ſecularibus ſerviciis. Et ego & heredes mei predictum tenementum predictis ſanctimonialibus in perpetuum warrantizabimus, pro poſſe noſtro, liberè & integrè & plenariè, abſque omni diſturbatione. Et ſi fortè contigerit, quod abſit, quod ego vel heredes mei terram predictam per judicium curie perdamus . . . . eis eſcambium faciemus, ſed tantummodo . . . . bladi terre illius eis perſolvemus, ſalvâ mihi & heredibus meis predictâ firmâ noſtrâ. Teſtibus his; Hugone Diſpenſatore, Thomâ Omnibus ad quos preſens ſcriptum pervenerit Nicholaus de Segrave ſalutem. Noveritis me dediſſe, conceſſiſſe, & hoc preſenti ſcripto confirmâſſe, Deo & eccleſie Sancte Marie de Langeleiâ juxta Bredon, & monialibus ibidem Deo ſervientibus, xv ſolidatos redditûs, & novem denarios, quos dicte moniales domino Gilberto patri meo ſolebant reddere annuatim pro viginti & ſeptem acris terre jacentibus in Schorte Langeleiâ, que vocatur Keggeworthwode; quas quidem acras volo & concedo quod dicte moniales habeant in puram & perpetuam eleemoſinam, de me & heredibus meis, liberè, integrè, & plenariè, abſque omni diſturbatione mei vel heredum meorum, ſalvâ mihi & heredibus meis, pro dicto tenemento, unam libram piperis annuatim in vigiliâ Sancti Andree Apoſtoli in perpetuum. Et ut hec mea donatio, conceſſio, & confirmatio, rata & ſtabilis in perpetuum permaneat, huic ſcripto ſigillum meum appoſui. Hiis teſtibus; domino Ricardo de Torp, Philippo de Colevill, Stephano de Nevill, militibus; Hugone de Dicheſworth, Roberto de Gurmundel de eadem, Ricardo filio de eadem, Johanne filio Geraudi de eadem, & aliis.

Sciant preſentes & futuri, quod ego Nicholaus de Segrave dedi, conceſſi, & hâc preſenti cartâ meâ confirmavi, monialibus Sancte Marie de Langeleiâ juxta Bredon, iiii culturas terre jacentes in Kegworth wode, inter nemus de Langeleiâ & campum de Doninton; quas quidem iiii culturas Johannes Punchardon de Doninton quondam de me tenuit; habend' & tenend', de me & heredibus meis, dictis monialibus & ſuccetricibus earum, liberè, quietè, benè, & in pace, reddendo inde annuatim mihi & heredibus meis viginti & octo ſolidos, ad duos anni terminos annuatim ſolvendos; ſcilicet, ad feſtum Sancti Michaelis xivs. & ad Paſcha xivs. pro omni ſeculari actione & demandâ. Et ego verò dictus Nicholaus de Segrave & heredes mei dictas iiii culturas terre, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, predictis monialibus, pro dicto ſervicio, contra omnes gentes warantizabimus, acquietabimus, & defendemus in perpetuum. Et, ut hec mea donatio, conceſſio, & carte mee confirmatio rata ſit & ſtabilis, preſenti ſcripto ſigillum meum appoſui. Hiis teſtibus; domino Willielmo Patrick, domino Stephano de Nevill, Roberto de Gurmundel, Roberto filio . . . . de Kegworth, Simone de Sileby, Willielmo de Wildero, & aliis. Apud Gerondoniam.

Omnibus ſancte matris eccleſie filiis hoc preſens ſcriptum viſuris vel audituris, Robertus de Ros, dominus de Beauver, ſalutem in Domino. Sciatis me, pro ſalute anime mee, & anteceſſorum & ſucceſſorum meorum, conceſſiſſe & confirmâſſe, pro me & heredibus meis in perpetuum, Deo & eccleſie beate Marie de Langeley juxta Bredon, & monialibus ibidem Deo ſervientibus & ſervituris, in perpetuam elemoſinam, novem virgatas terre jacentes in territoriis de Barkeby & de Torp, cum omnibus ſuis pertinentiis, infra dictas villas & extra, quas habent de dono & feſſiamento domini Petri de Lincoln, de feudo meo de honore de Barkeby; habend' & tenend' predictis monialibus & ſuccetricibus earum in perpetuum, benè & in pace, & in perpetuam elemoſinam, faciendo inde per annum mihi & heredibus meis in perpetuum omnia ſervicia forinſeca debita & conſueta pertinentia ad portionem predicti tenementi. Et, quod predicte moniales & ſuccetrices earum non diſtringantur per me vel per heredes meos in perpetuum pro aliquo ſervicio faciendo, niſi tantummodo pro ſerviciis forinſecis pertinentibus ad portionem tenementi predicti, relaxavi etiam & quietum clamavi, pro me & heredibus meis, predictis monialibus & ſuccetricibus earum in perpetuum, ſectam curie & mee & heredum meorum de Beauver, quam de eis exigebam pro tenemento predicto. In cujus rei teſtimonium huic preſenti ſcripto ſigillum meum appoſui. His teſtibus; domino Johanne de Waus, domino Alexandro Boſun tunc ſeneſcallo dicti domini Roberti de Ros, Roberto de Ruſſeton clerico, Johanne de Helpeſtone tunc conſtabulario caſtelli de Beauver, Thomâ de Lincolniâ, Gerardo de Hamilton, Waltero Gerond' de Barkeby, & aliis [1].

Univerſis preſentes litteras inſpecturis, Oliverus permiſſione divinâ Lincolnienſis epiſcopus ſalutem in Auctore ſalutis. [3] The whole of Sweeting's alley, near the Royal Exchange, belongs to the Cheſlyn family: it was left them by a relation of the name of Sweeting, probably by this lady. Before the fire of London, this whole alley contained but one houſe, which belonged to Mr. Sweeting, a merchant.

LOCKINGTON.

This village, containing upwards of 1700 acres of very old incloſure, conſiſting of a hilly, rich, mixed ſoil, is pleaſantly ſituated in the uttermoſt North angle of the ſhire, in the confines of the counties of Derby and Nottingham; near to the confluence of the Trent (by which it is bounded on the North); and of the Soar (which ſkirts it on the Eaſt). On the South of it is Kegworth, on the Weſt Diſeworth, and on the North-weſt Donington. It is ſeven miles from Loughborough, whence the turnpike-road paſſes through this lordſhip to Derby, which is 10 miles diſtant.

Neither this lordſhip nor its chapelry of Hemington occur in Domeſday. They were at that period, perhaps, included in the valuation of Kegworth, as parcel of the ſuperior manor of Loughborough, at that time the property of earl Hugo. It is likely alſo that ſome part of Lockington may have been deſcribed in the general ſurvey under Diſeworth.

The firſt poſſeſſor of whom we have any notice is Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter; who gave the rectory of Lockington, with the ſite of his manſion-houſe and divers lands here, to the abbot and convent of St. Mary de Pratis at Leiceſter, of his foundation; and in 1220 they poſſeſſed the church to their own uſe, with the greateſt part of the lands in the whole pariſh.

On the partition of the earl of Leiceſter's lands, Lockington became the property of Roger de Quency earl of Winton, who, in 1270, died ſeiſed of half a knight's fee in Lockington, which the abbot of Leiceſter held in free alms[1].

At this time Lockington conſiſted of two manors; one of them the property of the abbot of Leiceſter; the other poſſeſſed in equal moieties by Roger Baſſet and Simon Senville.

In the Itinerary of 1280, Lockington, Hemington, Caſtle Donington, and Diſeworth, anſwered collectively as one vill.

Of the laſt-mentioned manor, which was ſituated on the South ſide of the town, one moiety was given to the abbey by Reginald Baſſet; the other moiety was purchaſed from Simon Senville, by abbot Malverne, about 1291, for 600 marks[2].

In 1297, Edmund earl of Lancaſter, the king's brother, held at his death divers lands at Lockington[3].

On the 2d day of June, 1300, ad inſtanciam Agnetis de la Grace, domicelle Regine, the king granted liberty of free-warren to the abbot and convent of Leiceſter in all their demeſne lands at Leiceſter, Lockington, &c. Teſtibus; venerabilibus fratribus A. Dunelm', W. Coventr' & Leichfield', epiſcopis; Guidone de Bello Campo, comite Warr'; Adomaro de Valenciâ, Hugone le Deſpenſor, Roberto de Monte Alto, Willielmo Montagu, Rogero de Mortuo Mari, Johanne de Moun, & aliis. Dat' per manum noſtram apud Kenelworth, ſecundo die Junii[4].

Jan. 31, 1300-1, king Edward I. granted to Simon de Senville and his heirs a like liberty of free-warren in all their demeſne lands at Lockington. Hiis teſtibus; Johanne de Warennâ comite Surrie; Adomaro de Valentiâ; Johanne de Britanniâ; Hugone Le Deſpenſer; Hugone de Veere; Willielmo de Leyburne; Waltero de Bello Campo, ſeneſcallo hoſpitii noſtri; Guidone de Ferre juniore; Johanne de Bitteturte; & aliis. Dat' per manum noſtram apud Lynlilon, xxxi° die Januarii[5].

In 1309, Peter de Greſley held free-warren in Greſley, Lockington, Durandeſthorp, Huckleyen, Swartlincote, Caldwell, and Norton, in the counties of Derby and Leiceſter; Morton, Kingſton, Hughekeſdon, in Staffordſhire; and Toft in Norfolk[6].

In 1313, the abbot of Leiceſter held half a knight's fee in Lockington of Alan la Zouch, deceaſed[7].

In 1328, Robert Holland, at his death, poſſeſſed, as of the right and inheritance of Maud his wife, the moiety of one knight's fee, with the appurtenances, in Lockington, value £20. which the abbot of Leiceſter held[8].

The following abſtracts of deeds relative to Lockington are from the originals, in the poſſeſſion of Adam Wolley, junior, eſq. of Matlock.

1. Thomas, the ſon of Robert, the ſon of Robert, the ſon of Ralph de Lockington (by indenture ſans date), demiſed and confirmed to Henry de Petiſſo, dwelling in Lockington, and Alducia le Flag his wife, and Richard the ſon of the ſaid Henry and Alducia, and their aſſigns, for the term of their lives, and the life of the ſurvivor, and one year afterwards, half a toft, two acres of land, and four doles of meadow, lying diſperſed in Lockington aforeſaid (in the ſeveral places particularly deſcribed in the deed). Witneſſes; Johanne ad fontem de Lockington, Henrico de Cranford de eadem, Thomâ de Noreis de eadem, Rogero de Pontefracto de Keggeworth, Ricardo Godrick de eadem, & aliis[9].

2. Henry de Cranford of Lockington (by his deed-poll ſans date) granted and confirmed to Maud, the relict of Fulco de Noreis of Lockington, her heirs and aſſigns, two roods of arable land lying in the fields of Lockington. Witneſſes; Willielmo le Savage de Lockington, Johanne de Stocton de eadem, Roberto filio Roberti filii Radulphi de eadem, Rogero Hamund de eadem, Walib' Lacy de eadem, & aliis[10].

3. John de Spondon, chaplain, (by his deed-poll, dated at Lockington on Saturday next after the feaſt of the Annunciation of the bleſſed Mary the Virgin 1 Edward I. 1272.) granted and confirmed to Simon Savage, of Loc[illegible]on, his heirs and aſſigns, one meſſuage in the town of Lockington, lying between a lane of the lord abbot of Leiceſter and a tenement which was formerly Ivo de Gurmerdeſſey's, and one yard-land, with the reverſion of the dower of Emma le Savage in the fields of Lockington. Witneſſes; Thomâ le Noreys de Lockington, Thomâ de Cranford de eadem, Radulpho le Ward de eadem, Johanne de Brour de Hemington, Oſberto de Langeton de eadem, & aliis[11].

4. Robert de Wodecote, of Lockington, and Alice his wife, Margery de Stocton and Emma de Stocton, of the ſame place, (by their deed-poll, dated at Lockington, on Wedneſday next before the feaſt of St. Mark the Evangeliſt, 2 Edward III. 1329) granted and confirmed to Thomas le Noreis, his heirs and aſſigns, all their right and claim in three acres of arable land, lying diſperſed in the fields of Lockington. Witneſſes; Thomâ de Craunford de Lokington, Galfrido de Cranford de eadem, Radulpho le Savage de eadem, Ricardo le Deye de eadem, Simone Savage de eadem, & aliis[12].

In 1346, the abbot of Leiceſter (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 12*s.* 4*d.* for a third part of one knight's fee in Lockington, parcel of the honour of Winton[13].

John the ſon of Ralph Savage of Lockington (by his deed-poll, dated at Lockington on All Souls' day, Witneſſes; Johanne de Wodecote, Thomâ Milner, Henrico Bonny ſeniore, Henrico de Langton, Johanne Pollart, Nicholao Brown, & aliis[1].

In 1361, Henry Plantagenet, duke of Lancaſter, at his death was ſeiſed of one knight's fee in Lockington, which the abbot of Leiceſter held[2].

In 1408, William Roby of Donington and Robert Fleychar were fined two ſhillings, for deſtroying hares and rabbets in an incloſure within the free-warren of the abbot and convent of Leiceſter[3].

About the year 1410, the abbot and convent had a grant from John Burghill, biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield, of the little iſland of Sandholme, then ſeparated from Lockington by the Trent[4].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Lockington was rated at *£*1. 11*s.* 6¾*d.*; and in the ſubſidy of 1445 at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 2*s.* 8½*d.*

Both the manors of Lockington, with nearly the whole of the townſhip[6], continued to be poſſeſſed by the abbot and convent of Leiceſter till their diſſolution; and the following copious extracts from their Rentals and Regiſters will ſhew the ſeveral particulars of their property, and the names of the ſeveral tenants.

"Habemus in Lokynton eccleſiam in propriis uſibus, cum decimis garbarum, bladorum, feni, lini, & canabi, pannagii, & vendicionis nemoris, &c. ex dono fundatoris noſtris. Nota, pro XXX s̄. prius receptis de comite Leyc’, de rationabili auxilio pro filiâ ſuâ maritandâ, pro manerio de Lokynton, & modò nobis reſolutis, ſicut patet in Rotulo Johannis Barkby.

Et nota quod ſcribitur in eodem Rotulo, ‘ Solvitur in Scaccario Domini Regis per Adam de Cradley per copiam recordi de relevio quod calumniatur a domino Rege, unde ſit placitum in curiâ Regis, IIII đ.’

Habemus quietam clamationem Benedicti de Stapulford de duabus virgatis terre cum pertinentiis ſuis; & de medietate unius toſti in Lokynton, quas exigebat de nobis a curiâ đni regis per breve de recto.

Habemus quietam clamationem Ricardi Aleyn de Lokynton de V rodis & dimidiâ terre cum pertinentiis in Lokynton.

Habemus, ex dono Reginaldi filii Ivonis de Gurmundley de Dyſeworth, V buttas & I foreram terre arabilis, cum pertinentiis, jacentes inter cimiterium eccleſie & manerium noſtrum, in eſcambium pro tribus ſelionibus terre arabilis jacentibus ultra le Radeweye.

Habemus quietam clamacionem Lecie uxoris Ivonis de Gurmundley de Dyſeworth, de V ſelionibus & I forerâ terre arabilis in Lokynton, jacentibus inter eccleſiam & manerium noſtrum.

Habemus cartam Johannis Attewell de Lokynton, W. Savage de eadem, H. de Cranford, T. filii ejuſdem, T. le Norys, Roberti le Menant, W. filii Agnetis, Stephani de Diſworth, T. filii Roberti, Radulphi le Warde; per quam cartam conceſſerunt nobis quod poſſumus liberè & quietè includere & foſſare in clauſo & ſeparali, in perpetuum habere & tenere, totum culturam que vocatur le Kyrkwong in Lokynton, cum omnibus terris que ſunt inter cimiterium eccleſie & manſum vicarie ex parte unâ, & manerium noſtrum ex alterâ, & cum totâ paſturâ que vocatur Enyman, qualitercunque nobis meliùs viderimus expedire.

Habemus cartam Lecie quondam uxoris Ivonis de Gurmundley, & Reginaldi filii ejuſdem Ivonis, per quam conceſſerunt nobis quod poſſumus liberè & quietè includere, conſoſſare, &c. omnia, ut in predictâ cartâ Johannis Attewell, W. Savage, &c.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Amicie filie Walteri de cimiterio de Lokynton, unum toftum cum crofto quod jacet ex orientali parte eccleſie juxta manerium noſtrum.

Mem’ quod cum contentio fieret inter abbatem Leyc’ & Thomam le Menant de Lokynton de unâ acrâ terre que jacet in le Weſtmor & in Lincroft, in hunc modum contentio quievit; videlicet, quod dicti abbas & conventus permittant dictum Thomam & heredes ſuos tenere prenominatam terram, ſolvendo eis annuatim unum obulum argenti.

Habemus quietam clamationem Thome le Menant de Lokynton de unâ virgatâ terre, cum pertinentiis, extra unam acram terre jacentem en le Weſtmor & in Lincroft; quam virgatam terre Reginaldus Savage quondam tenuit.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Albini de Hemynton, unam ſelionem terre arabilis, cum pertinentiis, jacentem ex parte boreali cimiterii eccleſie de Lokynton, quam dedit nobis & communitati ville de Lokynton.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono & feoffamento Johannis Twywell, vicarii de Lokynton, licentiâ domini regis, & domini ducis Lancaſtrie petitione & conceſſu, unum cotagium quondam Henrici Hemyngton, & unam bovatam terre quondam Johannis Wodecote, cum pertinentiis ſuis.

Habemus ibi, ex perquiſito fratris Willielmi Charyte, unam virgatam terre quondam Willielmi Wyllot, poſtea Ricardi Langton capellani; & redd’ per annum XIIII s̄. VIII đ.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono & feoffamento Johannis Harleſton capellani & Ricardi Reynold, I virgatam terre, cum pertinentiis, quondam Ricardi Langton capellani, ut in cartâ XVIII^{a} II libri de Chartwary per fratrem W. Charyte.

Habemus ibi, de perquiſito abbatis & conventûs, & ex feoffamento Thome Harby, Ricardi Reynolde, Johannis Whetley, &c. omnia terras & tenementa, prata, paſcua, &c. que ipſi priùs habuerunt ex dono & feoffamento Radulphi Meynell; pro quibus ſolvimus dicto Radulpho XVI lī. & que terre, tenementa, &c. tenebant de nobis pro ſervicio VIII s̄. IIII đ. ut in cartâ XXX^{a} II libri de Chartwary.

Mem’ quod ordinatum fuit in plenâ curiâ, in feſto Sancti Edwardi Regis, anno regni regis Henrici Quarti XIII tent’, quod nullus tenens ſeminaret ſemen frumenti in campo piſarum vel in campo bruato, ſub penâ forisfacture ſic ſeminantis II đ.

Amerciamenta eorum qui fregerunt warennam noſtram ibidem, anno regni regis Henrici Quarti nono.

De W. Roby de Donynton & de Roberto Fleychar, quia deſtruxerunt lepores & cuniculos in ſeparabili infra warennam, II s̄.

Notandum quod habemus libertatem piſcandi per totam aquam de Trent juxta terram noſtram quociens & quandocunque ibi piſcari voluerimus, cum quibuſcunque retibus & ſagenis, dummodo dominus abbas, celararius, theſaurarius, vel ſubcelararius ſunt ibi preſentes, &c. ſicut patet in compoſicione inter epiſcopum Lichf’ & Coventr’ & nos. Et per eandem compoſicionem tenentes noſtri de Lokyngton habent libertatem ad piſcandum in eâdem aquâ, cum ſchowadys, borrokes, & pyches, ita quod nobis vendant aliquos piſces ibidem ſic captos, &c. ut in compoſicione quintâ ſecundi libri de Chartwary.

Mem’ quod ſolebamus aquam de Sorâ apud Lokynton ad firmam locare, ſicut patet in Geryn, & in rentali Galfridi de Sallow, & in aliis rentalibus.

Mem’ quod nos conceſſimus, & per cartam noſtram confirmavimus, Waltero homini noſtro de Lokynton I toftum ſibi & heredibus ſuis, illud quod W. Clericus de nobis tenuit; reddendo nobis annuatim XII đ.

Item conceſſimus & confirmavimus Waltero clerico de Sneyſton & heredibus ſuis II placeas in Lokynton, que jacent inter toftum Ricardi Brin & Ricardi Weſton, quarum una continet XIII perticas in longitudine, VIII in latitudine, reddend’ II s̄.

Mem’ quod Ricardus filius Bartholomei de Lokynton remiſit & quietum clamavit Johanni de Langeton & heredibus ſuis homagium & ſervicium quod ſibi debuit pro tenemento quod de ipſo tenuit, faciendo abbati Leyc’ homagium & ſervicium; ſcilicet, I libram cumini, & I denarium de incremento.

Item idem Ricardus dedit & conceſſit predicto J. Langeton & heredibus ſuis I virgatam terre cum tofto, &c.; illam ſcilicet virgatam terre quam Reginaldus Baſſet dedit predicto Bartholomeo patri ſuo pro homagio & ſervicio ſuo, habend’ & tenend’, &c.; reddendo inde annuatim ſibi & heredibus ſuis I libram cumini, & I denarium de incremento.

Decime de Lokynton & Hemyngton redd’ XLV lī.

Terre dominicales conventûs, CXVIII acre, reddebant XV lī. XVII s̄.; modò VI lī.

Mem’ quod abbas Leyc’ tenet omnia terras & tenementa ſua in Lokynton in puram & perpetuam elemoſinam, & non per ſervicium militare, de omnibus auxiliis regum quieta, ſicut patet in quaterno de auxiliis dandis pro primogenitis regum faciend' militibus; preter manerium de Lokynton, quod tenetur in ſocagium per ſervicium xx s̃. per annum pro omni ſervicio ſuo, ſicut patet in libro placitorum.

After the diſſolution of the religious houſes, the manor and lordſhip of Lockington were granted, in 1543, by king Henry VIII. with other conſiderable property in the counties of Leiceſter and Surrey, to ſir Humfrey Brown, knight[2], one of the juſtices of the common pleas; who in 1563 died ſeiſed of this manor, and of Mikelholme thereunto belonging, and of the impropriation of the church and of the advowſon of the vicarage; leaving Mary, Chriſtiana, and Katharine, his daughters and coheirs[3].

In 1564, there were 38 families in Lockington, and 27 in Hemington.

The earlieſt notice that occurs of the Bainbrigges at Lockington is in 1562; in which year, Nov. 24, William Bainbrigge was married to Modwyn Wolfytbe; and on the ſame day Alice Bainbrigge was married to Thomas Hunt[4].

In 1575, the tithes of Lockington, Hemington, and the glebe in Brokpeir, were leaſed by the crown to Stephen Foxe for 21 years, at a yearly rent of £6. 6*s.*[5]

In 1576, John Tufton, eſq. of Hothfield in Kent, and Chriſtiana his wife (daughter and coheir of Humfrey Brown) aliened the lordſhip of Lockington to William Bainbrigge, gent.[6]; in whoſe immediate deſcendants it continued till 1797[7]. To this William Bainbrigge (deſcended from the antient family of the Bainbrigges, within the province of Norroy) William Flower, Norroy, granted a creſt to his antient arms (Argent, a chevron embattled between three battle-axes Sable), a goat Sable, horned and unguled Argent, about his neck a collar of the ſame; ſtanding on a hill Vert; dated Feb. 14, 1583, 26 Eliz.[8]

In 1609, the ſame William Bainbrigge held the manor of Lockington in capite; and at the ſame time Henry Sacheverell alſo held lands there in capite.

The freeholders here in 1630 were, John Bainbrigge, eſq. and Robert Smith. This John Bainbrigge was high-ſheriff in 1630; and the following items will ſhew the handſome ſtyle in which he ſerved that office; the value of money at that period, with prices of cloathing, and alſo ſome traits of his pedigree.

The following extracts in the caſe of Mr. John Bainbrigge's three grand-daughters, the coheirs of John St. Andrew, eſq. in 1632 and the following years, will ſhew the price of juſtice in the Court of Wards in thoſe days.

To the Right Wor^{ll} Sir Walter Pye, Kt. his Maties Attorney of his Highnes Courte of Wardes and Liveries.

The humble petition of Elizabeth nowe wife of Sir John Bale, Kt.

Sheweth, that whereas, aboute 6 yeares ſince, your petitioner obteyned a graunte out of the ſaid courte for the wardſhips of Mary, Elizabeth, and Barbara, daughters and coheires of John St. Andrewe, eſq. your petitioner's former huſband, wherein William Bainbrigg, eſq. with one Roger Meares, were joyned with your petitioner in the ſaid graunte; but the ſaid Meares (in regard he was decayed in eſtate) was ordered that he ſhould not meddle with the ſaid wardes nor their eſtates, but onely as a ſupervifor; But nowe ſoe it is, may it pleaſe you to be advertiſed, that your petitioner havinge lately married with the ſaid Sir John Bale, and beinge fallen into a dangerous ſicknes, wherein ſhe hath languiſhed many monethes, and is hopeleſſe of recovery, yet deſirous to diſchardge the truſt repoſed in her touchinge the ſaid wardes, fearinge that (if it ſhould pleaſe God to call her away of a ſuddaine) your petitioner's ſaid huſband might doe the ſaid wardes wronge by their marriages or otherwiſe in their eſtates, and the rather becauſe he nowe refuſeth to give the ſecurity touchinge the ſaid wardes which he agreed unto before marriage; Moſt humbly beſeech you to take the diſtreſſed eſtates of the ſaid wardes into your accuſtomed care, and that both they and their eſtates, and all their evidences, writinges, and bokes of accountes, concerninge the ſame, may be ſpeedily delivered over unto John Bainbrigg, eſq. your petitioner's father, and the ſaid William Bainbrigg, whoe were both of them much truſted by the ſaid wardes father, and are men of good eſtates, and will give good ſecurity to the courte for their integrities. And that your petitioner's ſaid huſband may not have any more to doe with the ſaid wardes nor their eſtates.

And ſhee will ever pray, &c. ELIZABETH BALE.

A note of ſuch money as hath beene diſburſed by me John Bainbrigg, eſq. in the ſuite for obteyninge of Mary, Elizabeth, and Barbara St. Andrewe, daughters and coheires of John St. Andrewe, eſq. deceaſed, his Majeſtie's wardes, out of Sir John Bale's cuſtody, after the 26th of March, anno Domini 1632.

The following article is from an old copy in the hands of Adam Wolley, eſq.

Indenture, dated July 9, 1656, between John Columbell, of Darley, in the county of Derby, eſq. of the one part; and colonel William Mitchell, of Wingeworth, in the county of Derby, eſq. William Wolley, of Riber, in the county of Derby, eſq. William Rookeſby, of Skyers, in the county of York, eſq. and Henry Kniveton, of Aſhburne, in the county of Derby, gent. of the other part. Said John Columbell, for the ſettling and eſtabliſhing the inheritance of the moiety of the manor, meſſuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments therein after mentioned, to and in them ſaid Mitchell, Wolley, Rookeſby, and Kniveton, and their heirs, to the uſes therein-after ſpecified, did grant, bargain, ſell, alien, enfeoff, and confirm unto ſaid Mitchell, &c. and their heirs, the moiety of the manor of Ratcliffe upon Soar, with its appurtenances, in the county of Nottingham, and the moiety of all other the meſſuages, lands, meadows, paſtures, feedings, &c. which were late the inheritance or freehold of Henry Sacheverell, eſq. deceaſed, ſituate, lying and being in Ratcliffe aforeſaid, and in Gotham in the ſaid county of Nottingham, and in Lockington in the county of Leiceſter, or in any of them, or elſewhere in the ſaid counties of Nottingham and Leiceſter, to hold the ſame unto the ſaid Michell, Wolley, Rookeſby, and Kniveton, and their heirs, to the uſe of the ſaid John Columbell and his aſſigns for life; remainder to the uſe of the ſaid Mitchell, &c. and their heirs, till ſuch time as they ſhould have collected £4000. for the daughters portions; remainder to the uſe of the heirs male of the body of the ſaid John Columbell; remainder to the uſe of the right heirs of the ſaid John Columbell for ever.

William Bainbrigge, eſq. died ſeiſed of the lordſhip of Lockington Nov. 22, 1669; and had two branches of his poſterity, by his ſecond and third wives, ſeated in this pariſh, the elder for four, the other for three generations.

John Bainbrigge, the eldeſt ſon by the ſecond wife, died in his father's life-time, 1658, æt. 30; leaving one ſon, John, who ſucceeded his grandfather in the family manſion at the Nether hall, the antient ſeat of the family; which he rebuilt about 1688. He married Mary, only daughter and heir of Thomas Harley, of Oſgathorpe; ſerved the office of high-ſheriff in 1699; and died Oct. 1, 1717, at the age of 60.

William Bainbrigge, eſq. eldeſt ſon and heir of the laſt mentioned John, married Mary, one of the two daughters and coheirs[2] of Philip Lacock, eſq. of Woodborow, co. Notts; by whom he had three ſons and three daughters. He was high ſheriff in 1732; and, dying Oct. 10, 1736, aged 51, was ſucceeded by his ſon John Bainbrigge, eſq. at that time a minor; who dying in the December following of the ſmall-pox, at the age of 19, the property of the elder branch devolved to his next brother Philip-Harley Bainbrigge, eſq.; who was high-ſheriff in 1747; and died without iſſue July 27, 1769; when his two ſiſters, Mary and Elizabeth, ſucceeded as coheirs.

Mrs. Mary Bainbrigge died, unmarried and inteſtate, April 22, 1779; and letters of adminiſtration were granted to Mary Bainbrigge, widow, and Elizabeth Bainbrigge, ſpinſter, her mother and ſiſter. The mother alſo died, at the age of 92, April 8, 1785, inteſtate[3]; when letters of adminiſtration were granted to her only ſurviving daughter Elizabeth.

[1] Palmer's MS Caſes, p. 441.

[2] The other daughter and coheir was Anne, the grandmother of Mr. Story and Mrs. Penleaze.

[3] Mrs. Mary Bainbrigge the elder (with her two daughters, Mrs. Mary Bainbrigge and Mrs. Elizabeth Bainbrigge) had lived at the old hall at Woodborow from the time of her ſon's marriage; and neither of them had ever been out of their own pariſh for upwards of 30 years. The lives of all the three were equally meritorious.

Certain lands in the counties of Leiceſter and Warwick, parcel of the eſtates of John Picot, gentleman, and Elizabeth his wife, having been directed to be ſold, under an act of parliament in 1786, a houſe and divers cloſes, to the amount of about £56. a year, were purchaſed by Mrs. Elizabeth Bainbrigge[1].

This reſpectable lady died Oct. 15, 1797, in an old family houſe at Woodborow, (built by her maternal grandfather Philip Lacock, eſq.) which ſhe inherited in right of her mother. She was the laſt of the elder branch of her family; and was interred with her relations in Lockington church. Her property in land and money was very great, and ſhe richly deſerved it; for, her charity was boundleſs, and her worth it is not eaſy to deſcribe. In her life-time ſhe gave upwards of £1500. to the county infirmary at Nottingham; kept all the poor, far and near; gave away £100. a month regularly in charity; and to people in diſtreſs ſhe has given from £100. to £500. at a time; all her tenants at the low rent they were at 100 years ago; ſhe never raiſed them, or turned any out. On looking over her cloſets, was diſcovered a deal box, the top covered with looſe papers, and underneath were bank-bills and bills of old Mr. Abel Smith of Nottingham, which had lain there many years, to the amount of £25,000.; and a large quantity of Portugal coin, wrapt up in a linen cheſt among the ſheets[2].

An eſtate at Abkettleby ſhe gave by her will (which was proved in the archdeacon's court at Leiceſter) to Mr. Maddox of Nottingham, the ſon of her apothecary; her eſtates at Calverton, in the county of Nottingham, to the daughter of Mrs. Penleaze; and ſeveral good legacies to other friends.

Her eſtates at Lockington, Kegworth, Woodborow, Snibſton, &c. with a moiety of her perſonal property, ſhe bequeathed to the Rev. Philip Story[3], rector of Walton and vicar of Lockington, the grandſon and heir of Anne Lacock, the other daughter and heir of Philip Lacock; whoſe eſtates became wholly veſted in him on the death of Elizabeth Bainbrigge. And Mr. Story is now ſole proprietor of the whole lordſhip of Lockington (except two ſmall meadows belonging to lord Curzon); with the fiſheries of the rivers Trent and Soar bounding his manors of Lockington and Kegworth. The other moiety of her perſonal eſtate, with her landed property at Walton, Mrs. Bainbrigge gave to Mrs. Penleaze[4], of Stoke Newington. The perpetual advowſon of Walton ſhe had given to Mr. Story in her life-time.

Lockington hall is ſituated in a large plot of ground favourable to water and to trees of ornament, compatible with the magnitude and ſtyle of the manſion, and adjoining the turnpike-road from Derby to Loughborough, from which it is ſhut out by young plantations. The beautiful avenue of antient lime-trees from the turnpike-road to the houſe (which appears in Plate CXIX. from a drawing taken by Mr. Malcolm in 1792) is now no more. But the preſent poſſeſſor has made ſome very conſiderable additions and alterations both with reſpect to the manſion and the grounds about it. In the latter, judgement and taſte are conſpicuous. Old buildings, which were unpleaſant to the eye, have been removed; and fence-walls in front of the houſe taken down, and in their place we now behold fine verdure, with thriving plantations; which in a few years will amply ſupply the want of timber trees, of which this place is almoſt deſtitute.

The Hall-houſe has been modernized by Mr. Story; who has favoured me with the view in Plate CXX. It has been new-roofed, raiſed higher, covered with ſtucco, and pillars added to the front; is large, and contains ſome good rooms. But the ſituation is low; and in great floods the Trent occaſionally overflows the diſtant part of the lordſhip, but not the grounds ſeen from the houſe; the back part of which is ſeparated from the town-ſtreet by an excellent kitchen-garden.

The Eaſt front commands a good view as far as Clifton, and Thrumpton Wood, a good object.

There are many pictures in Lockington houſe, and family portraits of moſt of the poſſeſſors for the two laſt centuries. A very fine one of John Bainbrigge, eſq. who was "æt. 66 in 1640;" capital paintings of William Bainbrigge (the next owner of Lockington) and Mary Ireton his third wife; with two of their children, one æt. 2 in 1640.

The late Philip Harley-Bainbrigge, and his wife, by Mr. Wrighte of Derby, are both uncommonly good likeneſſes: he is ſitting in a chair in a gold-laced coat, and a favourite hound near him. Portraits alſo of William and Mary Bainbrigge when young, the father and mother of Philip; and of their two daughters.

The ſecond branch of the family, above alluded to, was William Bainbrigge, gent. (third ſon of William, who died in 1669, by Mary Ireton[5] his third wife); whoſe reſidence was in a good brick building in the village, diſtinguiſhed by the name of Lockington Over Hall, but now converted into a farm-houſe. He married Barbara, ſecond daughter of ſir Nicholas Wilmott, of Oſmaſton, by whom he had five ſons and three daughters; and died Dec. 27, 1679, at the age of 35.

William, the eldeſt ſon, married Martha daughter and heir[6] of Edward Brett, of Dymſdale, co. Stafford, by Jane Inge[7]; by whom he had at leaſt one ſon, Edward-Brett Bainbrigge, who planted a clump of trees on a very elevated ſituation in Lockington lordſhip, which is ſeen at a vaſt diſtance, and is ſtill called Brett Bainbrigge's Folly. He was owner of the Over Hall, and of part of Lockington eſtate; which he ſold to his elder couſin William Bainbrigge, eſq. then owner of the Nether Hall there; and, after having diſſipated his fortune, lived for ſome time in obſcurity in the Iſle of Wight. He died unmarried, Dec. 1, 1741; and was buried with his anceſtors at Lockington.

[3] John-Lacock Story, eſq. an eminent attorney at Nottingham, who died in Auguſt 1797, was an elder brother.—The Rev. Philip Story married Martha, one of the daughters of the Rev. Richard Steevens, late rector of Botteſford (and ſiſter to General Steevens), by whom he has the following children: 1. John, born Sept. 30, 1779; 2. Mary-Elizabeth, born Sept. 27, 1780 (married to Leonard Foſbrooke, eſq. of Shardlow Hall, by whom he has one daughter, Mary-Anne, born 1802); 3. Martha, born Aug. 3, 1781; 4. Philip-Laycock, born Sept. 9, 1782; 5. Edmund-Richard, born Oct. 2, 1783; 6. Jane-Diana, born Oct. 17, 1784; 7. Anne, born Oct. 23. 1785; 8. Georgina-Sibilla, born Nov. 22, 1787; 9. Edward, and 10. Nathaniel, twins, born Jan. 18, 1789; 11 Sarah, born in April 1790.

[4] Mr. Penleaze was a ſurgeon and apothecary at Nottingham. He married the ſiſter of Mr. Story; and afterwards removed to Stoke Newington in Middleſex.

[5] German Ireton, of Attenton (ſo miſcalled) was, according to Mr. Noble's Memoirs of Cromwell, vol. II. p. 319, father of general Henry Ireton, ſon in law to Oliver Cromwell. Noble makes Henry Ireton born 1610, and married to Bridget Cromwell 1646; agreeing well enough with a ſiſter having William Bainbrigge, junior, her third ſon, about 1644. There is, in the poſſeſſion now of the Hugglescote Grange family, an antique ſmall apothecary's mortar of very curious workmanſhip, which is ſaid to have belonged to the general. At Kegworth a figure of a John Ireton, rector there in 1606, is engraven on a ſtone. In 1658 a John Ireton was lord-mayor of London.—Thomas Bainbrigge, eſq. has a counter-part of a ſettlement, Nov. (but the day eraſed) 14° Car., for ſecuring 40*l.* per annum to the iſſue male by Mary Ireton, executed by the truſtees, Gervaſe Pigot of Thrumpton, and Henry Ireton of Addenborough, eſquires, and atteſted by Matthew Ireton, John Lawe, John Fulwood, and Thomas Ireton.

[6] She is ſo ſtated, both from her deed referred to in the pedigree, ſhewing her in poſſeſſion of the Brett eſtates, and from a pedigree by Mr. Chetwynd, who, beſides his general correctneſs, was enough connected with the family to be named the other demandant in the recovery on her marriage. Its loweſt ſtep (p. 197 of his MS. vol. B. found by Mr. Shaw at Ingeſtre) ſtands thus:

Edwardus Bret de Dymeſdale, 1680,=Jana fil. Will. Inge de Thorp.
1. Martha.
2. Suſanna. } ob. infantes.
3. Honora. }

Martha being old enough in 1680 to be married in about eight years more, it would be probable, were there even no evidence of her ſucceſſion, that the parents had no iſſue born after that year.

[7] See before, under Belgrave, p. 175; where, in the note, is an error (copied from Mr. Shaw's Staffordſhire, vol. I. p. 408.) as to dame Martha Hungate being daughter to Walter Ruding; for by the epitaphs in St. Mary's church, Leiceſter (vol. I. p. 317.) a Henry Hungate (perhaps ſon to ſir Henry) does indeed appear to be ſon in law to Walter Ruding, and alſo a junior Walter Ruding, brother in law to William Inge; but not by Inge marrying Ruding's ſiſter, but Ruding his; whence the miſtake might eaſily ariſe.

Dorothy Bainbrigge, ſiſter to Edward-Brett, was married to Henry Gilbert, eſq. of Lockoe, co. Derby; and dying Oct. 22, 1727, aged 33, was buried in Lockington church.

In 1722, three freeholders polled from Lockington, and eight from Hemington; and in 1775, we find eight names from Lockington and ten from Hemington.

In three years, 1787—1789, there were 37 baptiſms, and 33 burials at Lockington.

The lordſhip is extenſive, and is all of old incloſure; conſiſting in general of good corn land, and paſturage for feeding cattle; and ſome fine meadow land near the Trent, which lets at a high rent.

Nine houſes[1], part of Diſeworth, are ſubject to dues and duties in this pariſh.

Mudwin Cox, who is ſaid to have been a ſtrolling beggar, who had frequently been relieved at Hemington, left, before the year 1680, £6. a year, payable out of land at Billſton in this county, for teaching twelve poor children belonging to the townſhips of Lockington and Hemington to read, write, and caſt accompts. But, I am ſorry to record, on the authority of the returns to parliament in 1786, verified on oath by the Rev. John Topham, then curate of Lockington and Hemington, and alſo by John Newbold and William Flint, churchwardens, "that the charity had not been paid ſince 1779; the tenant refuſing to pay it[2]."

By the return to Parliament in 1801, Lockington contained 40 inhabited houſes; 47 families; 111 males, 125 females; total 236; of whom 68 were chiefly employed in agriculture, and 10 in trade, manufactures, or handicraft.

By a charitable donation of one of the Bainbrigge family, bread (to the amount of £5. a year) is given to the poor on the firſt Sunday in every month.

Lockington Regiſter begins in 1557; has been remarkably well kept[3], and is ſtill as well preſerved. Among other entries are,

Robert Lillie, of Diſeworth, the elder, buried April 1, 1558.

Robert, ſecond ſon of R. Lillie, buried Sept. 1, 1558.

William Bainbrigge and Modwyn Wolfythe married Nov. 24, 1562; and on the ſame day Thomas Hunte and Alice Bainbrigge were married.

Robert Lillie and Agnes Rolſton, Dec. 14, 1574.

Mr. Arme, late vicar of Lockington, buried June 3, 1633: who died in the pulpit preaching.

Sarah Gennings, a gentlewoman from Bermudas, falling off her horſe, broke her neck; buried May 29, 1644.

Gamaliel Tunſtall, clerk, who was drowned when he was the ſchool-maſter of Aſhby de la Zouch; buried Jan. 14, 1647-8.

In 1675 the vicarage-houſe was almoſt new-built by Mr. Coulborne, then vicar; which coſt £75. 15s. 8*d*.

Aug. 23, 1678, William Bainbrigge, gent. (ſon of Gervaſe?) was killed by having his arm broken by a loaded cart, and buried the ſame day.

Mary Bainbrigge, daughter of William, buried May 2, 1696.

Madam Elizabeth Bainbrigge, of the pariſh of Woodborow, in the county of Nottingham, buried Oct. 20, 1797.

The font is round, with a fillet of interlaced arches on the upper edge on a round ſhaft and ſloping pedeſtal.

In the Matriculus of 1220, Lockington is deſcribed to be under the patronage of the abbot of Leiceſter, who held it to his own uſe ab antiquo; and had the chapel of Hemington, which was only ſupplied de gratiâ. Nicholas the then vicar was inſtituted by Hugh then biſhop of Lincoln; and paid four marks ab antiquo[1].

In 1344, the procurations were, 7*s*. 6¾*d*.; the vicarage was taxed at 24 marks for Lockington, and 25 for Hemington; and paid 2*s*. for Peter-pence. The abbot of Leiceſter had alſo a penſion from it of £4. and had the rectory to his own uſe.

In 1534-5, the value of the vicarage was £6.; and the penſion to the abbot of Leiceſter was £2. 13*s*. 4*d*.

In 1550, Lockington church is ſtated to contain,

It̃m, tow copes, the one blewe damaſke, and the other ſatyn.

It̃m, iij veſtmentes of ſylke.

It̃m, tow croſſes.

It̃m, foore great bells.

"Oct. 9, 1647. Whereas this Committee have, the 3d of October, 1646, granted £50. a year out of the profits of the impropriate rectory of Sileby, in the county of Leiceſter, ſequeſtered from Joſeph Smith, clerk, delinquent, to and for increaſe of the maintenance of ſuch miniſter as this Committee ſhould approve to officiate the cure of the pariſh church of Lockington in the ſaid county: It is ordered that the ſaid £50. a year be paid to Mr. William Plant, the preſent miniſter of the ſaid church, for an increaſe of his maintenance; and the ſequeſtrators of the premiſſes are required to pay the ſame unto him accordingly, at ſuch times and ſeaſons of the yeare as the ſaid profits grow due and payable[2]."

In 1650, Lockington was returned as an impropriation; the rectory worth £80.; the vicarage worth £10; and the incumbent as "ſufficient, but double beneficed."

In the king's books it is entered as a diſcharged living, worth, with the deſecrated chapel of Hemington, in great and ſmall tithes, manſe, and other receipts, on an average, £6. 7*s*. 3½*d*.

The clear yearly value in Bacon's Liber Regis is ſtated to be £40. 2*s*. 8*d*.; to which £60. has been added from queen Anne's bounty[3].

The epiſcopal procurations are, for the rectory 2*s*. 6*d*.; the vicarage, 2*s*.

[3] Towards this augmentation the ſum of £200 was raiſed whilſt Mr. Metcalfe was vicar (about 1725) by various contributions. Mrs. Mary Bainbrigge, widow of John Bainbrigge, eſq. ordered £50.; but, dying inteſtate, it was paid by two of her ſons and youngeſt daughter Mary; (Rev. John Bainbrigge and ſiſter £25.; and the eldeſt ſon, William, £25.). Sir John Harper gave £10.; William Bainbrigge, eſq. £50.; Mr. Edward-Brett Bainbrigge, £31. 10*s*.; Mr. John Bainbrigge, £21. 2*s*.; Mrs. Mary Bainbrigge, £5. 7*s*.; Mrs. Fulwood, £1. 1*s*.; Mr. Allen of Greſley, £3. 3*s*. The deficiency (£27. 7*s*.) was made up by the then incumbent George Metcalfe; who alſo paid all the charges, including the fine, to the amount of £12. Pariſh Reg.

near this place reſt the remains of Mary Bainbrigge, widow, and relict of William Bainbrigge, eſq.
formerly of this place, and afterwards of Woodborow, in the county of Nottingham, the laſt ſurviving daughter and one of the two coheireſſes of Philip Lacock, eſq. of Woodborow, deceaſed.
She died April 8, 1785, aged 92.
If Charity can Heaven procure,
The reſt in Hope is made ſecure."

On the Eaſt wall:

1. On a ſmall black tablet, Or, on a bend Sable, three dolphins embowed Or, between two wolves heads Sable, Oſborne; impaling Bainbrigge; Pl. CXIX. fig. 4.

"In memory of Mary,
the wife of William Oſborne, of Derby, gent.
and youngeſt daughter of John Bainbrigge, eſq. and Mary his wife, late of this town.
She departed this life June the 26th, 1749,
and lieth interred near this place.
Vivit poſt funera Virtus.
Hoc poſuit maritus mœſtiſſimus."

2. On a white marble tablet:

Quarterly, 1. and 4. Bainbrigge; 2. Sable, a gauntlet Or, Lacock; 3. Or, a bend cottized Sable, Harley. Creſt, a goat ſtanding, Sable, collared Argent, fig. 5.

"Near this place lie the remains of Philip Harley Bainbrigge, eſq.
ſon of William Bainbrigge, eſq.
by Mary his wife, who was daughter and coheireſs of Philip Lacock, eſq. of Woodborough, in the county of Nottingham.
He married Katharine, the daughter of Thomas Allicock, of Lambley, gent. and died without iſſue, July 27, 1769, aged 49.
He was a perſon of great integrity; a lover of truth and juſtice.
He ſpent his time chiefly in the agreeable amuſement which the country afforded; not chuſing to be much converſant in the buſy world.
As maſter of a family, he behaved as an affectionate huſband; he was loved and eſteemed by his ſervants and dependants; he looked upon his tenants even as a part of his family;
and always treated them with kindneſs and affability.
They lived under him with comfort and ſatisfaction, being in no fear of any ſort of oppreſſion or hardſhip; ſo that they would have the greateſt reaſon to lament his death, if it was not for the proſpect of meeting with the ſame kind and generous uſage from thoſe worthy perſons who ſucceed him in his fortune and eſtate.
This monument was erected by Katharine Bainbrigge, widow of the deceaſed, in gratitude to the memory of one who had treated her with reſpect and tenderneſs whilſt he lived, and was not unmindful of her at his death[1]."

On the South wall.

1. On a mural monument by Streeton of Nottingham: Arms of Bainbrigge.

"In memory of Mary, the daughter of William Bainbrigge, eſq. and Mary his wife.
Bleſt with an ample fortune,
a benevolent and good heart,
ſhe lived eſteemed, and died lamented,
April 22, 1779."

2. On a tablet under a figure of Hope, of ſtatuary marble: Arms of Bainbrigge.

"Near to this place lie the remains of Mrs. Elizabeth Bainbrigge, ſpinſter, late of Woodborow, in the county of Nottingham, who died on the 15th day of October, 1797, aged 81.
She was the youngeſt daughter of William Bainbrigge,
eſq. and Mary his wife, of this place.
Her life was one continued act of virtue.
She hath left a memory that ſhall never die;
and an example
that may be imitated, but not eaſily equalled.
The Rev. Philip Story, from gratitude and affection, erected this monument."

On an upright ſlate againſt the Eaſt wall:

"Near this wall lies the body of John Robinſon, gent. eldeſt ſon of Henry Robinſon, rector of Long Whatton, by Anne his wife, and daughter of Thomas Bainbrigge, gent.
all buried in this place.
He died March 29, 1704, aged 54 years."

On flat ſtones in the chancel:

1. Bainbrigge, impaling ſeven maſcles, under a label of three points, St. Andrew; fig. 6.

"HERE LIETH THE BODIE OF BARBARA, DAUGHTER OF WILLIAM ST. ANDREW, OF GRAY'S INN, ESQ. AND WIFE OF WILLIAM, SON AND HEIRE OF JOHN BAINBRIGGE, ESQ. SHE DIED THE 5TH OF APRIL, 1624, IN HER AGE 18."

Her figure is cut on the ſtone, in a mantle and falling cape, the hands joined[2].

2. On a braſs plate:

"Memoriæ Sacrum.
Here lieth interred the body of Elizabeth, wife to William Bainbrigge, eſq. who departed this life the 14th of April, 1624, in the 78th year of her age; to whoſe memorie Suſanna Bainbrigge and Anne her youngeſt daughters have cauſed this ſtone and inſcription here to be placed."

On the ſtone under the above:

"Here lieth alſo the body of Mrs. Lucy
Robinſon, who died the 30th
Day of April, anno Dom. 1694."

And below that: "Mary Bainbrigge."

3. "Here lieth Elizabeth, daughter of Gervas Pygott, eſq. and wife of William Bainbrigge, eſq. who had two ſons and one daughter, and died the 20th of March, 1634.
Here lieth John, ſon and heir apparent of William Bainbrigge, eſq. who married Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Grey, of Langley, eſq. by whom he had two ſons and three daughters.
He died January 20, 1658,
in the 30th year of his age.
His ſon John Bainbrigge, eſq. lieth alſo here, who died October 1, 1717, in the 60th year of his age. He married Mary, the only daughter of Thomas Harley, of Oſgathorpe, gent. by whom he had three ſons and three daughters."

At bottom, Bainbrigge; impaling Harley; fig. 7.

4. Round the ledge of a flat ſtone (in part chip'd off):

"John Bainbrigge married Anne, the daughter of William Law, of W[igſto]n, by whom he had iſſue one ſon William,
and one daughter Elizabeth.
He departed this life the 10th day of March, ...
anno Domino 1642, ætatis . . . . . .

MEMORIÆ SACRUM.

"IF THAT, READER, THOU WOULDST KNOW
WHOSE SACRED DUST AND ASHES OWE
THIS PIOUS STONE, GOE FIRST INQUIRE
WHY SIGHS AND WEEPS THE DOLEFUL SHIRE.
IF TEARS COULD SPEAK, THEY'L SIGHING SAY,
HERE'S HOSPITALITIE'S DEAD CLAY.
ASK THE SAD CHURCH, AND THOU SHALT READ,
LOE HERE TRUE PIETY LIES DEAD.
NEXT ASKE THE HELPLESS POORE, AND THEN
THOU'LT HEAR TOO MUCH TO ASKE AGEN.
YET IF THY MIND BE CURIOUS STILL TO ASKE OF ME WHOSE RELIQUES FILL
THIS HOUSE OF DEATH; KNOW HERE I SAVE
EARTH PLAIN, YET JUST. IN THIS SAME GRAVE; HERE SUCH A BAINBRIGGE COFFIN'D LIES
WHOSE LOSSE IS THEAME FOR WEEPING EYES.
I THINK THERE'S NONE IN SORROW DOMBE,
BUT MEN MORE MARBLE THEN HIS TOMBE."

[1] She was afterwards re-married to Richard Cheſlyn, eſq. of Langley-hall (ſee p. 863); but was buried at Lockington. See her epitaph, p. 879.

[2] This inſcription I copied in 1794; but the ſtone was broken and taken up in 1797, when the laſt Mrs. Bainbrigge was buried.

5. On three braſs ſhields:

1. Bainbrigge; impaling St. Andrew; fig. 7.

2. Gules, a bend fuſilly between ſix martlets Or, Pigot; fig. 8.

3. Ermine, a bend voided Gules, Ireton; fig. 9.

"Here lieth the body of William Bainbrigge, eſq. lord of this manor of Lockington; who had ſucceſſively three wives, which ly here interred. The third and laſt was Mary, the daughter of Jerman Ireton, of Attenborough, eſq.
by whom he had iſſue four ſons,
William, Thomas, William, and Henry;
and two daughters, Jane and Katharine.
He departed this life the 22d of November, 1669, of his age 65.
William his third ſon cauſed this ſtone to be placed here in memory of him."

6. Bainbrigge, impaling Harley; an eſcutcheon of Lacock; fig. 10.

"Here lies the body of William Bainbrigge, eſq.
lord of this manor, who departed this life the 10th day of October, 1736, in the 51ſt year of his age.
He married Mary, the daughter and coheireſs of Philip Lacock, of Woodborough, eſq.
by whom he left iſſue four ſons and two daughters.
Here alſo lieth his ſon and heir, John Bainbrigge, eſq. who died Dec. 3d, 1736, in his 19th year."

7. On a ſmall braſs:

"Here lieth the body of Edward Bainbrigge, youngeſt ſon of William Bainbrigge, eſq.
(late lord of this manor),
by Mary his wife, daughter and coheireſs of Philip Lacock, eſq. of Woodborough,
in the county of Nottingham.
He died Dec. 3, 1741, in the 15th year of his age."

8. "Here lieth interred the body of Philip-Harley Bainbrigge, eſq. lord of this manor, and the laſt male-heir of that family[1].
He married Katharine, the daughter of Thomas Allicock, of Lambley, gent.
and died without iſſue July 27, and buried Auguſt 1ſt, 1769."

9. "Beneath reſt the remains of Katherine, relict of Philip-Harley Bainbrigge, eſq.
She departed this life June 9, 1792, aged 77 years.

On flat ſtones in the nave:

1. "Johannes . . . . . . obiit anno Dñi 1501, æt. 61."

2. Arms of Fullwood, fig. 11; as in p. 883.

"Here lieth interred the body of Mr.
William Fullwood, late apothecary in Loughborough, who departed this life the 18th of April, in the year of our Lord 1736, in his 31ſt year.
He married Anne, daughter of the late Nicholas Maſon, of Burton ſuper Wolds, gent.
by whom he had iſſue two daughters."

3. "Here lieth the body of Mr. John Fullwood, ſen.
of Hemington.
Here alſo lieth the body of John Fullwood, jun.
who departed this life Sept. 16, 1722, aged 73."

4. "Here lieth interred the body of Luke Abbott, of Hemington, who departed this life April 21, anno Domini 1692, ætatis ſuæ 66.

Here alſo reſts the body of Luke Abbot, grandſon of the above Luke Abbot.
He departed this life Feb. 5, 1776,
in the 83d year of his age.

Judith, ſecond daughter of Thomas and Sarah Abbot, of Hemington, who died June 17, 1725, aged 22."

5. "Nicholas Thorpe, ſecond ſon of Edward Thorpe, of Bramcote, and ſervant to John Bainbrigge, eſq.
who, being a bachelor of the age of 17, departed this life Dec. 16, 1642."

6. "Elizabeth Johnſon died Sept. 1604, aged 34."

On a neat tablet againſt the wall of the North aile:

Quarterly; 1. Sable, an armed leg couped at the thigh in pale, between two broken ſpears Argent, headed Or, Gilbert; 2. Argent, a lion rampant in a border Sable; 3. Argent, a chevron engrailed between three croſs croſſlets fitché Sable; 4. Argent, a bear rampant Sable; fig. 12.

"In the vault of her family near this place is interred Dorothy Gilbert.
She was daughter to William and Martha Bainbrigge, of Lockington Old Hall, in the county of Leiceſter, eſq.
On the 13th of October, 1721, ſhe married John, eldeſt ſon of Henry Gilbert[2], of Locko, in the county of Derby, eſq.
from whom ſhe was taken on the 22d of October, 1727, in the 33d year of her age.
They had iſſue three ſons and two daughters.
The eldeſt, Dorothy, widow of John Gardiner, of Thundridge Bury, in the county of Hartford, eſq.
erected this monument out of a dutiful regard to the memory of her affectionate mother."

In the Eaſt chancel of the South aile (called Hemington Chapel) is an alabaſter tomb, having at the ſides, under double flowered niches, ſix figures of bearded monks in cowls; one with book and roſary, crutch, and beads at ſide; three with a roſary; one with a book and purſe at his right ſide. On the South ſide ſix more; three holding a book, two a roſary, and one a roſary and book. At the head two angels holding a ſhield on which was painted, Argent, a feſs Gules, in chief three torteauxes, Devereux; impaling, Argent, three bears' heads eraſed Sable, muſſeled Or, Langham. And at the feet, Quarterly, 1. Ferrars; 2. and 3. Langham; 4. Devereux. The angels and ſhields remain; but the arms are vaniſhed.

On this tomb lies the figure of a lady, with a coronet on her hair, which falls below her elbows; treble neck-lace, from which hangs a croſs patée; a ſhift with three buttons on the breaſt, double cordon, long ſleeves, croſs belt, mantle, fingers (gone), double cuſhion, the upper held by angels; feet ſeen; dog running down left ſide. A neat bird's-eye view of this figure, taken by Mr. Schnebbelie in 1790, and a ſide view of the tomb by Mr. Malcolm in 1792, are given in Plate CXX.

On the ledge, Mr. Burton ſays, was inſcribed:

"Hic jac[ent corpus domine Elizabethe Ferrers[3], nuper uxoris domini Johannis Ferrers de Chartley, que Elizabetha obiit 15 . . . . . .[4]"]

But of this only the Hic jac' . . . . now remains.

On a ſlab nearly adjoining the above tomb, are the faint tracings of a man and woman; at his left foot a boy; between her feet a girl.

"Hic jacent corpora Thome [Q. Whitby] et Agnetis uxoris ej' qui quidem Thomas obiit xxii die me'ſis Marcii, anno Dñi mille'mo d°viii et dicta Agnes . . . . . .

On the South ſide of the chancel wall, on the outſide, is the following inſcription, engraved on a ſtone nearly the ſame as that of which the wall is made:

"Here lieth the body of Mr. William Plant, miniſter, who, after fourteen years labour in the Word and Doctrine in this place, departed this life the 4th day of June, 1662.
He married Katharine, the daughter of John, ſecond ſon to William Croft, of Barwell, eſq.
who died the 21ſt of June, 1664, and her body lieth here interred."

In the church-yard:

"Beneath this ſtone lie the remains of the Rev.
Mr. Thomas Bentley, late vicar of Lockington 37 years, and miniſter of Thrumpton 28 years.
He departed this life Jan. 4, 1777, aged 73."

[1] At his death, however, were living Thomas of Woodſeats (in his manor of Roceſter) co. Stafford; and William of London and Hugglefcote; and from the former at leaſt remains a numerous male poſterity 1802.

[2] Of this family a copious pedigree (to 1611) may be ſeen in Harl. MSS. 5809. p. 44. b.

[3] This lady was probably a ſecond wife of John Devereux lord Ferrers of Chartley; ſee p. 880.

[4] The date was incomplete in Burton's time; and all within hooks have been ſince plained and obliterated by knives, &c.

HEMINGTON,

a ſmall village within the pariſh of Lockington, is ſeated in the angle of the county, South of the Trent, and near to Donington caſtle. Though not named in Domeſday, Hemington is probably the ſmall parcel of the ſuperior manor of Loughborough, then belonging to earl Hugo, which occurs in Domeſday Book, with the following lacunæ: "Roger Buſli holds of earl Hugo in . . . . . Here is half a plough . . . . and four villans with two bordars . . . . . half. Alnod held it[1]."

In 1222, Bartholomew Baſſet, of Hemington, was fined in five marks, to take an aſſiſe againſt Brian the Foreſter and Thomas French, for a tenement in Hemington[2].

In 1270, Roger de Quency earl of Winton, at his death, was ſeiſed of one knight's fee in Hemington, value £10. per annum; Eleanor de Vaux, relict of the ſaid earl, held the ſaid knight's fee in dower; and ſir Thomas de Meignell and Robert de Langton held the ſame under her and the heirs of the ſaid earl[3].

This was afterwards the antient inheritance of the Crophulls, who were lords alſo of the neighbouring townſhips of Sutton and Bonington in the county of Nottingham[4].

"Rad̃us de Crophull & Matilda uxor ejus clam' habere, & habent, viſum de hominibus & tenentibus ſuis de Bonnington & Sutton, cum omnibus libertatibus & conſuetudinibus liberis[5]."

In 1279, Robert Balle and Richard Fraunceys of Hemington entered into recognizance (manucapti fuerunt) for the attendance in parliament of ſir Thomas de Meignell, who had been elected one of the members of the county; as did William Hoſewyf and Roger le Chamberlyng for the attendance of ſir William Burdet of Loſeby, the other repreſentative[6].

May 6, 1327, king Edward III. granted to Ralph de Crophull and his heirs liberty of free-warren in all their demeſne lands at Hemington and Braundeſton. His teſtibus; J. Elien' epiſcopo, cancellario noſtro; R. Covent' & Lichf' epiſcopo; Gilberto Talbot; Johanne de Crombewelle; Johanne de Ros, ſeneſcallo hoſpitii noſtri, & aliis. Dat' per manum noſtram apud Nottingh̄, vi° Maii[7].

In 1340, Henry de Beaumont earl of Boghan, at his death, held, as of the right of Alice his wife, one knight's fee at Hemington of the king in capite[8].

In 1346, John de Verdun (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 8*s*. for a fifth part of one knight's fee in Hemington: and John Langheton (on the ſame occaſion) was aſſeſſed 2*s*. for a twentieth part of one knight's fee there, all parcel of the honour of Winton[9].

In 1350, John de Langton, at his death, held one meſſuage and 30 acres of land, with the appurtenances, at Hemington, of the heir of John de Beaumont (then within age, and in wardſhip of the king) by the ſervice of a thirtieth part of one knight's fee; and Henry de Langton, his ſon and heir, was then aged 40 years[10].

Sir John Crophull, knt. ſon of Ralph, was lord of this manor in 1359. He married Margery, daughter and coheir to Theobald lord Verdon.

In 1369, Henry de Beaumont, at his death, held one knight's fee in Hemington of the king in capite, which John de Crophull and Henry de Langton held[11].

In 1371, it was found to be of no damage to the king, or to any other perſon, if leave was granted to ſir John de Crophull, knight, to enfeoff Thomas his ſon, and Sibill wife of the ſaid Thomas, in his manor of Hemington, with the appurtenances; and that the ſaid manor was held of the heir of Henry de Beaumont[12]. Upon this report, leave was accordingly granted to ſettle this manor on them and their heirs males[13].

In 1383, John de Crophull, knt. held, at his death, the manor of Hemington of the lord Beaumont by knight's ſervice[14].

Agnes the ſole daughter and heir Thomas de Crophull brought this manor in marriage to ſir Walter Devereux, knight; and, in 1396, ſir John de Beaumont, knt. died ſeiſed of one knight's fee in Hemington, which ſir Walter Devereux, knt. and Agnes his wife, and William Langeton held[15]. This Walter Devereux died on the feſtival of St. James the Apoſtle 1403[16]; leaving Walter his ſon and heir. Agnes his widow appears to have been again married; for, in 1435, wife of John Merbury, died ſeiſed of the manor of Hemington[17].

Walter Devereux, her ſon, married Elizabeth daughter of ſir John Merbury by a former wife; and had iſſue Walter Devereux, eſq. who in 1458 was proved to be the grandſon [conſanguineus] and heir to the aforeſaid Agnes[18]; and a daughter Anne, married to William Herbert earl of Pembroke.

Walter Devereux, eſq. married Anne, ſole daughter and heir to William lord Ferrers of Chartley, by whom he had one ſon, John; and was ſlain in 1485, fighting on the part of king Richard III. in Boſworth field.

John Devereux, his ſon and heir, was ſummoned to parliament from 1487 to 1496 by the title of John lord Ferrers of Chartley. He married, firſt, Cecily, daughter and heir to Henry Bourchier earl of Eſſex; by whom he had Walter, created viſcount Hereford in 1547, and lineal anceſtor to Robert earl of Eſſex, the celebrated parliamentary general in the civil wars.

The ſecond wife of John Devereux lord Ferrers of Chartley, not noticed by Dugdale, was very probably Elizabeth, who ſeems to have been of the Langham family; whoſe beautiful effigies remains on her tomb in the Hemington chancel of Lockington church[19].

The property which the abbot and convent of St. Mary de Pratis at Leiceſter poſſeſſed at Hemington is thus deſcribed in their Regiſter:

Habemus in Hemyngton capellam, que non debet deſerviri niſi ex ſpeciali graciâ, ſicut patet in matriculo epiſcopi.

Divers premiſes in Hemington were held by Stephen Foxe, under a crown leaſe, in 1575[2].

This manor paſſed, we do not find how, to the family of the Harpurs of Swarkſton, co. Derby.

"Hemington," ſays Mr. Wyrley in 1590, "is now the ſeat of Richard Harpur, eſq. who married Katharine, daughter of ſir Thomas Greſley of Drakelow, knt.

Sir Richard Harpur, knight, ſon and heir apparent of ſir John Harpur, of Swarkſton, knt. died in April 1629, ſeiſed of this manor; leaving by his firſt wife, ſir John, his ſucceſſor, and two daughters.

Sir Richard Harpur, not long before his death, purchaſed lands of ſir Edward Frauncis, knight; and married a ſecond wife; by whom he had no iſſue. This appears by the following copy of his laſt will:

"In the name of God, Amen. I Richard Harper, of Hemington, in the county of Leiceſter, knight, being of good and perfect ſenſe, memory, and underſtanding, thanks be given to Almighty God, yet knowing the fraylty of this world, and that ſickneſs is the forerunner and meſſenger of death; and therefore being deſirous to ſettle my perſonal and real eſtate which God hath given me in this world, that I may have the more time to prepare myſelf to attend the ſervice of Almighty God, and to meditate on the unſpeakable joys of Heaven; and having heretofore made no proviſion for any jointure for my wife, nor diſpoſed of ſuch lands as I purchaſed from ſir Edward Frauncis, knight, nor of any my goods or chattles. Therefore, the better to avoid all future diſcord and debate, which otherwiſe hereafter might ariſe or grow touching or concerning the ſame, I do therefore hereby make, ordaine, appoint, publiſh, and declare, this to be my laſt will and teſtament, in manner and form following: Firſt, I will and bequeath my ſoul unto Almighty God, who firſt framed me and faſhioned me, and ſpared not to ſend his onely ſon Chriſt Jeſus into this world, who, by ſhedding his moſt precious bloud upon the croſſe, hath payd the ranſomme for my ſinnes, in and by whoſe death and paſſion I aſſuredly expect ſalvation by the full remiſſion of my ſinnes in his bloud, and doubt not to live in Heaven with Chriſt, according to his mercyes promiſed. And I will and appointe my body to the earth from whence it came, and to be buried in decent manner, according to the diſcretion of my executor. And further I will and deviſe unto dame Iſabel Harper, my welbeloved wife, all and every my meſſuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, which heretofore I purchaſed from ſir Edward Frauncis aforeſayd, knight, and all other my purchaſed lands within the realme of England whatſoever; to have and to hould all and every my ſayd meſſuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, ſo purchaſed, with all and every theyr appurtenances, to the ſayd dame Iſabel my wife, her heyres and aſſignes, for ever. And I doe alſo give and deviſe unto my ſayd wife all and every my goods and chattles, as well real as perſonall; and do make, ordaine, and appointe her to be the ſole executrix of this my ſayd laſt will and teſtament; and doe alſo make my good, worthy, and truſty frende ſir George Savell, knight, Jervice Ayre, eſq. Gilberd Nevell, eſq. and Anthony Ayre, eſq. and John Michell, eſq. to be the ſupervilors of this my laſt will; entreating them to be ayding and aſſiſting to my ſayd executrix; and to ſee this my laſt will and teſtament in all points performed, according to my true intent and meaning herein. And in witneſs thereof I have hereunto ſett my hand and ſeal, this 13th day of Aprill, in the yeare of our Lord God 1619, and in the 17th yeare of the reigne of our ſovereigne lord king James over this kingdome.

Richard Harper[3].

Subſcribed, ſealed, and delivered, in the preſence of John Michell, Abell Williams, William Edmunds, William Dolginte, Margaret Pettitt, widdow, her marke."

This will was proved by dame Iſabel Harper, relict of ſir Richard, in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, before ſir John Barnet, knt. April 21, 1629[4].

Sir John Harpur, knt. ſon of ſir Richard, was knighted at Worſop Auguſt 24, 1603. He married Barbara, daughter and heir of ſir Henry Beaumont, of Gracedieu, knight; and dying without iſſue, his two ſiſters, Dorothy wife to Henry Gilbert of Lockoe, co. Derby, and Katharine wife to ſir Roger Cooper[5], of Thurgarton, knight, were his coheirs.

About 1647 this manor was the inheritance of ſir John Harpur, of Swarkſton; who married Catharine, daughter and heir of Henry Howard, eſq. (third ſon of Thomas earl of Norfolk); and in this family the lordſhip ſtill continues[6].

In 1630, the freeholders at Hemington were John Fulwood, Henry Vinſon, and John Cotton.

In 1789, an act was paſſed, for dividing and incloſing, within the manor of Hemington, in the pariſh of Lockington, ſeveral open or common fields, meadows, paſtures, and waſte grounds, containing about 1000 acres. In this act ſir Henry Harpur, bart. is deſcribed as lord of the manor and lay impropriator of Hemington; and the Rev. Philip Story, clerk, as vicar of the pariſh of Lockington; and ſir Henry Harpur as lay-impropriator, and Philip Story as vicar, entitled to all the great and ſmall tithes ariſing from all the titheable lands and grounds within the ſaid manor; and ſir Henry Harpur, Iſaac Hawkins[7], eſq. (of Burton), Joſeph Briggs, John Martin[8], and other perſons, as the proprietors of the reſidue of the ſaid open fields. Ten acres are decreed to be ſet out for repair of roads; and a ſeventh part of the reſidue of the open field to the impropriator and vicar, in lieu of all tithes and payments; out of which the vicar to have a part worth £40. a year; with a reſervation of mortuaries and ſurplice-fees. The turnpike-roads from Derby to Loughborough, and from Aſhby to Nottingham, not to be altered.

Near the church are the remains of an old manſion, with a very thick wall about it.

By the return to parliament in 1801, Hemington contained 71 houſes; 73 families; 171 males, 166 females; total 337; of whom 55 were chiefly employed in agriculture, and 19 in trade, manufactures, or handicraft.

[1] The family of Le Harpur (Citbariſta), originally of Cheſterton in Warwickſhire, were afterward ſeated at Ruſhall, co. Stafford, which they acquired by marrying the heireſs of Grober of that place.

[2] Dugdale's pedigree, article Cheſterton (ſaid to be deduced by Camden), calls this Iſabel daughter of John Herci, and brings the ſucceeding Harpurs from her and her huſband, making John, who married Elizabeth Liſle, ſon, not uncle, to ſir Robert. But a circumſtance ſtill varying from either account is a ſeal in the ſame page of Dugdale, which gives the Appleby arms to a wife of ſir Robert, not of John his great grandſon.

[3] In one of the windows of that church was, Orate pro bono ſtatu Willielmi Harpur et Margarete uxoris ejus.

[4] Brother to ſir Thomas Leigh, lord mayor of London, anceſtor to the preſent lord Leigh.

[5] See the pedigree of Leigh of Shawell, under the pariſh of Shawell, in Guthlaxton hundred.

[6] This Richard greatly aggrandized the family; and he, or his ſon, was the firſt that fixed at Swarkſton. Harl. MSS. 5809. Sir Henry Harpur of Calke, the firſt baronet, was third ſon to the Judge's eldeſt ſon; and the male line of Swarkſton ending in ſir John, 1677, this laſt left to ſir John Harpur of Calke a conſiderable eſtate, which by this junction is become very great; though both branches of the family were great ſufferers for their loyalty in the reign of Charles I. In the books belonging to the commiſſioners for compoſitions with delinquents, is the following entry: "Jan. 10, 1645. Sir John Harpur, of Swarkeſton, in the county of Derby, knt. to ſettle 110*l. per ann.*; viz. 20*l.* upon the vicar of Barrow, 40*l. per ann.* upon the church of Tycknall, and 50*l. per ann.* upon the church of Repton; for which he is to be allowed 583*l.*; and ſo his fine of 4583*l.* is reduced to 4000*l.*" It alſo appears, by the "Catalogue of the lords and knights that compounded for their eſtates," that ſir John Harpur, of Calke, bart. paid 578*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*

[7] Will dated April 13, 1619, proved April 21, 1619, by dame Iſabel his relict (not in 1629, as in p. 881).

[8] Winifred died young; Jane, wife of Patrick Low, of Denby, co. Derby; Dorothy, wife of ſir John White, of Tuxford, co. Nottingham; Winifred, wife of John Brown, of Stretton; Iſabella, wife of ſir Philip Sherard, of Stapleford, co. Leiceſter, elder brother to ſir William, who was created lord Sherard and baron of Le Trim in Ireland, and was the immediate anceſtor to the earls of Harborough.

The following extracts from " Thomas Bancroft's Epigrams and Epitaphs, 1639," 4to, may not unaptly fill up the remainder of this page:

To Sir JOHN HARPUR.

You have a Genius pleas'd with verſe (I hear),
That ſmoothly paſſes through your cleanſed ear;
As water of Pactolus, where no ſtay
Nor downfall interrupts his golden way:
For ſuch your merits I your praiſe ſhall ſing,
Whilſt you ſtill harp on ſo divine a ſtring.

To the ſame.

You once my lofty lines did like,
(And I as well did like your gold)
My meaſure-keeping Muſe doth ſtrike
On the ſame ſtring; whoſe hopes are bold
That you will deign an ear to it,
Sith Hermes (to adorn your mind)
Hath yielded you his pleaſant wit,
And Phœbus hath his Harp reſign'd.

To old Sir JOHN HARPUR, of Swarſton, deceaſed.

As did cold Hebrus with deep groans
The Thracian Harper once lament;
So art thou with inceſſant moans
Bewailed by thy doleful Trent:
While the aſtoniſh'd Bridge doth ſhow
(Like an Arch-mourner) heavieſt woe.

To Mrs. DOROTHIE HARPUR
(now the Lady FITZHERBERT).
Anagram, Pure hart I hoord.

Let ſtupid worldlings ſtuff their cheſts with gold;
Their glittering pelf doth no proportion hold
With the ſoul's beauties, nor ſo ſafe doth lye
As thy rich worth, whoſe breaſt 's a treaſury.

Epitaph on his Father and Mother, buried near together in Swarſton church.

Here lies a pair of peerleſs friends,
Whoſe goodneſs (like a precious chain)
Adorn'd their ſouls in lives and ends;
Whom when Detraction's ſelf would ſtain,
She drops her tears inſtead of gall,
And helps to mourn their funeral.

To his brother JOHN BANCROFT, deceaſed.

You ſold your land, the lightlier hence to go
To foreign coaſts; yet (Fates would have it ſo)
Did ne'er New England reach, but went with them
That journey towards New Jeruſalem.

To SWARSTON.

SWARSTON, when I behold thy pleaſant ſight,
Whoſe river runs a progreſs of delight;
Joy'd with the beauties of freſh flowery plains,
And bounteous fields that crown the plowman's pains,
I ſigh (that ſee my native land eſtrang'd)
For Heaven, whoſe Lord and tenure's never chang'd.

To TRENT.

Sweet River, on whoſe flowery margin laid,
I with the ſlippery fiſh have often play'd
At faſt and looſe; whene'er th' enamour'd air Shall in ſoft ſighs mine echoed accents bear,
Gently permit the ſmoother verſe to ſlide
On thy ſleek boſom, and in triumph ride
Upon the main; where when it ſounds along,
Let Tritons dance, and Syrens learn my ſong.

On Captain MILWARD, lying dead upon Trent Bank.

Behold (like treaſure in the Bank) a ſon
Of Mars, that had his father's humour; won
Out of the fire, yet in water dy'd,
And thus his thirſt of glory ſatisfied.

On the ſame.

For thy death's ſake (noble friend)
Be no man before his end
Happy thought, though flattering Fame
Fix among the Stars his name;
He that leans on wealth or ſtrength,
Breaks his ſtaff, and falls at length.

To JOHN MILWARD, Eſq.

Though Nature's force for ſuch a brother's fate
Your tears exact, yet ceaſe to macerate
Yourſelf: The Water-nymphs enough for all
Will weep, and keep a fluent funeral.

To Dr. DONNE.

Thy Muſe's gallantry doth far exceed
All ours: to whom thou art a DON indeed.

On JOHN the Warrener, fallen in love with JOAN the Net-worker.

T' intrap poor creatures he accounts no ſin;
But is himſelf now taken with a gin.

[1] This is the coat of the Willington family of Warwickſhire and the adjoining parts of Glouceſterſhire. See it engraved by Dugdale, in Monks-Kirby, Charlecote, and Barcheſton, which laſt happens to have a petty hamlet named Willington, though nothing appears of the family under it. Dugdale gueſſes theſe deſcended from Ralph de Wynton, who lived as early as 36 Henry III. it is not ſaid where. It ſtrikes me ſtrongly (conſidering that Willington, a well-known pariſh of Derbyſhire, and one of ſir Harry Harpur's manors at this day adjoins Findern), that ſome heir female of this place and name (and ſuch a family, if I miſtake not, often appears at an early period, in the neighbouring abbey of Burton) carried Willington eſtate of old to Fynderne; and hence Harpur quartered this coat as that of theſe Derbyſhire Willingtons. The CHURCH (ſee Plates CXIX. CXX.)

"At this place," ſays Mr. Wyrley, who viſited Hemington about the year 1590, "is a fair church; but the glaſs all ruined, and the church not in uſe to that end it was builded. We ſuffer propter neglectum domûs Dei."

The chancel of this venerable fragment ſtill remains; but the nave is wholly demoliſhed; three beautiful arches only remaining to ſhew what once it was!

The tower is tolerably preſerved, and has over it a ſmall ſpire.

On the North ſide of the chancel of St. Alkmond's church, co. Derby:

"This monument is erected in memory of John Hope[1], doctor of Phyſick, who departed this life the 15th day of July, 1710; and of his wife Dorothy, daughter of William Bainbrigge, of Lockington in the county of Leiceſter, eſq. who died the 21ſt day of July, 1707.

Near this place lies alſo interred Barbara, daughter of the ſaid Dr. Hope and Dorothy his wife.
They left iſſue two ſons, William and John;
and one daughter, Dorothy."

[1] See p. 504, col. 1.

[2] This Mr. Nelthorpe was of the Lincolnſhire family, one of which was a few years ago ſheriff of that county. On a handſome white marble monument, in the church of St. James, Clerkenwell, are the arms of Nelthorpe, and an inſcription in Latin to the memory of ſir John Nelthorpe, of Scawby in Lincolnſhire, once a ſtudent in Gray's Inn, the firſt baronet of the family, although "filius natu minimus Richardi Nelthorpe & Urſulæ Groſvenor."

[3] June 6, 1801, William-Earle-Welby, of Denton-houſe, was created a baronet. Would not one ſuppoſe from this, that Earle Bainbrigge's Chriſtian name was derived from his father's firſt wife? Yet the Wimeſwould epitaph is peremptory, that Hannah Welby had no iſſue.

[4] Whoever was father to this Mrs. Mary Hart, it ſeems certain her mother's deſcription, at the time of Henry-Auguſtine Bainbrigge's baptiſm in 1721, was "Dame Jane Harper." It is plainly written, by the father's hand, in a Family Bible, "Dame Jane Harper, his grandmother, godmother;" and is repeated in exactly the ſame words at the next baptiſm, John Bainbrigge's, 1722.

[5] Samuel Pipe, eſq. lived at Stafford; removing from Bilſton in that county, where his branch had lived from at leaſt 20 Ric. II. (about which very time, 1397, the male Pipes of Ridware became extinct. See Shaw's Staffordſhire, vol. II. p. 172.) He was deſcended from ſir Richard Pipe, who was lord-mayor of London in 1578. Jane, relict of Samuel Pipe, and mother of Jane Bainbrigge, was eldeſt daughter of John Spateman, rector of Yoxall (Shaw, vol. I. p. 101), and ſiſter to Thomas Spateman, clerk, of Chiſwick. She re-married to John Swinnerton, gent., of the Staffordſhire family, ſo named from their original ſeat, and not improbably of the preſent Butterton line. (See a Yoxall monument in Shaw, ibid.) Of this houſe might be John Swinnerton, lord-mayor of London in 1612.

[6] Elizabeth, wife of Mr. Graves, was the third daughter of colonel William Boyle, by Beaufoy, daughter and heir of ſir Samuel Garth, by Martha, daughter to Beaufoy of Emſcote; (ſee the latter's monument in the South tranſept of St. Mary's in Warwick, which corrects Dr. Thomas's Dugdale, p. 280.); which William Boyle was brother to Henry Boyle earl of Shannon; and theſe were ſons of Henry Boyle, who was youngeſt ſon of Roger firſt earl of Orrery, who was the fifth ſon of Richard firſt earl of Corke.

LOUGHBOROUGH, ſuppoſed to be the ſecond market-town of note in the county, is ſituated in a fertile, pleaſant country, on the great turnpike-road, 109 meaſured miles from London, 11 miles from Leiceſter, 14 from Nottingham, and 17 from Derby; and is parted from Nottinghamſhire Northward by the river Soar, which at a ſmall diſtance from this town is loſt in the Trent[1]. In the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county it is in the deanry of Akeley.

This is ſuppoſed to have been in the time of the Saxons a royal vill; and, as the Saxon Chronicle, and after it Marianus Scotus, an hiſtoriographer in the reign of William the Conqueror, affirm, was taken from the Britons by Cuthwulf the Saxon, about the year of Chriſt 572; but of the truth of this affirmation biſhop Gibſon ſomewhat doubts[2].

As to the etymology of the name, Camden ſaith it was called Lıeᵹanbuꞃᵹe, or Lẏeᵹanbuꞃh, in the Saxon tongue; but it is perhaps more probably derived from the river Leire, now called Soar, not far from which this town ſtands; ſo that the true and proper name might have been Leireborough, that is to ſay, a borough, or market-town, ſtanding on or near to the river Leire, which in length of time was corruptedly called Loughborough. What in ſome meaſure ſtrengthens this conjecture is, that Leiceſter, now ſo called, was once ſpelt and called Leirceſter, ſignifying a city, caſtle, or fortified town, ſtanding on or near to the above-mentioned river Leire, ſince and now called Soar.

In the time of king Edward the Confeſſor this lordſhip was held freely by five thanes. At the general ſurvey it was the property of earl Hugo; under whom eight ploughlands were held by Roger; three and a half by Ralph; three and a half by Hugo; three and a half by Godric; and half a ploughland by Roger. In the demeſne were five ploughs; and eight villans, with fifteen ſocmen and fixteen bordars, had twelve ploughs and a half. There were two mills of ten ſhillings value; forty-five acres of meadow; and a wood ſeven furlongs long, and three broad[3].

The record then enumerates other lands of earl Hugo, in Burton, Tedingeſworde, Kegworth, Hathern, and Diſhley; and adds, "In all theſe lands before-mentioned were eighty ploughs in the time of king Edward. The whole was, and is, worth forty pounds. When the earl entered upon it, it was valued at ten pounds[4].

Hugh holds of the earl two ploughlands, all but one oxgang, in Bortone. It lies waſte. This is reckoned with the above.

Roger Buſli held of earl Hugh in . . . . The land here was capable of employing half a plough; and was occupied by four villans and two bordars. Alnod held it.

Earl Hugh had alſo one houſe in the borough of Leiceſter, belonging to Loughborough[5].

John Pulter, of Loughborough, is noticed ſo early as 1101 by ſir Henry Chauncy; who gives a pedigree of the family, in which the fourth in deſcent from John is ſtyled "ſir Humphry Pulter, of Leiceſterſhire." He married a daughter of John Hough, eſq. and from him the deſcents are given, as of a Hertfordſhire family, under the pariſh of Bradford in that county[6].

In Henry the Second's time Hugh Deſpenſer was lord of the manor of Loughborough; to whom, and to his heirs, April 28, 1227, king Henry III. granted a weekly market on Thurſdays; and a fair yearly, on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Peter ad Vincula, at their manor of Loughborough; alſo, that he and his heirs, and their men of Loughborough, Burton, Huggleſcote, Fretheby, and Erndeſby, ſhould be for ever quiet of all ſuits of the county and hundred, ſheriff aids, and view of frankpledge: and all this he commanded the then ſheriff of Leiceſter to proclaim in the next county court.

"Rex vicecomiti Leic' ſalutem. Scias, quod conceſſimus, per cartam noſtram, dilecto & fideli noſtro Hugoni Diſpenſer, quòd ipſe & heredes ſui habeant in perpetuum unum mercatum ſingulis ſeptimanis, per diem Jovis, apud manerium ſuum de Lucteburgh: & quod habeant ibidem unam feriam ſingulis annis per tres dies duraturas; ſcilicet, in vigiliâ & in die & in craſtino beati Petri ad Vincula; ita tamen, &c. Conceſſimus etiam eidem Hugoni, quòd ipſe & homines ſui de Lucteburgh, Burton, Hukeleſcote, Fretheby, & Erneſby, ſint in perpetuum quieti de ſectis comitat' & hundred', & auxiliis vicecomitum, & viſu franciplegii, ſicut pleniùs continetur in predictâ cartâ ei inde confectâ. Et ideò tibi precipimus, quod predictam cartam in pleno comitatu tuo legi, & predictum mercatum & predictam feriam per totam balliviam tuam clamari & firmitèr obſervari, &c. Teſte Rege, apud Weſtm', 28° die Aprilis[7]."

Feb. 6, 1228-9, king Henry III. gave permiſſion for another fair, on the ſecond of November; and farther granted to Hugh le Deſpenſer, that neither himſelf nor his heirs ſhould be put on aſſiſes, juries, or recognizances. "His teſtibus; Jocelino Bathon', R. Dunelm', & W. Karliol', epiſcopis; Huberto de Burgo; R. comite Ceſtrie; W. comite Mareſcallo; W. comite de Ferrariis; J. conſtabulario; S. de Sedgrave; N. de Moelis; Ric. de Argent; Henr. de Capellâ; Bart. Peche; & aliis. Dat. per manum R. Ciceſt' epiſcopi, &c. apud Weſtm', vi° die Februarii[8]."

In the Teſta de Nevill it is ſtated that, on the aid granted to king Henry III, in 1235, towards the marrying of his ſiſter with the emperor of the Romans, Hugh Deſpenſer paid two marks for one fee in Loughborough, and 5*s*. for one quarter of a knight's fee in Hucleſcote.

In the ſame record, Godefridus de Lucteburgh is noticed as a freeholder at Skeffington.

[2] "Hanc Loughborough regiam villam Saxonicè Lıeᵹanbuꞃᵹe dictam, quam Marianus Cuthulfum Britannis anno Chriſti DLXXII. ademiſſe tradit, nominis affinitas quodammodo probet. Camden, p. 389.—Biſhop Gibſon, in his Index of Names to the Saxon Chronicle, obſerves, that the reſemblance of ſound miſled that great Antiquary; for, if he had attended to the ſeries of tranſactions, he would have been led with greater appearance of probability to Leighton in Bedfordſhire. For, after Cuthwulf had taken Lẏᵹeanbuꞃh, he is ſaid to have poſſeſſed himſelf of Æᵹleꞅbẏꞃıᵹ, Ayleſbury, and Bennınᵹꞇon, Benſon, both which towns are in the ſtrait road from Leighton; whereas he could hardly have taken ſuch a circuit from Loughborough to Ayleſbury, without making himſelf maſter of ſeveral intermediate towns.

This town, in 1240, was certified to be held of Roger de Montalto, in right of his wife Cicily, one of the daughters and coheirs of Hugh earl of Cheſter [1].

Hugh le Deſpenſer, juſticiary of England, having been ſlain in the battle of Eveſham, Aug. 5, 1265; the lordſhips of Loughborough (then valued at £60. a year), Fretheby, and Huggleſcote, were granted by king Henry III. to Aliva, the widow of the ſaid Hugh for her life, ſhe being daughter and heir to Philip Baſſet, of Wycomb [2].

In the Itinerary of 1280, Loughborough and Thorpe Acre anſwered collectively as one vill.

In 1311-12, the Parliamentary Records preſerve the following petition from an inhabitant of this town:

"A noſtre Seigñr le Roi & a ſon Conſeyl monſtre Richard Calf de Loughteburgh, marchaund, qe a la goule d'Augſt derein paſſe, ſire Rauf de Crophull vient a Hemyngton, & a Bonyngton, & les leynes meiſme celui Richard, queux il avoit mys en deux chambres deſouth bone ſerure, nomement qatre ſack de bone leyne, pris de XLIIII lĩ. priſt & enporta, & de ceaux en fit ſa volentie. E eſtre ceo, les hões & les ſerrures des chaumbres ſuſdites debruſa, a tort, & encontr' la pees ñre Seigñr le Roi, & les graves damages l'avantdit Richard. Dount meſme celui Richard prie a ñre Seigñr le Roi ſu grace & remedie: qar le dit ſir Rauf eſt de ſi graunt poer eu ſon pays, qe hom̃e ne poet avoyr recoverir devers lui a la comune Ley.—Habeat Breve de gratiâ Regis [3].

Among the Parliamentary Petitions of uncertain date, is a complaint to the king from William le fitz William, le fitz Adam le Clerc de Staneford, that Robert Steer, of Loughborough, had unjuſtly ſeized on a bovate of land at Stanford, and ſold it to the elder Hugh le Deſpenſer; which of right belonged to Mabell ſiſter of Adam le Clerc, and daughter of William the ſon of Gervaſe of Stanford, to whom it had been given by her brother [4].

Two ſucceeding Hugh le Deſpenſers, ſon and grandſon of the before-mentioned Hugh and Aliva, are memorable in our hiſtories for their unhappy conduct under that eaſy prince king Edward II. Their attainder and death have been already noticed under Beaumanor.

One of the earlieſt public acts of king Edward III. on his acceſſion to the throne, in 1326-7, was a confirmation of a grant of the manor of Loughborough to Henry lord Beaumont and Alice his wife; to whom he had before given it whilſt duke of Lancaſter:

"Rex archiepiſcopis, &c. ſalutem. Sciatis quod cum nuper, antequam gubernacula regni noſtri ſuſcepimus, dum fuimus dux ducatûs predicti, & comes Ceſtrie, Pontini, & Trolli, per cartam noſtram dediſſemus dilecto conſanguineo & fideli noſtro Henrico de Bellomonte, & Alicie uxori ejus, manerium de Luteburghe, cum pertinentiis, quod fuit Hugonis le Diſpenſer quondam comitis Wyntonie, & quod ad manus noſtras per forisfacturam dicti Hugonis, eo quod manerium illud tenuit de nobis die obitûs ſui, tanquam eſcaeta noſtra devenit; dedimus & conceſſimus eiſdem Henrico & Alicie manerium predictum, cum hamelettis, membris, & omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, habendum & tenendum eiſdem Henrico & Alicie, & heredibus de corporibus ſuis exeuntibus. Dat' per manum noſtram apud Weſtmonaſter', xv° die Februarii [5]."

In 1330, John de Liſle, at his death, was the king's cuſtos of the manor of Loughborough [6]; and in this year a writ occurs, "de inquirendo de jocalibus & catallis Hugonis le Deſpenſer junioris, & Edwardi nuper comitis Kancie [7]."

July 10, 1336, Henry lord Beaumont and Alice his wife obtained a farther confirmation grant of the manor of Loughborough; and of all that Hugh le Deſpenſer earl of Winton had poſſeſſed in Beaumanor, Burton, Huckleſcote, Walton, Erndeſby, Barrow, Coſſington, Ravenſton, Quorndon, Mountſorell, Wodethorpe, and Knight's Thorpe [8].

King Richard II. in 1387 holding a council at Nottingham caſtle, held his Marſhalſea at Loughborough at the ſame time, for the ſpace of ſix days.

In 1413, ſir Henry de Beaumont, knt. died ſeiſed of the advowſon of the church of Loughborough, worth 20 marks a year [9].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Loughborough was rated at £6. 10*s.*; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 3*s.* 4*d.*; Setlethorpe and Woodthorpe £1. 1*s.* 6*d.*; and 4*s.* 6*d.* abated; Knightthorpe 15*s.* and no abatement.

In 1463, it was found that William viſcount Beaumont, attainted of high treaſon, poſſeſſed this advowſon [10].

Oct. 26, 1464, king Edward IV. granted the manor and lordſhip of Loughborough, with the appurtenances (late parcel of the poſſeſſions of William lord viſcount Beaumont) to William lord Haſtings, his chamberlain.

"Rex conceſſit Willielmo Haſtinges, camerario ſuo, (inter alia) manerium & dominium de Loughtburgh, cum pertinentiis, in comitatu Leiceſtr', manerium de Whitington, cum pertinentiis, in eodem comitatu, manerium & dominium de Shepeſhead, cum pertinentiis, que fuerunt Willielmi Beaumont, totam propartem honoris vocat' Wincheſter fee, ac omnia terras, tenementa, redditus, reverſiones, & ſervicia, poſſeſſiones, &c. que fuerunt predicti Willielmi, in Folkingham, Lavington, Aſlakbye, Loughborough, Whitington, & Snepeſhead predict', ac in Barrowe, Querndon, necnon advocationes eccleſiarum de Walton ſuper le Wold & Coſington, in eodem comitatu Leiceſtrie; & que caſtrum, manerium, dominia, terre, tenementa, & alia premiſſa, ratione cujuſdam actûs forisfacture in parliamento noſtro apud Weſtm', quarto die Novembris, anno regni noſtri primo: Ac etiam dedimus & conceſſimus prefato Willielmo Haſtinges manerium & dominium de Aſhby la Zouch, cum pertinentiis, in comitatu Leiceſtrie, quod fuit Jacobi nuper comitis Wiltes, & que ad manus noſtras actus predict' ratione devenerunt; habend' & tenend', una cum feodis militum, advocationibus, &c. Et omnia predicta caſtra & maneria, &c. prefato Willielmo Haſtinges, & heredibus ſuis in perpetuum, de nobis & heredibus noſtris, per ſervicium unius feodi militis; tantum pro omni ſervicio. Conceſſimus inſuper eidem Willielmo Haſtinges, pro nobis & heredibus noſtris, quod manerium & dominium de Beaumanoir, cum pertinentiis, in comitatu Leiceſtrie, manerium & dominum de Whitwyk, cum membris & pertinentiis ſuis, in eodem comitatu; maneria & dominia de Roteby, Bochaſton, & Neuton, cum pertinentiis, in eodem comitatu; maneria & dominia de Hocleſcote & Donyngton, ac manerium & dominium de Markfeild, que Katherina Duciſſa Norfolcie tenuit ad terminum vite ſue; reverſiones inde ad prefatum Willielmum, &c. Teſte meipſo, apud Wycumbe, xxvi^to^ die Octobris [11]."

By a new gift, in 1467, this manor and lordſhip were confirmed; to hold of the king and his heirs by homage only, in lieu of all ſervice.

"Rex conceſſit Willielmo Haſtinges manerium & dominium de Loughteburgh, cum pertinentibus, in comitatu Leiceſtrie, manerium & dominum de Shepeſheade, cum pertinentiis, in eodem comitatu (inter alia), necnon advocationem eccleſiarum de Walton ſuper le Wold & Coſington, in comitatu Leiceſtrie, ac omnia terras & tenementa, redditus, reverſiones, & ſervicia, que nuper fuerunt Willielmi Beaumont, vel alicujus alterius, aut aliquorum aliorum, ad uſum ejuſdem Willielmi, cum pertinentiis, in Folkingham, Lavyngton, Aſlakby, Loughborough, Shepeſhed, Melburne, Bycar, Avethorpe, ac in Barrowe, & Querndon, Barkeſton, Plungarth, Redmyld, & Hardeby, in comitatu Leiceſtrie; unacum advocationibus eccleſiarum de Hardeby, Wolſthorpe, & Redmyld, ac cum redditu vocat' Caſtleward, eidem caſtro & pertinentiis ſuis ſpectant', manerium de Botesford, cum hamelettis de Normanton & Eaſthorpe, cum pertinentiis, & advocationem eccleſie de Bottesford, &c.; tenend' de nobis et heredibus noſtris per homagium tantum pro omnibus ſerviciis & demandis. But, notwithſtanding theſe grants, it is doubtful whether William lord Haſtings was ever actually poſſeſſed of this manor; for, in 1483, Francis viſcount Lovel, ſon and heir of John lord Lovel and Frances his wife, ſole ſiſter to William laſt viſcount Beaumont, held it in reverſion; which Francis was lord chamberlain and chief favourite to king Richard III.; but he being attainted in 1485, and after ſlain in the battle of Stoke, June 6, 1487, it fell again to the crown.

In 1483, the office of bailiff, ſteward, and keeper of Loughborough Park was given by king Richard III. to ſir Robert Harrington, knt.; with an annuity for life of £20. out of the iſſues and profits of the lordſhip.

By an inquiſition taken at Tilton, Sept. 7, 1509[1], it was found that William Liſle, alias Beaumont, lord Bardolf, died ſ. p. Dec. 20, 1507, leaving Joan his ſiſter and heir; that Elizabeth Scrope his widow, who at the time of the inquiſition was re-married to John de Vere earl of Oxford, was ſeiſed of the manor and advowſon of Loughborough in dower; and that the ſaid William Liſle poſſeſſed at his death the following manors, &c. in this county:

Coſſington and Walton advowſons.

To the earl and counteſs of Oxford the manor and advowſon of Loughborough were, in 1509, inter alia, ſecured by the king's letters patent; and that lady having been again left a widow, this part of her property was ſecured to her in dower, by authority of parliament, in 1514, and confirmed in 1523[2].

The manor of Anſley in Warwickſhire was ſold, June 6, 1514, by Robert and Edmund Wyethe, of Loughborough, to John Rampton, of Atherſton, yeoman.

In 1527, this manor and advowſon, with Beaumanor, &c. were granted by king Henry VIII. to Thomas Grey marquis of Dorſet (after the death of Elizabeth counteſs of Oxford, widow of William viſcount Beaumont, who then held it in dower) in exchange for the manors of Grafton and Hartwell, co. Northampton[3]. This Thomas died in 1531, leaving Henry his ſon and ſucceſſor; who in 1534 obtained a reverſionary grant of Beaumanor, but not of Loughborough; which in 1537 was granted to his mother Margaret as her dower.

This Henry was created duke of Suffolk, Oct. 11, 1551; and beheaded Feb. 23, 1553-4; and, by his attainder, Loughborough once more reverted to the crown.

In 1554, the park of Loughborough was granted for life to Frances ducheſs of Suffolk; and the manor and advowſon to ſir Edward Haſtings, knight (ſecond ſon of George the firſt earl of Huntingdon); who was created baron Haſtings of Loughborough, Jan. 19, 1557-8; and obtained in that year a confirmation of ſeveral preceding grants[4].

Mr. Camden ſays, "Loughborough mercatorium oppidum, quod unum, regnante Mariâ, baronem Edwardum Haſtings ſuo nomine exornavit. Verùm cum illa, cui fuerat chariſſimus, in vivis eſſe deſiit, ille, rerum humanarum pertæſus, mundo vivere noluit, ſed, ut totus Deo vacaret, in ptochotrophium quod apud Stoke Pogeis in Buckinghamienſi comitatu erexerat, ſeceſſit, ubi cum pauperibus Deo vixit, & inter eos vitæ curſum piè in Chriſto confecit[5]."

Some account of this illuſtrious peer may be ſeen under Aſhby, p. 579; and a portrait of him from the church of Stoke Pogeis. To which we may add, that in 1558 an act was paſſed, "for the foundation of the hoſpital of Stoke Pudges, in the county of Bucks, by the lord Loughborough;" which recites that the right honourable ſir Edward Haſtings, knight of the moſt noble order of the Garter, lord Haſtings of Loughborough, and lord chamberlain of the queen's houſhold, intended to found at Stoke Pudges aforeſaid one hoſpital of one maſter, four poor men, and two poor women there for ever to pray, according to ſuch rules as the ſaid lord Haſtings in his life-time, or by his will in writing, ſhould declare." The act enabled him to build the hoſpital; which was conſtituted a body corporate, with liberty to purchaſe lands of the clear yearly value of 20 marks; and empowered the lord Haſtings to make ſtatutes, rules, and ordinances, for its governance. The founder and his heirs were appointed patrons; and the Dean of Windſor and Provoſt of Eton were appointed viſitors. The hoſpital was accordingly built; and continued till 1765, when, by virtue of "an act for confirming and eſtabliſhing an agreement between the maſter, brethren and ſiſters of the hoſpital of the lord Haſtings of Loughborough, founded at Stoke Pogeis in the county of Bucks, and Thomas Penn, eſq. for exchanging certain lands and tenements," Mr. Penn, then lord of the manor, was authorized to pull down the old hoſpital, which adjoined his park, and was inconvenient to him; on condition of transferring to the uſe of the hoſpital lands in the neighbourhood of greater value, and of building a new hoſpital for the maſter, brethren and ſiſters, equally good and commodious in every reſpect and particular as the original hoſpital was. All which was fully confirmed by the authority of parliament.

On the death of Edward lord Haſtings, the title of baron of Loughborough became extinct; but queen Elizabeth, by patent, dated Nov. 26, 1575 (reciting that king Philip and queen Mary had granted in 1558 to ſir Edward Haſtings, knight, lord Haſtings, the manor and lordſhip of Loughborough, with Loughborough and Burley Parks, and the advowſon of the church, late the property of Henry duke of Suffolk attainted for high treaſon, by the ſervice of the 40th part of a knight's fee, and an annual rent of £115. 16*s*. 6*d*. reſerving to the crown the reverſion; and that the ſaid lord Haſtings was dead without lawful iſſue), granted the manor and advowſon in fee to Henry third earl of Huntingdon, nephew of the preceding owner; and, on the 15th of December following, the ſaid earl, for the conſideration of £500. aſſigned to his ſiſter lady Mary Haſtings an annuity of 100 marks, iſſuing out of all the tenements, &c. known by the name of Loughborough Park or Parks[6].

Of Henry earl of Huntingdon, and the two preceding earls, a full account has been given under Aſhby, p. 577, & ſeqq; to which I ſhall only here add, that in 1538, Francis the ſecond earl of Huntingdon preſented to king Henry VIII, as a New-year's gift, a glaſs with a cover garniſhed with gold; and his counteſs gave two fine ſhirts of cammerikke. The earl received, in return, a gilt cup with a cover, weighing 21 ounces; the counteſs another cup, of 13¾ ounces.

Henry, the third earl[7], in like manner, gave to queen Elizabeth, in 1593-4, £5. in gold, and his counteſs £8. The earl had, in return, a gilt cup of 20 ounces; and the counteſs another of 29¾ ounces.

April 3, 1589, Henry Skipwith, eſq. at his death was ſeiſed of certain lands, meadows, and paſtures, in Preſtwould, Hoton, and Loughborough, held of the queen, as of the honour of Leiceſter, by the ſervice of a quarter of one knight's fee, and 1*d*. rent; alſo of four acres of meadow in Loughborough meadows, bought of Francis Stareſmore[8].

Oct. 20, 1590, the earl of Huntingdon ſold to his brother ſir George Haſtings, all the glebe lands, tithes of corn and hay, and all other tithes of what kind or nature ſoever, in Meaſam, co. Derby, to the rectory of Repingdon at any time belonging [1].

Feb. 10, 1591-2, ſir George Haſtings, knt. ſir Edward Haſtings, ſir Francis Beaumont, ſerjeant at law, Brian Cave, Henry Beaumont, William Turpyn, Thomas Cave, Humphry Puretov, William Cave, Francis Brown, Thomas Skevington, George Purefoy, William Maſſey, Richard Graye, and Thomas Beaumont, eſqrs. were appointed commiſſioners to enquire diligently of the ſecret repair into this country of a conſiderable number of ſeminary prieſts [2].

By an inquiſition taken at Aſhby de la Zouch, Sept. 22, 1597, it was found that Henry Haſtings earl of Huntingdon died ſeiſed of the manor of Loughborough; as alſo of divers meſſuages and lands in Loughborough; that they were held of the queen in capite; that he died Dec. 3, 1595; and that George earl of Huntingdon was his brother and heir, and then aged 60 years and upwards [3].

Mr. Carte, in his MS notes, refers to two ſuits in the Exchequer, in 1604; Morecraft verſus Aylmer; and the Attorney General verſus George earl of Huntingdon.

By an inquiſition taken at Aſhby de la Zouch, Sept. 30, 1607, it appeared that George Haſtings earl of Huntingdon died ſeiſed of the manor of Loughborough Dec. 30, 1604; and that Henry Haſtings, then earl of Huntingdon, his grandſon [conſanguineus] and next heir, was then aged 18 years and ſix months, or thereabouts [4].

Three Exchequer ſuits concerning the mill at Loughborough are noticed by Mr. Carte in 1626; between Henry earl of Huntingdon, and, 1. Fowles & al.; 2. Fountain; 3. Skipwith.

By the immediate deſcendants of this noble earl (of whom a full account has been given under Aſhby and Donington) the manor of Loughborough was held till the death of the late earl Francis in 1789; when it became the property of his nephew Francis Haſtings lord Rawdon, now earl of Moira, the preſent worthy owner.

In 1662-3, the ſum of £60,000. together with the produce of a Tax upon Offices, was given by Parliament, "to be diſtributed amongſt ſuch truly loyal and indigent Officers who have had real command of ſoldiers, according to their ſeveral commiſſions; and who have never deſerted his Majeſty in his bleſſed Father's ſervice during the late times of Rebellion and Uſurpation, and who have loſt a ſufficient livelihood of their own; nor have, ſince his Majeſty's return, obtained any reward, office, or employment, ſufficient for a livelihood." Among the names which appeared on this occaſion, were the following natives of this county, who had all ſerved under the lord Loughborough. Captains, Richard Dudley, William Squire, Thomas Mawſon, William Trimnell, James Duport, Thomas Bailey, Robert Daniel. Lieutenants, Henry Dudley, John Everard (ſerving under captain Walter Haſtings), Thomas Gilbert (under captain Gregory). Cornets, Thomas Milward, Henry Walden, James Harrington, Thomas Mawſley; enſign, Daniel Robinſon; quartermaſters, John Durant, William Dudley, John Ealin. And in ſir John Pate's regiment of horſe, captain Nathanael Digby; Chriſtopher Bent, lieutenant to captain Bent; and Robert Woodland, cornet to captain Beaman. Nathanael Duncombe, marſhal-general; John Holland, ſchoolmaſter; and Philip Kinder, phyſician licentiate.

Leiceſter. Whereas the right honourable Theophilus earl of Huntingdon exhibited his Engliſh Bill into the Court of Exchequer, againſt George Mugg, James Bettony alias Movetty, William Croſsley, Richard Carter, Joſeph Patchett, John Peates, John Harriſon, Robert Holland, John Swindler, Thomas Sheppheard, Amos Sheppheard, Stephen Hood, and Theophilus Perkins; thereby ſhewing, that Henry earl of Huntingdon, the complainant's anceſtor, was ſeiſed in his demeſne as of fee of and in the manor or lordſhip of Loughborough in the county of Leiceſter, and of and in divers antient corn and malt mills in Loughborough aforeſaid, parcel of the ſaid manor, and which were eſteemed to be the manor-mills, all which were held in fee-farm of the crown, under the grant of queen Elizabeth, under an annual rent of £115. 16*s.* 6*d.*; and that the ſaid Henry earl of Huntingdon is ſince dead; and the ſaid manor, mills, and premiſes are, by meſne deſcents, conveyances, and ſettlements, lawfully come to the complainant, who for 30 years laſt hath been poſſeſſed thereof, and hath paid the ſaid rent, and ought to receive and enjoy the mulcture, tolls, and other advantages to the ſaid manor and mills belonging. That all the tenants, reſiants, and inhabitants, of or within the ſaid manor, by cuſtom, tenure, covenant, or other lawful means, have been, and are, bound and obliged, and have uſed, and of right ought to grind all their corn, grain, and malt, which they uſe ſpent ground in their reſpective houſes within the ſaid manor, at the ſaid mills, and not elſewhere; for the grinding whereof a reaſonable toll hath been paid; and that no perſon have or ought to erect or keep any other mills, querns, or other engines, within the ſaid manor, in prejudice of the complainant; nor ought any miller, loader, or carrier, of or belonging to any other mill or mills, to come within the ſaid manor, to fetch and carry away the corn and griſt of any perſon reſiding in the ſaid manor to any other mill or mills. But if any of the inhabitants within the ſaid manor have withdrawn their griſt from the complainant's mills and ground at any other mills, or if any mills, querns, or other engines, have been erected within the ſaid manor, in prejudice of the complainant's mills, or if any miller or loader of any foreign mills hath come into the ſaid manor to fetch away the griſt of any of the inhabitants thereof, then ſuch perſon or perſons ſo offending in any of the premiſes have been, or of right ought to be, not only reſtrained from their ſo doing, but to be compelled to make the plaintiff ſatisfaction for the loſs of the griſt from the ſaid mills; and the ſaid mills, querns, and other engines ſo erected as aforeſaid, have been and ought to be demoliſhed, and the perſon and perſons owning and uſing the ſame prohibited from grinding there to the complainant's prejudice; which right and privilege belonging to the complainant's ſaid mills hath been by ſeveral decrees of this court eſtabliſhed and confirmed, the complainant's mills being ſufficient at all times of the year to grind all the corn, grain, and malt ſpent ground in the ſaid manor: That the defendants are tenants or inhabitants in the ſaid manor, and have ſo been for four years laſt paſt, and not only refuſe to grind their own corn, grain, and malt, which they ſpend ground in the ſaid manor at the complainant's mills, but ſome of them have ſet up other mills in the ſaid manor, whereat they have not only ground their own griſt, but the griſt of other tenants and inhabitants ſpent ground in the ſaid manor, and ſome of them have ſet up loaders and carriers, who have carried great quantities of the griſt of the tenants and inhabitants of the ſaid manor to ſeveral other mills of the ſaid manor, and have there ground the ſame, and brought the ſame back into the ſaid manor, where the ſame hath been ſpent ground by ſeveral of the tenants and inhabitants of the ſaid manor, whereby the complainant is deprived of the griſt and cuſtom of his ſaid mills, which is a loſs and prejudice to his inheritance: That the defendants may anſwer the premiſes, and that all hand-mills, querns, and other mills, uſed in the ſaid manor by them, or any of them, may be deſtroyed; and that the plaintiff may have ſatisfaction for the toll of the griſt that hath been ground from his ſaid mills; and that the defendants may be compelled for the future to grind their griſt there; and that all foreign millers and loadſmen may be reſtrained from coming into the complainant's manor, and fetching any griſt forth of the ſame to be ground at any foreign mills, and the plaintiff relieved in the premiſes, is the prayer of the bill. To which ſaid Bill the ſaid ſeveral defendants anſwered; and by their anſwers deny that the tenants, reſiants, and inhabitants of the ſaid manor, are bound, or of right ought, to grind the corn, grain, and malt, which they uſe ſpent ground in the complainant's manor at the complainant's ſaid mills, and not at any other mills, or have been reſtrained from keeping hand-mills and querns for grinding their own corn and malt in the ſaid manor, or that foreign millers or loaders have been, or ought to be, reſtrained from fetching any griſt forth of the ſaid manor to grind at any foreign mills; and the defendants, Mugg, Bates, Bettony, Croſby, Carter, Patchett, Hood, and Perkins, ſeverally ſay they are inhabitants of the ſaid manor, and confeſs that they have ground at foreign mills, and deny that they are bound to grind at the complainant's mills; and the defendant Bates confeſſeth that about four years ſince he erected a horſe-mill in the ſaid manor, to make greats, as well for himſelf as other inhabitants within the ſaid manor, and inſiſts the uſing thereof; and the defendants, Harriſon and Holland, do alſo ſay that they are inhabitants of the ſaid manor, and that the defendant Harriſon rents a mill of ſir Ambroſe Phillipps in Garendon; and the defendant Holland is his loadſman; and the defendant Swindler ſaith he is loadſman to William Powell, who holds Diſhley mills under ſir Ambroſe Phillipps; and the defendant Thomas Shepheard denies that he is an inhabitant in the ſaid manor, but ſaith he holds an antient windmill in the manor of Coſtock; and the defendant Amos Shepheard ſaith that he holds the ſaid Coſtock mills under the defendant Thomas Shepheard; and the ſaid defendants, Harriſon, Holland, Swindler, Thomas Shepheard, and Amos Shepheard, do all inſiſt that it is lawful for them, at their wills and pleaſures, to fetch griſt forth of the complainant's manor to grind at their reſpective mills. And the defendants conclude with a general traverſe. To which anſwers the plaintiffs replied, and the defendants rejoined; and witneſſes were examined on either party and publiſhed; and the cauſe came to be heard as this day. Whereupon, reading the depoſitions of divers witneſſes taken on both ſides in the cauſe, and long debate of the matter by counſel of both ſides: it is this day ordered by the Court, that the matter in queſtion be tried at the next aſſizes to be held for the ſaid county of Leiceſter, in a feigned action, to be brought in the office of Pleas of this Court by the Plaintiff againſt the Defendants; and the iſſue to be, Whether the inhabitants within the ſaid manor of Loughborough have, time out of mind, been, and are obliged, by cuſtom, to grind all their corn, grain, and malt, ſpent ground in their reſpective houſes within the ſaid manor at the complainant's antient mills, and not at any other?[1] With the farther progreſs of this diſpute, or its final determination, we are wholly unacquainted.

In 1722, 82 freeholders polled from this pariſh; but in 1775, we find only 75 names.

An act was paſſed in 1759, for incloſing, within the lordſhip, townſhip, or liberty of Loughborough, ſeveral open fields and meadows, called The Windmill Field, Middle Field, Park Field, Burleigh Field, Tatmarſh Field, Toothill Field, Sandhurſt, Upper Meadow, Nether Meadow, Tatmarſh Meadow, Cotes Hyron, Fallow Meadow, Thackholm, and Fullfield Meadow; and alſo ſeveral commons, called The Moor, Tetbridge and Old Spring Commons, New Spring and Moor Cloſe, Slate Bridge and Boyer's Mear Way, Pegg's Furze, Wood Brook, and Widen, Burleigh Hill Common, Radmoor Common, Tatmarſh and Ruſhes Common, Three Willows, and Cotes Hyron Common, Foreſt Lane, and other ſmall parcels of common. In this act Francis earl of Huntingdon is deſcribed as lord of the manor of Loughborough; the maſter, fellows, and ſcholars of Emanuel College within the Univerſity of Cambridge, as patrons of the rectory; and the Rev. Thomas Alleyne as rector, and, in right of the rectory, entitled to certain glebe lands lying within the ſaid fields and meadows, and alſo to all the rectorial and vicarial tithes ariſing within the ſaid ſeveral fields and places, called The Windmill Field, Middle Field, Park Field, Burleigh Field, Tatmarſh Field, Toothill Field, Sandhurſt Field, part of Cotes Hyron, and part of Fallow Meadow, and alſo to ſeveral pieces and parcels of meadow-ground antiently laid out in ſatisfaction for all the tithes ariſing in the ſaid Upper Meadow, Nether Meadow, Tatmarſh Meadow, and Fullfield Meadow, Thackholm Meadow, and part of Cotes Hyron, and part of the Fallow Meadow; the earl of Huntingdon alſo as principal proprietor of, and ſir Wolſtan Dixie, baronet, Charles-James Pack, eſq. and ſundry other perſons, as the owners and proprietors of the other lands and grounds lying within the ſaid ſeveral fields and meadows, and to the right of common at open times of the ſame. The earl of Huntingdon, as lord of the manor, was entitled to the ſoil of the ſaid ſeveral commons; and, with ſeveral other perſons, entitled to the right of common of and in the ſaid ſeveral commons, in right of antient houſes within the ſaid town of Loughborough. The commiſſioners were in the firſt place to ſet out The Foreſt Lane, and ſo much adjoining land as ſhould make up 30 acres, to the feoffees of the town charities, which, with the herbage of the lanes and public roads to be made under this act, were to be uſed for depaſturing the cattle of the legal inhabitants not receiving alms. Seven acres to be applied to the getting of gravel and ſand for the repair of roads; after which, an allotment to be made to the rector and his ſucceſſors of ſuch part of the reſidue of the ſaid fields, meadows, and commons, as ſhould be an equivalent and a ſatisfaction for the ſaid glebe lands, and alſo for the ſaid ſeveral pieces and parcels of meadow ground antiently laid out in ſatisfaction for all the tithes ariſing in ſundry parts of the ſaid ſeveral meadows before-mentioned (except the ſaid meadow called The Nether Meadows, the allotments whereof are ſubſequently directed and provided for): A farther allotment is then to be made to the rector, of ſuch parcel or parcels of the lands and grounds in the reſidue of the ſaid ſeveral fields, meadows, and commons, or any or either of them, as ſhould be equal to one ſeventh part of the lands and grounds lying in the ſaid ſeveral fields and meadows, called The Windmill Field, Middle Field, Park Field, Burleigh Field, Tatmarſh Field, Toothill Field, Sandhurſt, and ſuch parts of Cotes Hyron, and Fallow Meadow, as were then liable to tithes, and for which no lands were antiently laid out in lieu of tithes, and alſo as ſhould be equal to one ſeventh part of the ſaid ſeveral commons (except the ſaid common called The Moor); which ſaid allotments, together with the modus thereinafter made payable to the rector for the time being, to be in lieu of, and as a recompence and full ſatisfaction for, all tithes of corn, grain, hay, wool, and lamb, and all other tithes whatſoever, rectorial or vicarial, and all eccleſiaſtical dues and profits whatſoever, ariſing from all the ſaid ſeveral fields, meadows, and commons. To the earl of Huntingdon, in lieu of his right of common, five full acres, part of Radmore Common, in one entire plott; with ſuch farther parcels of land as ſhould be equal in value to The Moor and other his land there now to be divided; the reſidue, in due proportions, among the other proprietors. For the purpoſes of this act, The Bull Swaith's Field, Maſter's Piece, Neatherd's Piece, and Pinder's Piece, to be conſidered as common ground; and, for the convenience of the antient cottages, their allotments to be ſet out near the town. A ſeparate proviſion is made for incloſing The Nether Meadow, which was to be divided and fenced from Thorpe Meadow; and laid out for graſs annually on the 10th of February; the graſs to be cut and carried away before the 12th of Auguſt; and no cattle to be there depaſtured till the firſt of September. Owners of this meadow may incloſe their ſhares by ſtoop and rail, but not to prevent communication; nor to plant or make any other fences, except by the ſide of the river Soar, and the ſide of the meadow adjoining to the fields. The Lammas, or Field Cloſes, are allowed to be ſet out to the old proprietors; and a yearly modus of £10. 18*s*. for tithes ariſing out of The Moor, is reſerved to the rector; with a proviſo that his dues ſhall not be prejudiced in any other part of the lordſhip. Monies wanted for public bridges, cauſeways, ſluices, cuts, drains, or banks, to be raiſed by a proportionable aſſeſſment; and the ſurveyors of the highways are allowed to get from the ſtone-pit in Foreſt Lane ſtone ſufficient for repairing the public and private roads, and making and maintaining all bridges and public works, within the Liberty of Loughborough. Cottages or tenements ſtanding on the waſte ground, with the ſmall parcels of ground therewith incloſed, are veſted in the earl of Huntingdon; who was alſo authorized to cut down, within ſix months after the award, any timber trees growing on the ſeveral commons. The act not to be put in execution till after the laſt day of Eaſter Term 1760; and in the mean time an action to be brought, to try the right of common claimed by ſeveral perſons occupying houſes, not being antient houſes, within the town of Loughborough, nor erected on the ſites of antient houſes; which right was conteſted by the earl of Huntingdon. The rector is empowered to grant leaſes for 21 years; the right of ſoil is veſted in the earl of Huntingdon; and proviſions are added for the general ſaving of all manerial rights.

[1] From the original records in the office of the Court of Exchequer.

From a liſt returned by the conſtables of this pariſh in 1770, it appeared that there were at that time 43 licenſed inns and ale-houſes therein; and in 1789 there were above 50 licenſed houſes.

Loughborough conſiſts but of one pariſh; to which belong two hamlets, Wood-thorpe and Knight-thorpe, each about a mile, or ſomewhat more, from the town, having their proper officers, and maintaining their own poor.

Within the ſame pariſh alſo, and about the ſame diſtance off, Weſtward, near the Foreſt, is Burleigh-hall, and alſo Loughborough Old Parks. Of each of theſe, ſeparate accounts will be given.

A court leet is annually held in the month of October by the lord of the manor's ſteward; whereat are choſen a jury of twelve men, who are occaſionally called upon to prevent encroachments in building, planting, &c. and to decide and ſettle various kinds of controverſies and differences in the pariſh, touching property, nuiſances, &c. Hereat are alſo choſen two conſtables and two thirdboroughs, likewiſe ſtreet-maſters, field-reeves, and pinders. Here are alſo a pariſh beadle, a common cryer, and four watchmen all night in winter, and two in ſummer.

Here are two churchwardens, one choſen by the miniſter, the other by the pariſh, as alſo two ſideſmen, who ſucceed the churchwardens in their office.

Leland, about 1539, thus deſcribes this place:

"The hole toune of Leirceſter at this tyme is builded of tymbre; and ſo is Loughborow after the ſame rate [1]. The towne of Lughborow is yn largeneſs and good building next to Leyrceſter of all the markette tounes yn the ſhire, and hath in it a 4 faire ſtrates or mo well pavid. The paroche chirche is faire. Chapelles or chirches beſide yn the towne be none. At the South Eſt ende of the church is a faire houſe of tymbre, wher ons king Henry VII. did lye. The great ſtreame of Sore river lay as I ſtoode on the left hand of the towne within leſſe than a quarter of a mile of it; and thereabout went Loughborow water into Sore [2]."

Burton, in 1622, ſays, "This town is great and large, well ſeated by reaſon of the wood and water, adorned with many fair buildings [3], and a large church; and well may challenge the ſecond place of accompt in this county."

Since Camden's time, who ſpeaks of it as "the largeſt and beſt-built town in the county next to Leiceſter [4]," it hath been much diminiſhed by fire.

It formerly had many pleaſant woods about and near it; particularly the Foreſt of Charnwood, or Charley, on the Weſt and South-weſt, ſpreading itſelf a great way. This is now nearly diſafforeſted; and in reſpect to timber almoſt barren, but affording paſturage for cattle, ſheep, &c. being ſtocked therewith by the inhabitants of many adjacent pariſhes and places, who have a right of common thereon.

Loughborough and its neighbourhood are greatly enlivened during the hunting ſeaſon by the vicinity of the Quorndon hunt; and the hoſpitality of the inhabitants and the goodneſs of its inns cannot be too highly commended. The town ſtands on a gravelly ſoil; the ſprings lying high, the water in ſome parts harder than in others, but in general pure and good; the wells are of no conſiderable depth, the air for the moſt part wholeſome, and its inhabitants healthy. Owing to a variety of entertaining landſcapes ſurrounding it, a fine tract of rich meadow ground, edged by the river, lying near it, good roads, extenſive proſpects, and pleaſant walks about it, not forgetting that beautiful wood called Quorn or Buddon wood, the delight of travellers; it is certainly by far the moſt agreeable ſituation in the whole county of Leiceſter.

The town in general has many bad old thatched buildings in it [5]; yet of late years has been conſiderably improved; and the new buildings are covered with ſlates from Swithland about five miles diſtant.

At the lower end of the Market-place, on the ſame ſpot of ground where the old Croſs ſtood, ſtands the preſent Butter and Hen croſs, erected in 1742; the ſlated roof whereof is ſupported by eight round brick pillars ſet up in an octagon form, arched above from one to the other; with an aſcent of four ſtone gradations or ſteps on the inſide. On the ſummit of this building is fixed a ſpindle in a ball, bearing the four cardinal points of the compaſs, E. W. N. S. with a proper vane, ſhewing the ſitting of the wind, topped with an earl's coronet, all of wrought iron; and cloſe to one ſide of this ſtructure is placed Hudibras's wooden ſail, or pariſh ſtocks [6].

Near to the Croſs alſo ſtood one of the principal inns, known by the name of "The George and Dragon [7]."

On the upper end of the ſaid Market-place ſtands a ruinous brick edifice, called The Court Chamber, where is annually held the Lord's leet; and which, by an inſcription over the door, appears to have been built in the year 1688. This chamber has within the laſt 60 years been uſed as a ball-room for the company who viſited the races; and within the laſt 30 years comedians who frequented the town have here taken £30. on a benefit night.

[1] Leland, vol. I. p. 16. [2] Ibid. p. 20. [3] "So," adds Mr. Burton in MS. "Leland is of opinion in the Itinerary."

[4] See before, p. 884.

[5] Let it be obſerved that this remark is by an inhabitant of the town, the late Dr. Pochin; to whoſe MS Hiſtory of Loughborough I am under conſiderable obligations for many of the particulars relative to this extenſive pariſh; which, without always particularly diſtinguiſhing them, are here incorporated with ſubſequent information from Mr. Webſter and other intelligent friends.

[6] See Grey's Hudibras. [7] Since Dr. Pochin's time this inn has been ſold out in parcels, and there is now no inn here.

Adjoining to the ſhambles, in an obſcure corner, is a ſmall priſon, or black hole, for the confinement of vagrants and diſorderly perſons.

The whipping-poſt is now down.

A few paces lower than the Court chamber, on the North-weſt ſide of the ſtreet, is the Corn-market, ſome years ago plentifully ſupplied with bags of corn on a market-day; but of late, by artful management, there has hardly been ſet out a ſingle bag; the grain in general having been bought and ſold in the public inns and ale-houſes by ſample[1].

Fifty years ago, or perhaps ſomewhat leſs, the malt trade was very briſk here and extenſive; but it has ſince been reduced to little more than a home conſumption.

Lower down in the Market-place, and on the other ſide extending near to the Croſs, ſtands, detached from all other buildings, a row, or rather clump, of miſerable houſes, with petty ſhops belonging to them; an unſeemly nuiſance, which, if removed, would render the ſtreet now ſpacious and uniform.

The chief manufactures at preſent carried on are wool-combing and frame-work knitting; in which latter employment, in 1790, 194 families were employed; and at preſent (1802) the hoſiery buſineſs is carried on to a very great extent; for Meſſrs. Paget and Sons employ 40 combers of wool, and work up the ſtuff, ſo that they employ ſome hundreds of hands in the manufactory.

The ſubſtantial benefit of the Loughborough canal appears from a very recent ſale of one of the ſhares; which originally coſt £125. and has ſince been ſold for £1800; a price, large as it may ſeem, in ſome degree warranted by the annual dividend's amounting to £95.

Another ſtriking proof of the increaſing opulence of Loughborough is the magnificent brewery lately erected by Meſſrs. William and Thomas Harley; the length of which is 205 feet; the breadth 40; the walls 30 feet high, and the roof above the wall-plate 20; ſo that the height is 50 feet. The walls are 20 inches thick. The firſt brick of this building was laid by Suſannah, wife of Mr. Francis Harley, on the 12th day of May, 1801. At the end of this building is another for ſtore; 86 feet long, 18 broad, and two ſtories high.

Here is alſo a manufactory of tobacco-pipes, not inferior to any that are made either in this or any adjoining county.

Beſides the old fairs aforementioned, there are ſince two new ones added to the number, or rather old ones new revived in the year 1730, which are annually held in the Spring ſeaſon; one on the 28th of March, the other on the 25th of April, chiefly for ſheep and horned cattle; and theſe, we are informed, anſwer very well. As to Holy Thurſday fair, commonly ſo called, it is no fair by grant or proclamation, but only a cuſtomary reſort of numbers of young people to Loughborough on that particular day, for their pleaſure and amuſement.

From the Croſs, as the centre, branch out ſome of the principal ſtreets of this town; that is to ſay, Southward through Huckſter's row, The High-ſtreet, or High-gate, being the high-road to Leiceſter, and ſo to London; Weſtward, The Swan-ſtreet, leading through the Ruſhes towards Derby; Northward, Biggin-ſtreet and Church-gate, leading to the church, and forwards for Nottingham; whilſt The Market-ſtreet, upward, directs through The Ward's end to The Parks, or along The Foreſt-lane to the Foreſt.

At the bottom of The High-gate, and on the right from the Croſs, ſtands one of the principal inns, known by the ſign of The Bull's Head, the Huntingdon creſt, being the earl of Moira's property. A great part of this excellent inn was rebuilt in 1754 and 1755; and it is now rendered far more commodious for the reception of gueſts than it was before.

The next door to this is another very good inn, The Anchor, which is patronized by earl Ferrers.

Nearly oppoſite to The Bull runs a long ſpacious ſtreet, called The Baxter-gate, leading upward to the common bake-houſe, which formerly faced the top thereof, but has lately been pulled down, and a good houſe built on the ſpot. Why this ſtreet is called the Baxter-gate is not very clear: the tradeſman here denominated a baker in Scotland is called a baxter; therefore, perhaps, as leading to the ſaid common bake-houſe, the only one formerly in the whole town, and to which conſequently there was in thoſe days great reſort, it might poſſibly take its name of Baxter or Baker's gate.

Turning ſhort at the top of this ſtreet on the right, is an indifferent ſtreet called The Pinfold-gate, as running toward and beyond the pinfold, or common pound.

Turning ſhort to the left, commences another ſtreet, called Sparrow-hill, uniting with the upper end of The Church-gate, at the great entrance into the church-yard, paſſing at the ſame time on toward the town's end for Nottingham-road.

The laſt ſtreet worth mentioning is The Wood-gate. This, being perhaps the moſt ſpacious ſtreet in the town, would, if the buildings were good, make an handſome figure. In former times it was the principal road to thoſe extenſive woods which then ſpread over the whole face of Charnwood.

The following traditional tale is credited by the inhabitants: When the Foreſt abounded with timber, a ſow, which had been turned into the fields after the gathering in of harveſt, was miſſing, and no tidings could be had of her, ſo that ſhe was given up for loſt; till about three years afterward it happened a very froſty winter, when, to the great ſurprize of the owner, who lived at the houſe now the Angel Inn in the Market-place, the old ſow came down out of the Foreſt, and led after her, into the yard where her maſter then lived, a large herd of boars, ſows, and young ſwine.

The pavements of the ſtreets in general, chiefly owing to the weight and number of heavy carriages paſſing thereon, are but in an indifferent plight, conſequently very dirty in bad weather; and more eſpecially ſo, as there is no public ſcavenger appointed to remove and carry away the dirt.

From the thatch and rotten timber in ſeveral parts of the town, whenever a fire happens with a ſtrong wind, experience has ſhewn that the devaſtation is terrible. After ſo many indeed as have already happened, one ſhould have expected that Loughborough would have put on a tolerable appearance, as is the caſe of all other towns that have ſuffered; but it is to be lamented that ſeveral ſpots are not rebuilt at all, and that the number of good houſes is ſtill inconſiderable.

Towards the upper end of The Church-gate, on the right hand (going up the ſtreet) ſtands a very antient ſtone building, for many years known by the name of The Old Gaol, which in 1753 was repaired, ſtuccoed over, and beautified, and was then appropriated to the uſe of the high-ſchoolmaſter, for the reception of his boarders. Before the ſaid alteration, notwithſtanding it had been inhabited from time to time by various perſons, and, as ſome ſay, by Mr. Thomas Burton, the great benefactor to the town hereafter noticed, p. 895; from the thickneſs of its walls, the particular form of the ſtone door-caſes, its windows croſſed with iron bars, a deep dark cell in one corner of the houſe reſembling a dungeon, and other diſmal marks of durance, it hath always worn the appearance of a priſon; but at what period of time it really was ſuch, is not at this day known.

Oppoſite to the broad entrance into the church-yard, ſtands the houſe (though of late years much modernized) where formerly dwelt Edward the firſt lord Haſtings of Loughborough. In the Cunnery incloſure (about 30 acres of rich land) behind the ſaid hall or houſe, which at that time of day was uſed as a rabbit-warren for the ſervice of the family, formerly ſtood, as it is ſaid, a chapel for the private uſe of the ſame; and at the bottom of the ſaid incloſure or warren there are yet the remains of a large fiſh-pond, called now the Cunnery-pool, belonging to the ſaid hall-houſe. From the ſaid warren and cloſe adjoining thereto, lie many other ſmall old incloſed parcels of land, part of the ſame eſtate, which, on account of their vicinity to the town, let well, and are called The Cunnery-cloſes.

[1] I think it proper to ſtate that this remark is Dr. Pochin's.

On the front of ſome few of the more antient houſes in this town are certain ſigns ſtill viſible, worked, or ſtamped, on the coating of the walls; ſuch as the Roſe, the Adam and Eve, the Bull's head, the Crooked Billet, as alſo large ſpreading vines with cluſters of grapes, denoting ſuch houſes formerly to have been inns, taverns, or other places of entertainments.

The late open fields belonging to this town, known by the names of The Park-field, Middle-field, Windmill-field, Tuthill field, and Burleigh-field, were all incloſed, according to the mode of the times, in the year 1761[1]; as were alſo The Over or Upper-meadow, and The Moor or Cow-paſture; which ſaid open fields and meadow contained, by ſtatute meaſure, 2142 acres, 3 roods, and 4 poles, excluſive of an allotment for public roads.

Here is alſo a meadow diſtinguiſhed by the name of The Nether-meadow, containing by admeaſurement 270 acres, 3 roods, and 10 poles, which is not incloſed, ſuppoſed to be inferior to no meadow land in the county; for, in tolerably fruitful ſeaſons, it produces two tons of good hay on an acre when weighed out. It was in this meadow that horſe-races uſed to be practiſed; the laſt of which was on Sept. 20, 1756.

Within half a mile of the town, on the road leading towards Nottingham, begins a chain of ſtone-bridges[2], which is continued on for half a mile more, near to Cotes; where the laſt of theſe bridges, having not leſs than 13 arches[3] for the paſſage of the river, terminates the ſaid chain. Theſe bridges have within a few years been all made wider; the thirteen arch bridge is altered by putting 12 arches into ſix, ſo that it now contains only ſeven arches.

Hard by, upon the ſaid river, at about half a mile diſtant from each other, ſtand two antient corn-mills, called Loughborough-mills, many years ſince granted out to the earls of Huntingdon as lords of the manor, and ſtill held by the earl of Moira, on a certain fee-farm rent, made payable by them to the late ſir James Daſhwood's family.

Extracts from the Pariſh Regiſters; Accidents; and other Remarkable Events.

1540. John Dawſon, the ſon of Henry Dawſon, was baptized the 8th day of May.—This John Dawſon did copy and write out this book out of the old paper-book, when he was of the age of threeſcore and one years; and at that time had been ſchoolmaſter of the Grammar-ſchool in Loughborough 36 years; and in his time taught and brought up many ſcholars, gentlemen, men of worſhip, juſtices of peace, and poor mens' ſons, profitable to the church of God, preachers and miniſters beneficial and comfortable to the common-wealth, advancing greatly the glory of God.

1542. Edward Calton, the ſon of Mr Robert Calton, was baptized the 29th day of Auguſt; whoſe father aforeſaid had taught the Grammar-ſchool here in Loughborough, and after taught in Nottingham, and preferred many good ſcholars in his time.

1551, June. "The Swat, called New Acquaintance, alias Stoupe, Knave, and know thy Maſter," began the 24th day of this month.

The Regiſter then mentions 12 perſons who were buried in four days; and then goes forward to another page, where it is written at the top, "The Sweat, or New Acquaintance;" and mentions ſeven names, all buried in three days; in all 19 in ſix days. After this it ſeems to ceaſe[4].

Sept. 19, ſir William Fiſhpool, a prieſt, buried.

[4] This was the laſt viſitation of this extraordinary malady, which the learned Dr. Freind juſtly calls ſomething very remarkable and wonderful; a diſtemper, which was never heard of before in any age or nation; and which, after returning now and then for the ſpace of ſome years, has ever ſince entirely diſappeared. It originally was a native of our own iſland; and upon this account it is not ſo ſtrange that it ſhould be the moſt accurately deſcribed by one of our countrymen, the great and learned Dr. Caius. It began at firſt in 1483, in Henry the Seventh's army, upon his landing at Milford haven, and ſpread itſelf in London from the 21ſt of September to the end of October. It returned here five times, and always in ſummer; firſt in 1485; then in 1506; afterwards in 1517, when it was ſo violent that it killed in the ſpace of three hours; ſo that many of the nobility died; and of the vulgar ſort, in ſeveral towns, half often periſhed. It appeared the fourth time in 1528, and proved mortal then in the ſpace of ſix hours. Many of the courtiers died of it; and Henry the Eighth himſelf was in danger. In 1529, and only then, it infeſted the Netherlands and Germany; in which laſt country it did much miſchief, and deſtroyed many; and particularly was the occaſion of interrupting a conference at Marpurgh between Luther and Zuinglius about the Euchariſt. The laſt return of it with us was in 1554. In Weſtminſter it carried off 120 in a day; and the two ſons of Charles Brandon, both dukes of Suffolk, died of it. At Shrewſbury, particularly where Dr. Caius reſided, it broke out in a very furious manner. The deſcription he gave of it is terrible, like the plague of Athens. He very properly calls it a peſtilent contagious fever of one natural day. †The Sweat itſelf he reckons only as a ſymptom or reaſon of this fever. The manner of its ſeizure was thus: Firſt, it affected ſome particular part, attended with inward heat and burning, unquenchable thirſt, reſtleſsneſs, ſickneſs at ſtomach and heart (though ſeldom vomiting), head-ach, delirium, then faintneſs and exceſſive drowſineſs. The pulſe quick and vehement, and the breath ſhort and labouring. Children, poor and old people, leſs ſubject to it. Of others, ſcarce any eſcaped the attack; and moſt died. In that town, where it laſted ſeven months, periſhed near a thouſand. Even travelling into France or Flanders, they did not eſcape it: and, what is ſtrange, even the Scotch were free, and the Engliſh only affected, and foreigners not affected in England. None recovered under 24 hours. At firſt the phyſicians were much puzzled how to treat it; the only cure was to carry on the ſweat, which was neceſſary, for a long time; for, if ſtopt, it was dangerous, or fatal. The way, therefore, was to be patient, and lie ſtill, and not to take cold. If Nature was not ſtrong enough to do it, Art ſhould aſſiſt her in promoting the ſweat, by cloaths, medicine, wine, &c. The violence of it over in 15 hours; but no ſecurity till 24 were paſſed. In ſome there was a neceſſity to repeat the ſweating; in ſtrong conſtitutions, twelve times. Great danger to remove out of bed; ſome, who had not ſweated enough, fell into very ill fevers. No fleſh in all the time; no drink for the firſt five hours; for in the ſeventh, the diſtemper increaſes; about the ninth, delirium; ſleep to be avoided by all means.—It appeared by experience, as the lord Bacon obſerves, that this diſeaſe was rather a ſurprize of nature, than obſtinate to remedies, if it were in time well. For, when proper care was taken, the patient generally recovered." †Dr. Freind's Hiſtory of Phyſick, part ii. p. 333—336.—Dr. Keye's account of this ſickneſs, intituled "De Ephemerâ Britanniâ," was publiſhed in 1556, and very neatly reprinted at London in 1721, 8vo. The Dedication to Antony Perrenot, biſhop of Arras, is dated Jan. 11, 1555. To the firſt edition the author ſubjoined, Galen's two books, "De Libris propriis;" and "de Ordine Librorum ſuorum;" and "Hippocrates's book, "De ratione victûs in Morbis acutis."—Dr. Kaye deſcribes it as a new, ſtrange, and violent diſeaſe; for when it attacked any man, he either died or eſcaped within nine or ten hours; if he ſlept, to which all were then naturally inclined, he died in ſix hours; and if he took the leaſt cold, in three. It raged among men of the ſtrongeſt conſtitutions and years: few aged men, women, or children being ſubject to it, or dying of it; but which was moſt ſtrange, no foreigner who was then in England died by it; though 400 Frenchmen were attending the ambaſſador where it was hotteſt. The Engliſh, as ſingled out, ſickened and died of it in other countries, without any danger to the natives. It was firſt known among us in the beginning of the reign of Henry VII; but was not ſo violent as now. 800 perſons died of it in a week in London; and in a few days about 960 at Norwich. Blomefield's Norwich, p. 131. 756; Baker, p. 341; Holinſhed, p. 764. 794; Stowe, p. 486. It did not viſit Norwich in 1517, 1528 or 1529. It began Sept. 21, 1483, and laſted to the end of October. It ſeized the parties with a violent burning ſweat, which ſo violently diſtempered the blood with ardent heat, ſcarce one in 100 eſcaped alive; for which account it was alſo called The dead ſweat; for all were inanimate as ſoon as it took them, or very ſoon after yielded up the ghoſt; and what was worſe, as it appeared afterwards (Hall, fol. 111. 6 Hen. VII.) the ſame perſons were liable to the ſame diſeaſe again. (Blomefield, p. 126.) Baker ſays, the remedy found was, that if one was taken with it in the day, he was preſently to lie down without talking, and never riſe of 24 hours; and if in the night not to riſe at all during that time; and neither eat or drink, or at leaſt but moderately.—" In the ſame yeere a new kind of ſickenes invaded ſuddenlie the people of this land, paſſing through the ſame from the one end to the other. It began about the one and December 1551. This day there was a great wind, which blew down ſix pinnacles off the tower, and did much other damage: "Hodiè fuit ingens ventus, qui evertit pyramides in ſummâ campanalis, fregitque apicem templi, multaque mala alia intulit, &c."

"Heare is to be noted and remembered, that from this 10th day of April in anno 1554, there was no regiſter keepte, by reaſon of the alteration of Religion, and often chaunginge of Prieſts in thoſe times and yeares, until the firſt yeare of the raigne of our Soveraigne Ladie the Queen's Majeſty Elizabeth, by the grace of God Queen of Englande, Fraunce, and Ireland, defender of the Faith, &c. and until the yeare of God 1558."

Midſummer 1558, a plague began.

Note, between Midſummer 1555 and Midſummer 1559, there died of the plague and other diſeaſes 295.

1561, Aug. 16, ſir Edward Arnold the prieſt, when he had buried all thoſe before written, was buried himſelf by George Chew.

Nota, the fall of money was proclaimed at Leiceſter on the 28th day of September: a teſter to 2*d.*; a 2*d.* to 1½*d*; a penny to three farthings; a ob̄. as it was, &c.

July 17, 1564, the aſſizes were kept and held here, becauſe the plague was in Leiceſter; and there were eight perſons executed and buried the 19th.—In this year there were 256 families in Loughborough; 6 in Bothe-thorpe; 14 in Wood-thorpe; 1 in Loughborow park, and 1 in Burley park.

Dec. 16, 1572. George Chew, miniſter of this church, buried.

Nov. 26, 1573. Sir Adam Winterbotham, prieſt, parſon of Bruxby [1], buried.

April 9, 1578. Symon Bryarn and Joan Oſmond were married; and, within a week after, were both put into Bridewell at London, becauſe he married the mother of this woman, being alive, and now by falſe and unlawful means married his wife's daughter, contrary to the law of God.—N. B. There were 30 weddings in Loughborough this year.

1578-9. Dorothy Haſtings, daughter of ſir George Haſtings, knight, who was born the 12th day of January, was baptized the 15th. Mr. Francis Haſtings, godfather; the lady Stanhope, and the lady Throgmorton, wife to Mr. Stoocks, of Beaumanor, godmothers.

1579. Roger Shepherd, ſon in law to Nicholas Wollands, was ſlain by a lioneſs, which was brought into the town to be ſeen of ſuch as would give money to ſee her. He was ſore wounded in ſundry places; and was buried the 26th day of Auguſt.

1581. Margaret Banniſter, daughter of William Banniſter, going after the manner of roguiſh Ægyptians [2], was baptized the 2d of April.

Maſter John Willocke, preacher and parſon of this pariſh church of Loughborough, departed this life the 4th day of December, and was buried the 5th, being Sunday, in the year of God 1585.

1587. Mr. Henry Haſtings and Mrs. Dorothy Willoughby were married the 9th day of July.

1593. Becauſe the plague was at Leiceſter, the Viſitation was held at Boſworth the 24th of October.

1600. Mrs. Mary Browne, wife of Mr. John Browne, parſon of Loughborough, a very virtuous woman, and in all Chriſtian actions a right Chriſtian, was buried the 28th day of October; whoſe death was lamented of many people with heavy hearts, &c.

1606. Mrs. Helen Browne, wife of Mr. John Browne, parſon of Loughborough, was buried the 15th day of April.

A dreadful plague broke out in this town in Auguſt 1609; which raged for 18 months.

1609-10, Jan. 9. Thomas Poole, ſon of John Poole, was born the 19th day of Auguſt laſt, and not baptized untill the 9th day of January after; viz. this day; becauſe the mother of it was buried of the plague the 24th day of Auguſt, the firſt that died of the plague this year; ſo that he was 20 weeks old before he was baptized.

Jan. 10, 1610-11. Thomas Johnſon, ſon of William, came new from London, and was buried of the plague this day.

This deſtructive diſorder ſeems to have ended about the 19th of February, 1610-11; and at that time there had died within the town and pariſh, 452 perſons, men, women, and children [3]; and within a mile of Loughborough is a ſpot of ground to this day twentieth of September, and continued untill the latter end of October, being ſo ſharpe and deadlie, that the like was never heard of to anie man's remembrance before that time: for ſuddenlie a deadlie burning ſweat ſo aſſailed their bodies and diſtempered their blood with a moſt ardent heat, that ſcarſe one amongſt an hundred that ſickened did eſcape with life; for all in manner, as ſoone as the ſweat tooke them, or within a ſhort time after, yeelded the ghoſt. Beſide the great number which deceaſſed within the citie of London, two maiors ſucceſſivelie died within eight daies, and ſix aldermen. At length by the diligent obſervation of thoſe that eſcaped (which marking what things had doone them good and holpen to their deliverance, uſed the like againe, when they fell into the ſame diſeaſe the ſecond or third time, as to diverſe it chanced,) a remedie was found for that mortall maladie, which was this: If a man in the day time were taken with the ſweat, then ſhould he ſtraght lie downe with all his clothes and garments, and continue in his ſweat foure and twentie houres, after ſo moderate a ſort as might be. If in the night he chanced to be taken, then ſhould he not riſe out of his bed for the ſpace of foure and twentie houres, ſo caſting the clothes that he might in no wiſe provoke the ſweat; but lie ſo temperatlie, that the water might diſtill out ſoftlie of the owne accord, and to abſtaine from all meat, if he might ſo long ſuffer hunger; and to take no more drinke, neither hot nor cold, than would moderatelie quench and aſſwage his thirſtie appetite. Thus in lukewarm drinke, temperate heate, and meaſurable cloaths, manie eſcaped. Few which uſed this order (after it was found out) died of this ſweat. Marie one point diligentlie above all other in this cure is to be obſerved, that he never did put his hand or foot out of the bed to refreſh or coole himſelfe, which to doo is no leſſe jeopardie than ſhort and preſent death. Thus this diſeaſe, comming in the firſt yeare of king Henrie's reigne, was judged (of ſome) to be a token and ſigne of a troublous reigne of the ſame king, as the proofe partlie afterwards ſhewed itſelf." Hollinſhed, p. 763, copied by Grafton, p. 857.—Hall ſays, "it was ſo ſore, ſo paynfull and ſharp, that the lyke was never harde of to any mane's remembrancie before that tyme. For ſodenly a deadly and burnyng ſweate invade their bodyes and vexed their blood with a moſt ardent heate, infeſting the ſtomach and the head previouſly; by the tormentyng and vexacion of which ſicknes, men were ſo ſore handled, and ſo paynfully pangned, that if they were layed in their bed, beyng not liable to ſuffre the importunate heat, they caſt away the ſhetes and all the clothes lying on the bed. If they were within apparell and veſtures, they would put of all their garmentes even to their ſhertes. Others were ſo drye, that they dranke the colde water to quenche their importune heat and inſaciable thirſt. Others that coulde or at the leaſte woulde abyde the heate and ſtyntche (for in dede the ſweate had a great and a ſtrong ſavoure), cauſed clothes to be layed upon them, as muche as they coulde beare, to dryve oute the ſweate, yf it might be. All in maner, as ſone as the ſweate toke them, or within a ſhort ſpace after, yelded up their ghoſt.—When any perſon had fully and completely ſweat 24 houres (for ſo long did the ſtrength of this plague hold them), he ſhould be then cleerly delyvered of his deſeaſe; yet not ſo cleane ryd of it, but that he might ſhortly relaps, and fall agayn into the ſame evyll pyt; yea, agayne, and twyſe agayne, as many one indede dyd, which after the third tyme dyed of the ſame.—This ſtraunge and unknowen deſeaſe, at that tyme, vexed and greved only the realme of England in every toune and village, as yt dyd diverſe tymes after. But lv yere after yt ſayled into Flaunders, and after into Germany, where it deſtroyed people innumerable for lack of knowledge of the Engliſhe experience." Hall, f. III. It came again 22 Hen. VII. (Ib. f. IIX.) 9 Hen. VIII. "this malady was ſo cruell, that it killed ſome within three houres; ſome within twoo houres; ſome merry about diner, and dedde at ſupper. Many dyed in the kynge's court; the lorde Clinton, the lorde Grey of Wilton, and many knightes, gentlemen, and officers. For this plague Mighelmas terme was adjourned; and, becauſe that this malady continued from July to the middle of December, the kyng kept hymſelf ever with a ſmall compaignie, and kept no ſolempne Chriſtmas, willing to have no reſon or feare of infeccion. In ſome one toune halfe the people died; and in ſome other the thirde parte, the ſweate was ſo fervent and infeccious (f. LXIII.) 20 Hen. VIII. in the end of May it began again at London, and went through the realm. Many died within five or ſix hours; divers in the court, amongſt them, ſir Francis Poynts, who was embaſſador in Spain. The king and court remained at Tittenhanger, which was daily purged with fires and other preſervatives." f. CLXXI.

called The Cabbin Lees (whereon many of the inhabitants prudently built themſelves huts and encamped, to avoid the infection[1]). But be it noted here, that this was an accidental and local plague only, which happened in ſome particular parts of the country at this time, and bore no reſpect to that general plague in the year 1603, mentioned by our Engliſh hiſtorians; which made ſuch terrible havock and devaſtation in London, and other parts of the kingdom.

One perſon died of the plague in March; and two more in April; and after that time the diſorder ſeems to have ceaſed.

Mary Cleiveland, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Cleiveland, baptized Oct. 17, buried Oct. 19, 1611.

John Cleiveland, baptized June 17, 1613.

Margaret Cleiveland, baptized Aug. 27, 1615.

Joſeph Cleiveland, baptized June 4, 1620.

1622. Mem. that the 4th day of June there was a very grievous fire in this town, which burnt down to the ground many houſes.

1622-3. Mr. John Browne, parſon of this town of Loughborough, was buried the 26th day of February.

The freeholders here in 1630 were, John Dixon, Edward Hinkley, John Stocken, John Lawrence, Valentine Pemblebury, and Thomas Hebb, ſenior.

In 1631, there died of the plague 135.

Thomas Randon, a ſaddler, and Katharine Higenbothome, were married Sept. 29, 1636. It can be proved that this family have continued to be ſaddlers here ever ſince that time, and it is likely to continue at preſent; for at the baptiſm of William, the ſon of John Randon, on the 15th day of May, 1786, there attended at the font (excluſive of the miniſter and clerk),

Two godfathers.
Two godmothers.
One godſon.

Three ſons.
Two grandfathers.
Two grandſons.
One great grandfather.
One great grandſon.
Two ſiſters.
Two great aunts, and
One great nephew.

The whole comprizing ſix perſons, viz. the father, the child, and four ſponſors.

Of this company there were two fathers, two ſons, one grandfather, and one grandſon, who could each of them make a ſaddle at that time.

1637. Henry, the ſon of Mr. John Browne, parſon, and of Katharine his wife, baptized July 16.

1642. Mr. Thomas Hewes, ſometime a merchant of London, buried October 7.

Mr. John Browne, parſon of this town, the ſame day.

In the difficulties of the civil war, it was not likely that Loughborough ſhould eſcape with impunity.

The having given title of baron to the gallant colonel Henry Haſtings (which was conferred by king Charles I. Oct. 23, 1642) was of itſelf ſufficient to raiſe the fury of the Parliamentarian partizans.

The king was at Loughborough in 1643; and was here again, with his army, May 28, 1645, in their march from Aſhby to Leiceſter[2]. In that year the town was plundered[3]; and the rector, Mr. Hall, about that period ejected from his living.

John Chamberlain, eſq. who had married Elizabeth daughter of ſir William Leigh, of Loughborough, having been ſequeſtered for his loyalty to king Charles, paid £1246. for compoſition[4]; and William Stirrop, of Loughborough, was fined £2. 13*s.* 4*d.*

We find by the Regiſter that in 1644 and 1645 the church was made a barrack for ſoldiers; after which, the inhabitants burnt in it frankincenſe to ſweeten it.

June 6. Jeremiah and Thomas Haine, both ſoldiers[5], were buried at Loughborough.

June 9. Edward Perſons, a ſoldier, buried.

This year ſeveral ſums in the Churchwardens Accompts are entered as given to ſoldiers, their wives and children, coming out of Ireland.

June 6, 1645, there fell a ſtrange ſtorm of hail in that part of Leiceſterſhire which is in and about Loughborough; ſome of the hail-ſtones were as big as ſmall hen's eggs, and the leaſt as big as muſquet-bullets: it deſtroyed the corn, and did much hurt in that part of the country where it fell[6].

From the 2d of Auguſt 1645, to the 14th of May, 1646, died of the plague 22.

From July 20, 1647, to March 25, 1648, died of the plague 83.

No more of the plague in 1648.

1653. Memorandum, that in the month of Auguſt, by virtue of an order from the Council of State, there was collected in the town and pariſh of Loughborough, for a fire at Marlborough in Wiltſhire (which was fourſcore thouſand pounds loſs), the ſum of four pounds ſeventeen ſhillings and five-pence, by John Roadley and Thomas Oare, churchwardens, and Nathanael Williams and William Lovett, aſſiſtants in the buſineſs.

Loughborough, Oct. 6, 1653. This is to certify that John Wright, of Loughborough, is elected to be regiſter for the pariſh of Loughborough aforeſaid by the inhabitants of the ſame; and hath this day taken his oath before me William Danvers, eſq. one of the juſtices of the peace for this county, for his faithful diſcharging of the ſaid office. Witneſs my hand, the day and year above-written. WILL. DANVERS.

In 1655, the ſum of £7. was collected in Loughborough, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont.

1656. The lady Margaret Bromley[7] was buried March 23.

In 1659 was publiſhed, "A Warning-piece to the General Council of the Army, being ſundry concurrent Eſſays towards a righteous Settlement. With a Word to the Reader, ſhewing the Unrighteouſneſs and growing Danger of bringing all the Armies in the Three Nations under one ſingle chief Head and Conduct. By ſome of the Subſcribers to the firſt Eſſay, reſiding in London; in which the then ruling powers of the Church are thus characterized: "If the covetous Prieſthood[8], and Chieftains of Colledges, exceeding by far ſome of the Pluraliſts and Biſhops they decried for that abomination, in ſo near aſſociation, and inchambred ſo oft with the chief leader, together with their tything-diſciples in councils, have ſuch a hand in removing of tythes, and the lawyers, in beſt likeneſs to them, have their finger in reforming the laws which get them their gains, wee will expect no more reformation or liberty from Wallingford-houſe, than we had theſe laſt ſeven years from Whitehall[9]."

This tract is ſigned by ſeveral inhabitants of London; and ſubjoined to it is "A Teſtimony to Truth, from ſeveral of the Baptized Characters in and about Abingdon;" and another, from "a few more Mourners in the Counties of Devon and Cornwall;" and "A further Teſtimony to Truth; or, ſome earneſt Groans for a righteous Settlement in this Hour of Diſtraction, agreeable to the late Eſſay, ſo ſuitably offered by ſome Friends and Brethren to this Purpoſe: by ſome Baptized Congregations, and other cordial Lovers and Aſſertors of the Public Good Old Cauſe, in the Counties of Leiceſter, Nottingham, Rutland, Lincoln, Stafford, Darby, and Shropſhire. Atteſted and ſubſcribed in the name, and by the appointment, of the reſpective congregations under-written, viz.

About this period, the following tradeſmen of Loughborough iſſued their tokens (ſee Plate CXXI.)

1. "John Alen nere the (Croſs) in Loughborough, J. A."

2. "Mathew Alain, of Loughborow, 1666." On the centre of each ſide, "M. A."

3. "Robert Bunnys, in Loughborough;" (on one ſide the George; on the other the Three Tuns.)

6. "John Varnam, in Loughborough," (at the Wheatſheaf.)

By the following brief, dated March 1, 1666-7, it appears that two dreadful fires had happened at Loughborough in the preceding year.

"Whereas we are credibly given to underſtand, as well by the humble ſupplication and petition of our poor diſtreſſed ſubjects, Thomas Webſter, Thomas Mercer, Thomas Juings, Bartholomew Sanders, Henry Chambers, Zachary Patchet, Widdow Patty, Ann Brewyn, widow, William Forcil, Thomas Greenwood, George King, Jane Clark, widow, Robert Gamble, Joan Shipley, Bartholomew Peak, James Webſter, Leah Taylor, Widow Gloſs, Elizabeth Wingfield, widow, John Webſter, gentleman, Myles Webſter, William Hawley, Robert Boyer, John Symonds, Samuel Hood, Richard Hardy, William Croſsly, John Whinyates, Thomas Hebb, gent. William Savage, Henry Light, George Werden, gent. Mary Yennings, Heſter Bradſhaw, Richard Shipley, Richard Friend, John Staton, Elizabeth Webſter, widow, William Starkey, Richard Handſad, Francis Hanworth, John Cook, Ralph Higot, Miles Newton, William Sarſon, George Parnham, Edward Harriſon, William Hardmeat, Thomas Hornbuckle, Nicholas Foſter, Bartholomew Hickling, John Hickling, Robert Kilbourne, John Hornbuckle, Robert Keightly, Tobias Stables, John Harriſon, Robert Hutchinſon, William Glover, William Clark, John Smith, John Hewes, Thomas Burton, Widow Barrowdale, George Towley, Roger Haſley, John Jerom, Edward Leake, and John Bailey, inhabitants of the town of Loughborough, that upon Friday the 5th day of October laſt, at Loughborough aforeſaid, by the providence of Almighty God, there happened, about 12 o'clock in the day-time, a ſad and lamentable fire; which, by the ſpace of two hours, burnt and conſumed down to the ground 50 dwelling houſes, with malt-houſes, barns, ſtables, kilns, and other out-houſes thereunto belonging, containing 230 bays of building, with much malt, corn, grain, and hay therein; together with many ſtacks, ricks, and hovels of corn and hay, to the value of £1924. 1*s.* 4*d.* And that alſo upon Monday the 12th day of November next following, at Loughborough aforeſaid, there happened another fire; which burnt to the ground, in a ſhort time, ſeven bays of building, ſome of them filled with corn; and the loſs did amount thereby to the ſum of £50. 10*s.* 6*d.*" The firſt of theſe is ſtill known by the name of Webſter's fire; and is ſaid to have begun in a malt-kiln in one Webſter's yard in The Woodgate. The latter happened in an obſcure place in the out-ſkirts, called The Bear's hole.

Another terrible fire happened in The Woodgate, which burnt furiouſly, and did much damage. This is called Jefferies' fire, as beginning near his dwelling-houſe in ſome of his out-buildings; and indeed the chaſms between the houſes now ſtanding in that ſtreet are plain indications of the above-mentioned calamities.

1669. Mr. Nicholas Hall, miniſter of this town, was buried May 15.

1673. Brief for rebuilding the Theatre Royal in London.

1697, Sept. 22, John, ſon of Mr. Alling, miniſter, baptized.

1698, Jan. 5, John, ſon of Mr. Alling, miniſter, buried.

1699, Feb. 9, Thomas, ſon of Mr. John Allin, miniſter, baptized.

1705, Nov. 13, Jane, wife of Mr. John Alleyne, buried.

In queen Anne's reign, a coach and four horſes, in taking Miſs Palmer from Wanlip, to pay a viſit in Nottinghamſhire, going over the ford by Stanford, were hurried down by the ſtream of the Soar; and the lady, coachman, and horſes, were all drowned.

About four of the clock in the morning, on the 28th of October, 1734, at Loughborough and the neighbouring villages, was felt a ſevere ſhock of an earthquake; inſomuch that ſeveral people got out of their beds, and ran into the fields.

On Thurſday July 31, 1735, there happened here a very violent rain, attended with thunder and lightning; it began about ten o'clock in the forenoon, and held for two hours without intermiſſion; at noon it abated for a very little time, then returned, and continued with as much violence as before for near three hours ſucceſſively, which on a ſudden occaſioned ſo great an inundation in the North-weſt parts of the town as was never known in the memory of man[1]. The torrent of water ran with great impetuoſity even down the lower ſide of the market-place knee-deep, and filled the ſhops; and little lower than the middle of the Swan-ſtreet it would ſwim a horſe. Near the Croſs in the market-place the waters were more than a yard high; and the conſequence muſt have been fatal, had it not been for the breaking down of a garden wall. Many families near the brook were driven up, and confined for ſome time in the upper ſtories of their houſes.

In June 1747, on Whitmonday, about one o'clock, at Loughborough was a moſt violent ſtorm of rain and hail, the ſtones of which meaſured two inches and a half round, and did incredible damage to the fruit, &c.

On Thurſday March 5, 1761, a fire in The Ruſhes at noon, with a very high wind, greatly endangered the town; and burnt down in about an hour 13 houſes, &c.

A navigation was opened here in 1778, ſupplied by ſeveral neighbouring brooks, and communicating with the river Soar at or about a mile and a half diſtance, which is made navigable to the Trent[1]; and ſeveral boats are employed in carrying coals from Derbyſhire, which bring yearly from 30 to 36,000 tons, beſide other boats in the mercantile line, which load down to Gainſborough, moſtly with wool, for the Yorkſhire manufactory; but here are alſo great quantities of Barrow-lime ſent by this conveyance, and ſhipped at Gainſborough for London and other places; whence they bring back grocery, raff, &c. This canal has proved highly beneficial to the original adventurers. A ſhare in it, which coſt originally £125. now produces £95. a year; and one of them was very recently ſold for £1800.[2]

[1] My grand-father had made a memorandum of this flood; and his account is, that it began at half paſt nine, and continued till half paſt three; and my father ſays that is right; for he well remembers it. J. Webſter.

May 29, 1780, about four in the afternoon, a violent ſtorm of hail fell in this neighbourhood, attended with thunder, lightning, and a ſtrong Weſterly wind, ſo that it broke the windows facing the wind, and ſtripped the trees and hedges of their leaves; and not only ſo, but it knocked the bark off ſome trees, and bruiſed them in ſuch a manner, that it was perceptible three or four years afterwards. The hail-ſtones were as large as a walnut when it has the rind taken off. The ſtorm fell about two miles Weſtward from Loughborough, and continued paſſing on from thence through Loughborough to Cotes, Preſtwould, Hoton, Wimeſwould, &c. to the diſtance of about 12 or 14 miles in length, and the breadth was about two miles: but it was ſuppoſed to be moſt ſevere about Hoton or Wimeſwould. It did great damage to the crops of wheat and beans; but the barley and oats did not ſuffer ſo much, as, not being got into ſpindle, they recovered. The damage ſuſtained by Mr. Packe was very conſiderable in glaſs only, ſo as to require 1500 feet to make good his windows in the manſion and hot-houſe in the garden.

In 1783, the people of this town had not a favourable opinion of inoculation for the ſmall-pox; though 43 died of that fatal diſtemper within the ſame year; and 70 died of it in 1793.

Feb. 18, 1784, Alice the wife of James Brown was buried.—Note, ſhe was ſuffocated by burning cokes in her lodging-room; and James Brown himſelf was thought to be dead when firſt diſcovered. Their family thought they were long before they roſe; and upon calling to them, no anſwer was made, and of courſe the door was forced open; but, upon calling in two or three gentlemen of the faculty, James Brown himſelf was reſtored.

In 1789, thirteen men drew a waggon loaded with coals, to Carlton-houſe, for the uſe of the Prince of Wales. The journey, which is 111 miles, was performed in 11 days. They were rewarded, by the Prince's order, with a purſe of guineas.

In the ſpring of the year 1790, ſix perſons were buried here, whoſe ages amounted to 495; one of 77, one of 80, three of 83, and one of 89.

In November 1790, there were 800 houſes and 3936 inhabitants in Loughborough.

In 1791, two acts of parliament were obtained; one, for making a navigable communication between the Loughborough canal and the town of Leiceſter; the other, for making navigable the rivers Wreke and Eye from the junction of the Wreke with the intended navigation from Leiceſter[3].

1792, Nov. 1, died at North Cerney, co. Glouceſter, aged 61, the Rev. Mr. Alleyne, rector of that place, and ſon of John Alleyne, of Loughborough[4].

The comparative population of Loughborough may be known by the following extracts from the Regiſter-book during four periods of 20 years each.

From 1686 to 1706, baptiſms 1067, burials 1020.
1728 to 1748, —— 1236, —— 1444.
1761 to 1781, —— 1813, —— 1599.
1781 to 1801, —— 2553, —— 2036.

Mr. Webſter, the preſent pariſh clerk, obſerves, that during his time there have been one in thirty-five who have lived to be upwards of 80[5].

In the veſtry a table of certificates is hung up, which have been granted to various inhabitants, drawn out with care. The name of each perſon is arranged in order; and to what pariſhes, and when, the certificates were granted; a method which in large pariſhes muſt ſave an infinite deal of trouble.

In 1801, on the return to parliament, there were 959 houſes, inhabited by 1000 families; and 22 uninhabited houſes.

The number of males was 2,169, of females 2,376; total 4,546. Of theſe, 407 are perſons chiefly employed in agriculture; and 825 in trade, manufactures, or handicraft.

The Freeschool.

The town and pariſh of Loughborough are in a very high degree indebted to the fortunes and eſtates of Thomas Burton, an inhabitant of the ſaid town, and a merchant of the Staple at Calais, who, by a deed of feoffment, dated April 29, 1495, granted and confirmed to Richard Lymingdon, otherwiſe Lemington, of Loughborough aforeſaid, merchant, and others, all his lands and tenements in Loughborough aforeſaid, Willoughby on the Woulds, Eaſt Leke, Harby, Stathern, and Thruſſington; and in the ſame year, 1495, by letter of attorney, empowered Thomas Barker to enter upon all the ſaid lands and tenements, and in his name to deliver the ſame into the full and peaceful ſeiſin of the ſaid Richard Lymington and others. Theſe lands and tenements were originally given for the maintenance of a chantry in the pariſh church; and at the Reformation a decree was paſſed to convert it to the uſe of a free grammar-ſchool. This appropriation was by ſeveral deeds of feoffment continued down to the reign of queen Elizabeth; during whoſe reign, a complaint being made in Chancery, an order was iſſued in June 1596, by ſir Nicholas Bacon, then lord keeper, directing, that if any diſpute ſhould ariſe touching the miſapplication of the rents and profits of the ſaid lands, or the choice of new feoffees, the ſame ſhould be determined by the lord chancellor or lord keeper for the time being; or by the judges of the circuit wherein ſuch lands ſhould lie.

[5] Mr. Throſby, noticing this circumſtance, ſays, that in the pariſh of St. Martin in Leiceſter, one in four lives to the age of 60.

[6] For the ſake of compariſon, a ſimilar article for the year 1800 will be given under the hiſtory of Hinckley in Sparkenhoe Hundred. The two towns have long diſputed the honour of precedence.

In 1596, a fine was levied, by Richard Parkyns, of Bunny, in the county of Nottingham, eſq. and John Brown, of Loughborough aforeſaid, clerk, who were at ſuch time enfeoffed in the ſaid lands; and who, by a deed of feoffment conſequent on the ſaid fine, did aſſign the ſaid lands to Simon Mudd, and other perſons in the ſaid deed mentioned, declaring the uſes of the profits thereof; "upon this ſpecial truſt and confidence, and to the intent that the ſaid Simon Mudd, &c. ſhall permit all the revenues, iſſues, and profits of the ſaid lands, to be employed towards the relief of the poor people which now are, or ſhall be hereafter, inhabiting within the ſaid town of Loughborough, and towards the making, amendment, maintenance, and repairs, from time to time, of 50 arches of the bridges in and about the ſaid town of Loughborough, be they more or leſs, and all other the bridges which have been accuſtomed to be repaired at the common charge of the ſaid town; and towards the maintenances of and keeping a free-ſchool in the ſaid town of Loughborough; and for and towards the diſcharge and payments of fifteenths, taxes, muſters, wars, and other common charges and impoſitions upon the ſaid town of Loughborough, wherewith the ſaid inhabitants thereof ſhall or may be charged, and in eaſe or relief of the poor people of the ſaid town for the time being; and alſo ſhall permit and ſuffer the ſaid yearly rents, iſſues, &c. of the ſaid lands, to be gathered by ſuch as ſhall be appointed to be bridge-maſters within the ſaid town; and the ſaid bridge-maſters to be yearly choſen by the moſt reputed, honeſt, and ſubſtantial men in the ſaid town; and the diſpoſitions of the profits of the ſaid lands to be to ſuch of the uſes aforeſaid, as the ſaid bridge-maſters for the time being ſhall think fit, and to none other uſe or otherwiſe; and then when ſeven or eight of the ſaid feoffees are dead, the number of them to be made twelve." By another deed of feoffment, dated in 1608, theſe lands were made over by the ſaid John Brown, clerk, aforementioned, and Robert Blunt, rector of Walton on the Woulds, to Geoffry Goodwin, Thomas Hebb, Robert Henſhaw, James Slack, Robert Welland, Richard Smith, Magnus Barfoot, Edmund Tiſley, George Sareſon, John Fowler, Humphry Blower, Iſaac Woolley, in whoſe hands the truſt continued till 1630; when a complaint was exhibited in Chancery againſt the ſaid Tiſley, Hebb, Henſhaw, Sareſon, Blower, Fowler, and Woolley, the then ſurvivors of the ſaid feoffees; whereupon, by virtue of an act of parliament of 43 Eliz. a commiſſion for charitable uſes was iſſued out of that court, directed to John Levinge and John Davenport, eſqrs. Arthur Hilderſham, John Brown, John Foxcroft, John Porter, and Henry Abberly, clerks, as alſo John Holt, gent.; which commiſſioners having, by a jury impanneled by the high-ſheriff of the county, enquired into the eſtates belonging to the ſaid town of Loughborough, and the uſes and abuſes thereof; and, upon hearing the whole matter, it was decreed that the rents and profits of the lands ſhould be employed to the maintenance of a free-ſchool, repairs of the bridges, highways, and other good and charitable uſes in the ſaid town of Loughborough; and that the bridgemaſter ſhould be choſen one year by the feoffees, and another year by ſuch inhabitants as are aſſeſſed to the relief of the poor, and that he ſhould give ſufficient ſecurity to the miniſter and churchwardens of the pariſh for the time being: And it was alſo decreed, that the aforementioned George Sareſon, Humphry Blower, John Fowler, and Iſaac Woolley, ſhould no longer act as feoffees; whereupon they made a choice themſelves, and appointed the aforeſaid John Davenport, eſq. John Brown, clerk, &c. But, upon objections made to this freſh choice, Thomas lord Coventry, lord-keeper, ordered a competent number of the principal inhabitants of Loughborough to be laid before him, both by the plaintiffs and defendants, and, according to the aforeſaid order made by ſir Nicholas Bacon, choſe 12 feoffees out of the ſaid liſts; but confirmed the decree made by the ſaid commiſſioners in every other particular.

Finally, in Oliver Cromwell's time, on another complaint made againſt John Allen and others, at that time feoffees, an inquiſition was taken at the Biſhop's Fee, near to the borough of Leiceſter, Jan. 14, 1652, by virtue of a commiſſion out of the ſaid court, directed to Thomas Beaumont, John Goodman, Thomas Pochin, and John Pratt, eſqrs. and Andrew Collin, gent. when, by a decree for ſuch purpoſe iſſued, dated Feb. 21, 1652, the ſaid feoffees were all fined for neglect and abuſe of their truſt. The ſaid Allen too, having bought a houſe of the value of £96. in his own name with the money belonging to the truſt, was obliged to refund it. And by the ſaid decree it is ordered, that the rents and profits of the eſtates ſhall be employed to ſuch uſes and for ſuch purpoſes as are mentioned in the ſaid deed from the aforeſaid Richard Parkyns, eſq. and John Brown, clerk, to Simon Mudd and others; the particulars whereof are before recited. And thus the whole matter ſtands to this day, ſaving that the value of the ſaid eſtates hath been greatly improved by the late incloſures and alteration of the times; the yearly ſum or income whereof now amounts to £700. and upwards; the lands lying and being in the pariſhes of Loughborough, Hoton, Thruſſington, Stathern, Harby, and Long-Whatton, in the county of Leiceſter; and in thoſe of Sutton, Great Leake, and Willoughby, in the county of Nottingham.

"The free-grammar ſchool," ſays Dr. Pochin, "ſtanding in the Eaſt angle of the church-yard, conſiſts of two rooms, one above, the other below, diſtinguiſhed by the names of the High and Low School; both of them not many years ſince flouriſhing, and in good reputation; but, by ſome means or other, to the manifeſt detriment of the place, the high ſchool is now let down and dwindled to nothing, whilſt the low ſchool, by perhaps more care taken, is ſtill preſerved in good condition. The preſent annual ſalary allowed the upper-maſter is £50. with a large convenient houſe for boarders; the under-maſter's ſalary is £30; both which ſalaries, as I am informed, the feoffees are impowered to raiſe or diminiſh at their diſcretion."

Theſe ſchools, I have the pleaſure to obſerve, are now much better managed.

The annual amount of the eſtates, as returned to parliament in 1786, was £487. 11*s*. 9*d*.

The head-maſter's ſalary is at preſent £50. beſide his houſe; and the under-maſter has alſo a houſe.

Over the door of the ſchool is inſcribed,

"This ſchool was founded by Thomas Burton
in the year of our Lord 1496.
Rebuilt 1748; John Capp, Bridgemaſter [1]."

Beſides the free-ſchool, there was in 1720 a charity-ſchool for 80 boys and 20 girls.

The town of Loughborough is alſo farther benefited by the following donations and bequeſts:

John Hickling's gift, for placing out poor apprentices, £33. a year.

Dawſon's gift, for placing out poor apprentices, and bread for the poor, £13. 9*s*. a year.

Somerville's [2] gift, £10. a year, veſted in the miniſter and churchwardens' hands, in truſt, for placing out poor pariſh-boys apprentices to London; alſo he bequeathed £5. a year each to two perſons going to Jeſus College in Cambridge until they be maſters of arts, or £10. to one if there be but one; but he or they muſt have continued a year and a half at leaſt with the head-maſter of Loughborough ſchool.

Palmer's gift, £2. 2*s*. 6*d*. a year, made payable to the overſeers of the poor; 30*s*. whereof to be diſtributed amongſt the aged poor born in the pariſh; 10*s*. to purchaſe four Bibles for four poor perſons; and the 2*s*. 6*d*. remaining, the overſeers ſhare amongſt themſelves for their trouble, according to will.

Bartholomew Hickling's gift, for cloathing blue-coat girls, ſchooling, and Bibles, £30. 18*s*. a year.

To the Revd FRANCIS WILCOX, B.D. Rector of LOUGHBOROUGH, this Plate is respectfully inscribed by his much obliged & very faithful Servt
J. Nichols. 1794.

Hawley's gift, 20*s.* a year, to 10 poor widows, at 2*s.* each.

Fowler's gift, for putting out apprentices, £.8. 12*s.* a year.

Mansfield's gift, 40*s.* a year, to 20 poor men at 2*s.* each.

Storer's gift, to cloath poor boys, and to buy bread for poor aged people, £50. a year.

Clarke's gift, £7. left to the rector and churchwardens for the time being, in truſt, for books, and teaching poor boys reading, writing, and caſting up accompts.

GILDS and CHAUNTRIES.

It appears by a writ of king Edward III, under his privy ſeal, dated Sept. 24, 1329, that Richard de Whiteſide was the chaplain of a chantry founded within the manor of Loughborough by Hugh le Deſpenſer, late earl of Winton; with a yearly endowment of five marks a year out of the revenue of the ſaid manor; an allotment of 18*d.* a year for wine and wax; and eight cart-loads of wood yearly from the woods belonging to the manor [1].

Here was a chantry, founded by Thomas Burton, for one prieſt, valued 37 Henry VIII. at £4. yearly; but the certificate ſtates that no prieſt was then reſident there; it alſo takes notice that there were then 1500 houſeling people within the ſaid town [2].

By indenture, made June 20, 1590, between Thomas Butler and Walter Coppinger, of London, gent. of the one part, and ſir George Haſtings, knt. of the other part; the ſaid Thomas and Walter ſold to ſir George "all that tenement, &c. in Loughborough, called The Great Houſe, and all thoſe lands, &c. in the counties of Leiceſter and Nottingham, to the gilds called Jeſus and St. George Gilds in Loughborough aforeſaid belonging, or to the ſuſtentation of any chantry prieſt, chaplain, obit, or other ſuperſtitious uſes, in the church of Loughborough aforeſaid, given, bequeathed, applied, uſed, or appropriated, &c. in as large and ample a manner as the ſaid Thomas Butler and Walter Coppinger had the ſame of the gift and grant of our ſovereign lady the queen, &c. by her letters patent, dated March 22, 1589 [3].

The CHURCH (see Plates CXXI. CXXII.)

dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul [4], is large and ſpacious, and ſtands on a ſpot of ground in the higheſt part of the town Northward.

At the Weſt end of it riſes a ſtrong handſome tower, adorned with proper battlements.

The church itſelf ſeems, by the ſtone it is built of on the outſide, to be a very antient ſtructure, much more ſo than the tower; and the church and tower are buildings apparently diſtinct from each other, not being tied-in together, nor are they ſeemingly of the ſame kind of ſtone. That with which the tower is built is firm, hard, and durable.

"The fair and large tower ſteeple of this church," ſays Mr. Burton in MS. 1623, was built within the memory of man; and that by the benevolence of ſundry benefactors, as appeareth by their arms cut thereon."

Thoſe arms and various ornaments ſtill remain; and are engraved in Plate CXXI. a. b. as follows.

Within the arch of the Weſt window of the belfry:

1. A ſquare, with a wivern.
2. Quarterly, 1. and 4. a lion rampant; 2. and 3. checky.
3. Per feſs, three eſcalops.
4. A lamb.
5. A tun and two arrows.
6. A buck.
7. Defaced.
8. A wolf's head eraſed.
9. A greyhound trippant.
10. A chaplet.
11. A bull's head eraſed, the creſt of Haſtings.
12. Defaced.
13. A portcullis.
14. A pomegranate.
15. A roſe.

On the other half of the window, marked b.

1. A ſcroll.
2. Defaced.
3. A croſs ſtick.
4. A ſceptre ſurmounted with a fleur de lis; over it part of a ſtar.
5. A demi-man in armour.
6. A human face couped at the ſhoulders, affronté between ſix billets.
7. A tun pierced with five arrows.
8. On a chevron between three lions heads eraſed, three balls and a chief.
9. Defaced.
10. A ſea-lion rampant, in chief three fleurs de lis; impaling, Quarterly, 1. and 4. a bend; 2. and 3. a ſaltire.
11. A caltrop.
12. A lamb ſurrounded with rays.
13. A caltrop.
14. A portcullis.
15. A pomegranate.
16. A roſe.

Over the Weſt door, on the North ſide, marked c.

Barry, nebulé of ſix; in chief a lion paſſant guardant, Merchants of the Staple [5]. Plate CXXII. fig. 1.

On the South ſide, marked d.

1. Suppoſed to have been an eſcarbuncle.
2. A chevron fimbriated engrailed, between three cranes; Lemington.

"On the cornices of the ſteeple," ſays Dr. Pochin, "were four tall beautiful pinnacles of exquiſite workmanſhip, with vanes or fans ſpiring above them, topped with coronets; but theſe being by a violent wind, which happened in February 1715, known in this county by the name of Bird's wind, ſuddenly blown down, were ſome time after replaced by four very ordinary pinnacles. The height of it from the ground to the ſummit of the preſent pinnacles meaſures 35 yards."

In 1774, when Mr. Michael Ella and Thomas Warner were churchwardens, the pinnacles complained of by Dr. Pochin, which were not in proportion to the tower, were taken down, and the preſent pinnacles erected in their ſtead.

This tower is ſuppoſed to be as ſtrong a building of its height as is generally to be found; for though it meaſures within only 18 feet ſquare, yet it ſtands on a baſe of 31 feet ſquare, beſide two battlements at each corner of four feet ſquare each.

The ſteeple contains ſix bells and a clock.

The late Dr. Pulteney favoured me with the following inſcriptions on the bells, tranſcribed by himſelf when at the free-ſchool of this pariſh:

---

[1] Clauſ. 3 Edw. I. m. 7. See before, under Beaumanor, p. 137.

[2] Certificates of Colleges and Charters in the Augmentation office.

[3] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 57. b.

[4] So Ecton and Willis; but this church is traditionally ſaid to have been dedicated to All Saints.

[5] See Churton's Life of Smith, p. 226.

1. "I will ſound and reſound unto all Chriſtian people, And to the benefactors that gave me to this ſteeple, 1616."

2. "In multis annis reſonet campana Johannis."

3. "Sit nomen Domini benedictum; laudate illum cymbalis ſonoris.

4. "Nos ſumus conſtructi ad laudem Domini 1616."

5. "Sir Georg Haſtinges made mei anno Domini 1586."

6. "Hec campana ſacra fiat Trinitate Beata 1613."

Theſe bells were recaſt, by public ſubſcription, by Thomas Eayre of Kettering, in 1754; when the inſcriptions were thus changed:

1. "Vox mea dulcis; mea ſcintillans vultus."

2. "Statutum eſt omnibus ſemel mori; omnia fiant ad gloriam Dei."

3. "Nos ſumus conſtructi ad laudem Domini; in Dei gloriam, in eccleſiæ commodum."

4. "Sit nomen Domini benedictum; laudate illum cymbalis ſonoris."

5. "Morte beatâ nihil beatius. Thomas Eayre fecit; Richard Mansfield and John Warren, Sideſmen."

6. "Thomas Alleyne, rector; Francis Winfield and Edward Savage, churchwardens. Thomas Eayre fecit, anno Domini 1754."

There is a porch on the South ſide of the church, and another on the North.

The inſide is capacious and noble, conſiſting of a tranſept, chancel, nave, and two ailes; the roof upheld by four regular handſome ſemicircular arches, ſupported by ſtrong cluſtered pillars; over which are eight clereſtory windows on each ſide; the whole fabrick extending itſelf (including the tower and chancel) on the inſide from Eaſt to Weſt in length 156 feet; in breadth from North to South 67 feet; in height over the middle aile to the roof 45 feet.

The altar-window is large and antient, conſiſting of five bays. Thoſe in the North aile are alſo antient, of three bays; to which thoſe of the South aile, which are modern, are made nearly to correſpond.

"Burton," ſays Dr. Pochin, "mentions many coats of arms within the church belonging to antient families, none of which are to be met with now. However, up and down in various places thereof, and on the walls, as I have been informed by thoſe who remembered them, were to be ſeen the manifeſt traces or appearances of divers Romiſh ſaints and other figures, the works of Popiſh times, which, by repeated white-waſhings, are now totally obliterated; and I myſelf well remember a gigantic form of St. Chriſtopher bearing our Saviour on his ſhoulders, painted on the wall near the entrance by the great door into the church, on the right hand; over which door the figures of Time and Death ſtill remain."

Nothing of this is now remaining; but the arms noticed by Burton are given in Plate CXXI. fig. 7—26.

Azure, a croſs potent between four croſſes humeté Or, St. John of Jeruſalem; impaling, Azure, ſemé of fleur de lis, a lion rampant Or, Beaumont.

Beaumont; impaling Azure, three garbs Or, Comin earl of Buchan.

Beaumont; impaling, Gules, three lions paſſant in pale Or, a label of France, Lancaſter.

Beaumont; impaling, Quarterly, Gules and Or, in the firſt quarter a mullet Argent; Vere earl of Oxford.

Beaumont; impaling, Gules, a lion rampant Vaire, crowned Or, Everingham.

Beaumont; impaling, Quarterly, 1. and 4. Sable, a croſs engrailed Or, Ufford; 2. and 3. Gules, a croſs moline Argent, Beke (ſet here for Willoughby.)

Beaumont; impaling, Quarterly, 1. and 4. Quarterly, Gules and Argent, in the firſt quarter an eagle diſplayed Or, Philips; 2. Azure, three cinquefoils Or, Bardolph; 3. Vert, an eſcutcheon within an orle of martlets Argent, Herpingham.

Azure, a croſs patonce between four martlets Or, Edward the Confeſſor.

Or, three chevrons Gules, Clare.

Gules, a lion rampant Argent, Mowbray.

Or, fretty Gules, Verdon.

Or, a lion rampant purpure, Lacy earl of Lincoln.

Or, three torteauxes, a label of five points Azure, Courtenay.

Lancaſter, with the label of France.

Quarterly, France and England, king Edward III.

Argent, a bend between ſix martlets Gules, Furnivall.

Azure, two lions paſſant in pale Or, Erdington.

Azure, ſemé of fleur de lis, a lion rampant Or, charged on the ſhoulder with a fleur de lis Or, Beaumont.

Quarterly, France and England; impaling, Azure, a bend Argent, cottiſed Or, between ſix lions rampant of the laſt, Bohun.

Lancaſter, impaling Beaumont.

At the upper end of the North aile is a large old chapel, now uſed as a veſtry room, for the keeping of the veſtments, and for the tranſaction of pariſh buſineſs.

On the South ſide of the altar are veſtiges of ſome ſtone ſeats, now quite ſtopped up; but the canopy of a piſcina remains.

At the end of the South aile is the ornamented canopy of a ſtopped-up arch.

At the Weſt end of the church, dividing the ſame from the tower, is an arch carried up from the ground to a very great height, worthy of the ſpectator's obſervation, which formerly lay open to the belfry; but ſuch communication is now ſtopped.

Here is alſo a gallery, or loft, erected in the year 1713; the four front boxes or pews whereof were purchaſed at the rate of £5. each, by ſome of the better families then in the pariſh, as freeholds to their houſes. Behind theſe are ſeveral rows of long ſeats, aſcending gradually above one another, on either ſide of the loft, divided by a flight of ſteps riſing up to the door of a convenient ſeat, or rather another gallery, appropriated to the ſingers.

Under this loft is the baptiſmal font, engraved in Plate CXXII, fig. 2; and near it is a repoſitory for the decrees, deeds, &c. relative to Burton's truſt and other charities.

At the Eaſt end of the chancel is a neat altar-piece of the Doric order, made of Norway oak, the entablatures whereof are ſupported by two pilaſters, and two columns of the ſame order, but fluted with that of the Corinthian.

The communion-table is of beautiful alabaſter, on an exquiſitely wrought iron frame, finely ornamented with vine-leaves, grapes, &c.; the whole covered with rich crimſon velvet and gold fringe. The table ſtands on a ſtone pavement, one ſtep higher than the chancel floor, encompaſſed by a rail and baluſters of the ſame oak; and is covered with a carpet of crimſon velvet and gold fringed.

The church was new-pewed, in a handſome and regular manner, by ſubſcription, with Engliſh oak, in 1747, Richard Sanſome and Robert Worth being then churchwardens; the pews alſo were duly numbered. A pulpit likewiſe, and ſounding board of Norway oak, of neat workmanſhip, with a good and convenient reading-deſk of Engliſh oak, were ſoon after put up on the ſame ſpot, and againſt the ſame pillar, where the old ones ſtood.

The chancel is alſo wainſcoted with Engliſh oak; and at the lower end were erected ſix pews of the like wood, the property of the rector for the time being, three whereof were, in the year 1763, converted by the then rector Mr. Bickham into one large pew for the uſe of his family.

The floor of the chancel was alſo new-laid, part with large quarries of Swithland ſlate, and the remainder with grave-ſtones of the ſame; and this was all done in the year 1748, at the ſole expence of the then worthy rector, the Rev. Thomas Alleyne, who was alſo a generous contributor to the new-pewing of the church, the new-caſting and hanging the bells, and towards the pulpit and ſounding-board aforementioned.

"And here," ſays Dr. Pochin, "I cannot omit mentioning the ingratitude of ſome of the inhabitants of this place, who in a rude unmannerly way rejected the noble and generous offer made by Mr. Alleyne, of placing an organ in the church at his ſole expence; and I have reaſon to ſay that I am pretty confident, had they not have thwarted his intention, he would have ſettled an annual ſalary for the maintenance of an organiſt for ever out of his own eſtates."

An organ, by Green, which coſt £450. was put up in 1792; a ſubſcription of nearly £800. having been previouſly raiſed, towards which the preſent earl of Moira contributed £100.; and the overplus was applied towards paying an organiſt.

Over the arched entrance out of the church into the chancel the king's arms were painted on the wall, done in the reign of king William; near which were alſo the arms and creſt of the earls of Huntingdon, formerly patrons of this living. On the North wall alſo were formerly the Lord's Prayer and the Apoſtles' Creed; and below them near the door were handſomely executed, in water colours, the figures of Moſes and Aaron ſupporting the two tables of the Ten Commandments. But all theſe are now gone.

Nov. 4, 1775, the king's arms were freſh painted and finiſhed for the church by Bagnall; at which time Moſes and Aaron were waſhed out, as well as Time and the Huntingdon arms, by order of Mr. Archdeacon Bickham; the church new white-waſhed; and the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and Ten Commandments written in gold letters on the altar.

Within the church is kept in readineſs, on any ſudden alarm, an engine for extinguiſhing fire, purchaſed by the feoffees for the uſe of the pariſh, from Newſham and Wragg, Feb. 25, 1745, during the bridgemaſterſhip of the late Dr. Butler, for £26. Two other engines, by Hadley of Long Acre, are alſo kept in a building near the Market-place.

In 1552, the commiſſioners reported that the church of Loughborough contained,

"In primis, on chalice of ſylver.

It̃m, fyve belles.

It̃m, one cope of bawdkyn blewe.

It̃m, one cope of white damaſke.

It̃m, tow copes of black woſted.

It̃m, two copes of dyvers colors.

It̃m, a croſſe of coper and gylte.

It̃m, a cope of blewe ſaten.

It̃m, a veſtment of black velvet with deacon to the ſame.

It̃m, a veſtment of bawdkyn work with deacon and ſubdeacon to the ſame."

The communion-plate at preſent belonging to the church conſiſts of two large ſilver flaggons, given by the late Mrs. Dorothy Wilſon, of Knight-thorpe in this pariſh; two ſilver cups, or chalices, with covers, one given by John Olderſhaw, of this pariſh, eſq. who lies buried on the North outſide of this chancel; the other by Mr. Bartholomew Hickling, heretofore mentioned; two ſilver ſalvers (no name inſcribed), ſaid to be a further gift of the ſaid Mrs. Wilſon; and two ſilver plates to collect the alms in, being the gift of the late Edward Butler, LL. D. for the uſe of "the pariſhioners in the church of Loughborough, in the county of Leiceſter, 1727," as appears from a Latin inſcription engraven on the ſame.

Mrs. Allt dying in the year 1783, left £50. by her laſt will to buy a ſilver waiter, whereon the other plate ſhould ſtand; which was fulfilled.

In the Matriculus of 1220, it is ſtated that Hugh Deſpenſer was the patron of four parts of the church of Loughborough; and Philip de Cortlinſtoke of the fifth part. The then rector of the four parts was R. de Verdon, inſtituted by William formerly archdeacon. There was then alſo a vicar, who as ſuch received all the profits of thoſe four parts, paying to the rector an annual penſion of eight marks. The rector of the fifth part was A. de Cortlingstoke, who had been inſtituted by Hugh formerly biſhop of Lincoln.

Mr. Carte obſerves in his MS notes, that the ordinatio eccleſiæ of Loughborough, which in 1238 conſiſted of a rectory and vicarage, may be found in the Biſhop's Regiſtry at Lincoln.

In 1344, the procurations were, 7*s*. 6¾*d*.; the rectory was taxed at 44 marks, and paid 4*s*. for Peter-pence. The then patron was the heir of ſir Henry de Beaumont.

In 1534-5, the value of the rectory was £26.

The rectory of Loughborough was granted by king Henry VIII. to Henry Grey marquis of Dorſet (afterwards duke of Suffolk); and, on his attainder in 1554, it reverted to the crown, where it remained till Nov. 26, 1575, when queen Elizabeth granted it, inter alia, to Henry third earl of Huntingdon. When ſir Walter Mildmay had founded Emmanuel College, in 1584[1], he requeſted the queen, to whom he was then chancellor of the Exchequer, to endow it with ſome eccleſiaſtical preferment; and, at her requeſt, the ſaid earl, by deed, dated Jan. 19, 1584-5, ſettled upon the college the advowſon of Loughborough, together with thoſe of Aller and North Cadbury, co. Somerſet. This donation was conteſted with the college in 1642 by Ferdinando the eighth earl of this family; but determined in favour of the college.

In 1650, the rectory was returned worth £140. and the incumbent as "ſufficient."

The preſent value in the king's books, in manſ', terr', & gleb', is £40. 16*s*. 3*d*.

The epiſcopal procurations are, 9*s*.; the archidiaconal, 15*s*. 1*d*.

This benefice, before the incloſure, was reckoned, communibus annis, worth £300. a year; it is now (1802) worth more than £1000.

A little diſtance from the churchyard gates ſtands the rectory, or parſonage-houſe, an antient, ſtrong edifice, built in the times when good Engliſh oak was plentiful hereabouts, as appears by the roof of this building in the inſide. The preſent rector, Dr. Hardy, has lately made ſome conſiderable additions to this houſe; a view of which, as it appeared in 1792, is given in Plate CXXI.

Here are alſo four Diſſenting meeting-houſes; one for the Preſbyterians; another for certain General Baptiſts; a third for the followers of Weſley; and a fourth for Quakers.

[1] He was buried in the cathedral at Lincoln, with this inſcription:

"Hic jacet Johannes de Worſhopp, canonicus Lincolnie, qui obiit die Apr. 3, 1386, cujus anime propitietur Deus. Amen."

[2] Reg. Langham, fol. 28. b.

[3] It does not appear when Mr. Southam obtained the rectory of Loughborough; but he ſeems to have been a monopolizer of preferment. He was inſtalled prebendary of Aſgerby in the church of Lincoln, March 20, 1388; which about 1392 he exchanged for Dunham. He was collated to the archdeaconry of Berks, Oct. 1345; which he exchanged for that of Oxford, Jan. 30, 1403. He obtained the prebend of Ulveton in the church of Lichfield in 1408; and in December that year exchanged his prebend in the church of Lincoln for that of North Kelſey; in July 1409 relinquiſhed his prebend at Lichfield for that of Alſthorpe in the church of York; in 1416 again exchanged his ſtall at Lincoln for that of Welton Beckhall; and in the ſame year, Nov. 26, exchanged the rectory of Loughborough for the prebend of South Grantham in the church of Saliſbury. He held alſo the rectory of Coniſby in Lincolnſhire; and died Aug. 13, 1440. By his will, dated and proved that year, he appointed his body to be buried in the cathedral of Lincoln, before the image of St. Chriſtopher; which was performed accordingly; and his effigies there placed, with the following inſcription:

"Hic jacet magiſter Johannes Southam, inceptor juris canonicus ac reſidentiarius iſtius eccleſie, archidiaconus Oxon, canonicuſque Ebor. ac Sarum, et rector eccleſie de Coniſby, qui obiit 23 die menſis Auguſti, anno Domini 1440, cujus anime propitietur Deus. Amen.

Miſerere mei Deus, ſecundum magnam miſericordiam tuam."

At his feet, "Ecce necis ſpeculum! ſpeculare frequenter et ora; Mors veniet, ſed quando latet; furtim venit hora."

[4] He reſigned in that year the prebend of South Grantham in the church of Saliſbury.

[5] He died in 1450, and was buried in the nave of the cathedral at Lincoln (where he held the prebend of Thorngate) with this inſcription on a braſs plate:

"Hic humatum eſt corpus Thomæ Louteburgh, quondam canonici reſidentiarii iſtius eccleſie, ac rectoris eccleſie de Loughburgh; qui obiit 12 Junii, A. D. MCCCCL. Cujus anime propitietur Deus. Amen.

"Teſtis ſis, Chriſte, quod non jacet hic lapis iſte, Corpus ut ornetur, ſed ſpiritus ut memoretur."

[6] He was deputy keeper of the king's privy ſeal. See his epitaph, p. 901.

[7] Pariſh Regiſter. [8] Ibid. [9] See his epitaph, p. 902.

[10] Pariſh Regiſter.—Neither of the Browns were members of Emmanuel college; but Brown junior was preſented under the following circumſtances: The preſentation to the rectory was part of the jointure of Katharine, wife (and afterwards widow) of Henry third earl, ſettled upon her during her life by act of parliament. In conſequence ſhe preſented Brown ſenior, and aſſigned over to him the next turn, on March 24, 1613-14, for his ſon, Brown junior. On Sept. 29 in the ſame year, Brown ſenior made over his right to his brother-in-law James Whitehall, a ſtudent of Chriſt Church, Oxford. But afterwards, to avoid litigation, the college agreed to preſent Brown junior at his father's death; and Whitehall reſigned his claim upon the living by a formal deed, now in the College treaſury.

[11] A judicious ſolid divine, an excellent preacher, and an holy liver. His deportment was grave and ſerious; his temper mild, humble, and peaceable; but he was a little reſerved. He lived with the eminently-pious old lady Bromley, widow to Judge Bromley (ſee p. 893.)—"At Loughborough in Leiceſterſhire, in the houſe of Mr. Oliver Bromſkill, a meeting uſed to be kept on the Lord's days, after the ſermons, to repeat, pray, confer, or catechiſe, &c. unto which a multitude of the neighbours uſed to reſort. The room where they met was a dining-room up one pair of ſtairs, and very large. That very night, after they were departed, the garret-floor fell down, being over-loaded with malt, &c. It miſerably broke the floor, and ſhattered the wainſcot of the dining room. Many of them had undoubtedly been knocked on the head: but God ſpared ſuch as were about a good work. I have often been in the room ſince it was repaired; and lift up my eyes to God with thankſgiving for his ſparing mercy to that people, as they themſelves have often done." Birch's MSS. in the Britiſh Muſeum.

[12] See his epitaph, p. 902.

[13] By the Churchwardens' Accompts 1*s.* 8*d.* was paid for a quart of burnt claret when Dr. Bright took poſſeſſion.

[14] Deſcended from a family poſſeſſed of conſiderable property in the neighbourhood of Tidſwell, co. Derby. He was a fellow of Emmanuel college; B. A. 1678; M. A. 1682; B. D. 1689; and was inſtalled prebendary of Longford Magna, in the church of Lincoln, April 13, 1705. Two ſingle Sermons by him are in print: 1. "Epiſcopacy aſſerted, and recommended as the great Bond of Union;" preached at an Epiſcopal Viſitation at Leiceſter, April 3, 1700; and publiſhed in 1701, 4to; 2. "Unanimity in the Truth, a neceſſary Duty, with the Means of obtaining it;" an Aſſize Sermon, 1707, 4to. He was twice married; firſt, to Jane Staveley, by whom he had one ſon (ſee p. 902); ſecondly, to Penelope, daughter of ſir Anthony Cheſter, by whom he had no iſſue.

[15] Son of the preceding rector. He was for many years afflicted with the gout; and died at Bath, unmarried, July 18, 1761, aged 63.

[16] D. D. in 1774. He was a reſpectable man, and an excellent preacher, having a voice to fill the lofty aile of the church. He was collated to the archdeaconry of Leiceſter in 1762. He left a valuable library to the rectory for ever; of which Mr. Adams took a catalogue; three copies of which were made; one for the rector, a ſecond for the executor the Rev. Mr. Hurſt of Stanford, and a third for the college. See his epitaph, p. 902. [17] B. A. 1760; M. A. 1763; B. D. 1770.

[18] B. A. 1763; M. A. 1766; B. D. 1775. He poſſeſſed conſiderable abilities, blended with remarkably placid manners; and was univerſally reſpected. The diſorder which proved fatal to him was the gout in the head, for which he had been to Bath, and had returned home but a few days before his death.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS[1].

The braſs which appears to be the oldeſt is that of, Giles Jordan, 1415, near the veſtry-door, and noticed by Burton. His effigies and that of his wife remain, Plate CXXII. fig. 3; as does the following fragment of inſcription:

"Here lieth Gilles Jordan . . . .
. . . . and Marg'et his wife under this ſtone, late fiſchmōng' of Londō fundour ap . . . .

The arms, Quarterly, 1. and 4. Argent, three mullets Gules, Jordan; 2. and 3. Sable, a chevron Or, between three garbs Argent, Harlcton, Plate CXXI. fig. 29, are gone.

At the upper end of the nave is that of Gilbert Meringe, a gentleman of Nottinghamſhire, who died Feb. 15, 1481. This is alſo noticed by Burton; and further, that he, with two of his ſervants, Oliver Farneſworth and John Lilly, were ſlain in a quarrel at Loughborough at the ſame time. On this was graven Argent, on a chevron Sable, three eſcalops Or. Plate CXXI. fig. 27.

Near the laſt aforementioned, in a croſs aile facing the South, round two portraits in braſs: CXXII. fig. 4.

"Hic jacent Thomas Marchall, marchand, de Loghtboroh, et Agnes ux' ejus, qui quidē Thomas obiit xxxi die menſis Julii año M°CCCC°LXXX, quor' ai'ab̄s ꝓpiciet' De'. Amē."

On the South ſide of the chancel, round the ledge of an antient grave-ſtone, is this imperfect inſcription:

"✠ Hic jacet Robertus Frye, quondam rector iſtius eccleſie: Qui o . . . . , eſſionem glorioſe Virginis Marie; ꝓpiciet' Deus. Amen." (fig. 5.)

On the ſame ſtone remains a plate of braſs well preſerved, as in fig. 4.

"Nomine Frye dictus, ſubtus jacet ecce Robertus, Pulvere conſtrictus quondam dictainine certus;
Privati fuit is ſubcuſtos, nempe ſigilli;
Loughburgi rector; paradiſum det Deus illi."

The date of his death does not appear; but he probably ſucceeded John Fiſher about 1500.

Of the monument for Robert Lemington, merchant of the Staple, who died in 1512, part only of the canopy[2] remains, with a ſingle ſhield of arms, Barry nebulé of ſix, Argent and Azure, on a chief Gules, a lion paſſant guardant Or, The Merchants of the Staple; Plate CXXII. fig. 1. In Burton's time there was another ſhield, Argent, on a chevron engrailed Azure, a chevronel Or, between three cranes Gules; Plate CXXI. fig. 28. Both theſe ſhields are repeated over the Weſt door of the ſteeple.

On the South ſide, on a ſlip of braſs, CXXII. fig. 7.

"Here lieth William Goodwine, who deceaſede the xxiii daye of Maye, an° 1592, of the age of LXX and od yeares, whoſe ſoule reſteth wth God."

On a white marble monument affixed to the North wall of the old North chapel, now uſed as a veſtry:

"Beneath are depoſited the remains of three children of John Thorp, of Loughborough, by Elizabeth his wife.
Charlotte-Elizabeth died March 8, 1794, aged 11 months.
Robert died October 16, 1794, aged 12 days.
William-John died April 16, 1797, aged 10 years and 6 months."

On flat ſtones in the veſtry:

1. "Hic jacet Thomas Burton,
Mæcenas noſtrûm primus & ſummus,
publicæ ſcholæ fundator,
cujus & pontium ſolus conſervator, pauperum dulce præſidium, & noſtrarum æternum decus, columenque rerum, obiit anno Xti 1496."

A monument was ſet up in the veſtry for Thomas Burton with the ſame inſcription, only with this difference: "Hic prope jacet," &c.; and under the old inſcription this addition:

"Hoc monumentum poſuit,
& antiquam inſcriptionem inſtauravit,
Curator Pontium, anno Salutis 1793."

2. "Here lieth the body of Mr. William Henſhaw, who departed this life the 6th of December, anno Domini 1715, in the 71ſt year of his age;
and alſo, being interred here,
all his anceſtors before him;
this ſtone being laid down by the order of Mrs. Mary Toone, his only daughter."

3. "Here lies interred
the body of Richard Sanſome, gent.
who departed this life the 24th day of September, 1779,
in the 76th year of his age.
Here alſo lies interred the body of Mary his wife,
who departed this life the 29th day of September, 1764,
aged 60 years."

4. "Sacred to the pious memory of
Mrs. Elizabeth Sanſome, relict of the late Richard Sanſome, gent.
She departed this life the 27th day of Auguſt, 1792, in the 71ſt year of her age."

5. "Here lies the body of Mary Warner, relict of William Warner, of Hinckley, gent.
She died the 15th of October, 1780,
in the 84th year of her age."

6. Arms: Azure, three hedgehogs Or; fig. 35.
"In this vault are depoſited the remains of William, the third ſon of Henry Whatton, gent. and Elizabeth his wife.
He was born the 3d day of Auguſt, 1787;
and departed this life the 20th of the ſame month.
Alſo are depoſited the remains of Robert, fourth ſon, born the 20th day of July, 1788; and departed this life the 10th day of January following."

7. "Sacred to the memory of Mrs. Anne Pagſon, who died February the 5th, 1791,
in the 54th year of her age."

8. "Beneath are depoſited the remains of
Mrs. Sarah Speed, who departed this life the 19th day of Auguſt, 1791, aged 72 years."

In the chancel:
On flat ſtones within the rails of the altar:

1. "Here lieth the body of John Wilſon, eſq. of Knight-thorpe, ſon of Robert Wilſon, eſq. of Martin,
in the county of Surrey, by his ſecond wife Joanna, daughter of John Parker, of London, merchant.
He married, firſt, Mary,
the daughter of ſir Edward Walpole, of Houghton, in the county of Norfolk;
and then Dorothea, the daughter of ſir Anthony Cheſter, of Chicheley, in the county of Bucks, bart.
He departed this life May 21, 1718,
in the 59th year of his age."

2. "Here alſo lie the remains of William Wilſon, eſq. his eldeſt brother, who departed this life July 18, 1681,
in the 23d year of his age."

"In 1682 there ſtood in this chancel a hearſe covered with black baize, and furniſhed with eight ſcocheons of the arms of Wilſon; viz. Or, a wolf rampant Argent; in chief a fleur de lis of the laſt between two bezants; ſet up for Mr. William Wilſon, eldeſt ſon of Robert (by the ſecond wife) and elder brother to John Wilſon, of Knight-thorpe; which William died in July 1681[3]."

---

[1] This church is full of grave-ſtones; but ſince the price has been advanced to £5. inſtead of 6*s*. 8*d*. the burials within the church are much leſs frequent. The pariſh, however, have no right to aſk any fee; but can only demand that the church ſhould be reſtored to the ſame ſtate as before the funeral, or an equivalent to the churchwardens. The option of ſuffering a funeral in the church, or not, reſts ſolely with the rector.

[2] In Plate CXXI. fig. 37. is a ſlight ſketch of what remains of Lemington's tomb; and in fig. 38. is that of Frye.

[3] Leiceſterſhire Viſitation Notes, 1681, in the Office of Arms.

3. "Here lieth the body of Mrs. Dorothea Wilſon, widow of John Wilſon, eſq. of Knight-thorpe, and daughter [1] of ſir Anthony Cheſter, bart.
of Chicheley, in the county of Bucks,
and dame Mary his wife.
She departed this life Nov. 21, 1754,
in the 88th year of her age."

Againſt the North wall, at the upper end, a ſubſtantial and beautiful monument of white marble, within a black border, at top two angels with trumpets, the whole properly decorated and gilt:

1. Argent, on a chevron engrailed, between three cheſsrooks Sable, as many creſcents Or. Creſt, a cubit arm habited Gules, holding in the hand proper a cheſsrook Sable, Walters; fig. 30.
2. Wilſon; impaling, Or, three eſcocheons Sable, on each a pheon's head Or, Parker; fig. 31.
3. Walters impaling Parker; fig. 32.

"Near to this place lies interred
the body of Joanna Walters, daughter of John Parker, of London, merchant.
She was firſt married to Robert Wilſon, of Martin, in the county of Surrey, eſq.
by whom ſhe had two ſons, viz. William and John.
She was after married to William Walters, of Condall in the county of York, eſq.
and had iſſue by him two ſons and one daughter, (ſc.) Rowland, Joſeph, and Sarah;
the firſt buried at London,
the other two near their mother.
She died at Knight-thorpe November 16, 1673;
to whoſe pious memory the ſaid William Walters, her laſt huſband, erected this monument."

A flat ſtone alſo for the ſaid Joanna Walters, with the arms of Walters and Parker above-mentioned.

Next to the above, on a monument of white marble [2]:

"Hic poſitæ ſunt
reliquiæ Georgii Bright, S. T. Doctoris, & Coll. Emanuelis apud Cantabr. olim Socii, eccleſiæ Aſaphenſis Decani, & hujuſce rectoris vigilantiſſimi.
Studiis incubuit, heu nimium, poſthabitâ valetudine;
in omni litteraturâ, præſertim Hebraicâ, præclarus;
vir liberalis ingenii, judicii ſubacti;
veritatis tenax, ſed nudæ & ſine fuco, pietatis & probitatis ſinceræ cultor;
in amicitiâ fidus firmuſque,
effuſa charitate in pauperes, benevolentiâ in omnes.
Talem tantumque dolemus nobis ereptum, cœlo redditum gaudemus.
Cœlebs obiit 6° Julii, anno Chriſti 1696, ætatis ſuæ 63."

Againſt the ſame wall, and a little to the left, is fixed up a neat monument of black marble, well poliſhed, ſuitably ornamented, and of a pyramidal form, whoſe inſcription [3] in gold letters beſpeaks it,

"Sacred to the memory of JOHN ALLEYNE, B. D.
rector of this pariſh, who died March 25, 1739.
To the memory of his wife JANE, the daughter of THOMAS STAVELEY, of Leiceſter, eſq.
who died Nov. 11, 1705.
And to the memory of their ſon
THOMAS ALLEYNE, B. D.
rector of this pariſh, who died July 10, 1761.

Vain to the dead are tears, and vain is praiſe,
And vain each fond memorial we can raiſe!
As on the pyre Arabia's incenſe thrown Glads with its ſweets the living ſenſe alone.
The friends we mourn with ſacred lore were fraught,
And truths divine with Chriſtian zeal they taught.
Still may they teach! ſtill from the grave impart
Such truths as melt the eye, and mend the heart!
Oh! from their tombs may holy muſings riſe,
And life's poor triflers as they read grow wiſe!
For Friendſhip poureth not the plaintive ſtrain,
Nor builds the hallow'd monument in vain;
If the ſad marble gives the living pauſe,
And Vice one moment to reflection awes."

Lower ſtill againſt the ſaid wall is affixed a ſmall black marble, edged or bordered with white marble, on which appears the following epitaph:

"Hic jacet vir verè pius & reverendus Johannes Brown, academiæ Oxonienſis quondam procurator [4], eccleſiarum
Southwellenſis & Dunelmenſis præbendarius, & hujus paſtor vigilantiſſimus;
qui obiit 24° Febr. anno Dom. 1622.
Quod dudum in cœlis ſcriptum eſt, quia marmore nomen
Sculpimus? hoc vivis ponimus, eſſe pii;
Exemplo ut diſcant ſic lucem prætulit ille,
Vita fax ardens, & tuba voce fuit.
Non procul abhinc, extra ſacrarium, jacet piiſſima mulier Maria, ejuſdem quondam uxor, quæ obiit 26° Octobris, anno Domini 1600."

On the South wall:

Argent, a chevron Gules, between three leopards faces Azure; on a chief, per feſs Argent and Gules; in the upper part a greyhound courant Sable, Bickham; impaling, Gules, a chevron Ermine between three men's heads in profile, and couped at the neck Argent. Creſt, an eagle diſplayed Or; fig. 34.

"Underneath lie the remains of James Bickham, D. D. archdeacon of Leiceſter, and rector of Loughborough,
He was born March 22, 1719;
and died December 23, 1785.
Near his lie the remains of Sarah Bickham his wife.
She was born June 15, 1715;
and died May 28, 1781."

On flat ſtones in the chancel:

1. "Thomas Mowſley [5], generoſus, obiit 3° die Januarii, anno regni regis Car. II. 17°, annoque Dom. 1665, æt. ſuæ 48 ann." [6]

2. Arms: Azure, a chevron between three lozenges, Or; fig. 39.

"Here lieth buried the body of James [7] Hide, of Brinkle, in the county of Warwick, gent.
who departed this life upon the . . . day of April 1671, aged 68, who was married to two wives;
the firſt was Catharine Bird, of London;
the ſecond, Sarah Colvile, the daughter of Richard Colvile, of Newton, in the Iſle of Ely, eſq.
by whom he had but one child, whoſe name was Sarah;
and afterwards was married to Henry Young,
of London, gouldſmith;
at whoſe coſt and charge this ſtone was laid here in memory of the deceaſed."

3. "The body of Anna-Maria Heyrick, daughter of 20. " Sacred to the memory of Lydia Speed.

She departed this life December the 9th, 1783,
in the 56th year of her age."

At the Weſt end of the church:

1. " Here lieth the body of John Drury [2],
late citizen of London,
who departed this life in the year of our Lord 1716,
in the 58th year of his age."

2. " Here lieth the body of Elizabeth, the wife of John Davys, of this town, gent.
who departed this life the 1ſt day of January, 1747,
aged 39.
She was a good Chriſtian, a virtuous wife,
a tender parent, and a faithful friend."

3. " Here lie the remains of Hannah Davys, ſecond wife of John Davys, of this place, gent.
who, after a tedious illneſs, which ſhe bore with great Chriſtian patience, departed this life the 13th day of July, 1764,
aged 65 years."

At the bottom of the nave lie buried the two Hicklings, Bartholomew and John, recorded as benefactors to the town; John died July 21, 1671; the date of the other's death is not legible.

Juſt within the entrance, by the North door, a fine ſtone is laid down over the remains of the Rev. Mr. Martin, late maſter of the grammar-ſchool here [3].

" M. S.
Samuelis Martin,
qui per annos quinquaginta, indefeſſo labore, nec minori fœlicitate, publicæ hujus oppidi ſcholæ præfuit, & omnia periti ludimagiſtri munia implevit;
nec aliis interim vitæ officiis minùs gnaviter incubuit; &, ſeu virum ſpectes, juſtum, & propoſiti tenacem;
ſeu ſacerdotem gravem, ſanctum, pium, ſeu maritum, patrem, amicum Chriſtianis omnibus ſociiſque virtutibus conſpicuum, & ſpartam ſuam ubique ornantem reperies.
Obiit 29 Martii, anno Salutis 1748, ætat. 74."

The lower part of this ſtone, containing the remainder of this inſcription, relative to Mrs. Martin, wife of the above Mr. Martin, is by accident ſhattered, and ſeveral of the words defaced.

The church-yard, or cemetery, though nearly two acres and two roods of ground, ſeems not over-and-above ſufficient for the decent reception of the dead. On the South ſide they are very much crowded; and though ſixty years ago there was not the mark of a grave to be ſeen, but of a felo de ſe, or excommunicated perſon, on the North ſide, yet now this ſide is nearly covered over with them, an argument of the late increaſed population of the inhabitants; though it is plain, from the bones found in ſome graves lately made, that this plot of ground hath been dug over heretofore; and, from a conſiderable number of pieces of decayed ſculls and fragments of bones ſome years ago turned up in making one ſingle grave, in a line betwixt the North door and the oppoſite boundary wall, it is not improbable but that many of the bodies of thoſe who died of the aforementioned plague in this town were buried there. Beſides, a certain bye-lane, to this day called The Dead-lane, always reported to have been the road uſed, during that terrible time, for carrying the dead from the more interior parts of the town to the place of their burial, ſeems to bend its direction to the Weſt gates of the churchyard.

The grave-ſtones ſhew that the Swithland ſlate is near; for perhaps in no churchyard whatever is ſo large a collection of thoſe ſlate-ſtones; and the inſcriptions on many of them are excellently well cut.

On a large altar-tomb:

" Here lies the body of John Cradock, late of Richmond, in the county of York, brother to William Cradock, attorney at law,
of this pariſh,
who departed this life Feb. 1, 1777, aged 53."

On one ſide of this tomb:

" Thomas, fourth ſon of William and Elizabeth Cradock."

On an upright ſlate-ſtone near the North-weſt corner of the church:

" Here lie in the ſame graves the bodies of Thomas Bombroffe, aged 46; William Peck, aged 20;
William Smith, aged 18; all of this pariſh;
who were unfortunately drowned together, in the river Soare, on the 9th day of July, 1767.
It is preſumed that Bombroffe loſt his life by endeavouring to ſave his two companions, for he only was found in his cloaths.
Some of the principal inhabitants of this pariſh, tenderly concerned for the ſudden fate of theſe their fellow Chriſtians, and for a perpetual warning to all others, cauſed this ſtone to be erected by voluntary ſubſcription.
Reader, be thou conſtantly prepared for death;
to which thou art expoſed every hour,
by accident, by careleſſneſs, by humanity."

KNIGHT-THORPE, otherwiſe BOTHE-THORPE.

In a charter of Edward III. this place is mentioned under the name of Clauſum de Kett; and in the Monaſticon [1] is called Kitt, Kut, or Knt [2].

The whole lordſhip was ſome time the inheritance of Hugh le Deſpenſer earl of Wincheſter; after whoſe attainder it was granted by king Edward III. July 10, 1336, to Henry lord Beaumont and Alice his wife [3].

In 1340, it was found that Henry de Beaumont earl of Boghan, deceaſed, held the hamlet of Knight-thorpe, as a member of Loughborough [4].
